U. S. Congress.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

VOLUME XXVIII.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1896.

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

J11
.R5
2d set

SURPLUS - 1
LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
DUPLICATE

VOLUME XXVIII, PART III.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD;

FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

selves, I appeal to gentlemen—not from any partisan point of view, but as representatives of the whole people of the country—people whose business is to-day demoralized or almost destroyed, who are meeting demands upon them with the greatest difficulty—I appeal to gentlemen not to take any action here which will set this House in the direction of increasing the salaries of officials, the salary in the present case being provided for in the bill at the amount which has been received for at least two years, and in the case of salaries soon to be reached for at least ten or fifteen years. Let us stand for the present, so far as salaries are concerned, where we have stood during at least the past few years. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised to hear the appeal of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. It is the first time in my experience with him here during all these years that I have heard him appeal to the House to appropriate a less sum for the salary of a public officer than the law provides for.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will show the gentleman two hundred cases where we have been reporting during the last few years lower salaries than the amounts fixed by law.

Mr. CRISP. It would be entirely as just to appropriate $4,000 to pay the salary of the gentleman from Maine, and to say in the bill that he should accept this sum in full compensation for his services as a member of the House.

The law with reference to the officers now under consideration provides—

> There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a sufficient number of Indian inspectors, not exceeding five in number, to perform the duties required of such inspectors by the provisions of this title. Each inspector shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President. Each inspector shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 and his necessary traveling expenses.

Mr. DINGLEY. May I ask my friend when that law was passed?

Mr. CRISP. In 1873 and 1875. These inspectors were nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They took the oath of office and entered upon their duties for a term of four years at a salary of $3,000. And now, because for two years a less sum has been appropriated than the amount fixed by law, we are told that we must continue to practice wrong. Why, Mr. Chairman, but for the provision which is put in this bill that an officer must take what is appropriated in full compensation as salary for his services, every one of these officers might refuse to accept the sum appropriated, might go before the Court of Claims and recover judgment for the full legal amount of his salary. But the House seeks to foreclose the officer from doing that by taking advantage of his necessities and saying to him, "You must accept this sum in full compensation, although the law says that you are entitled to a greater sum." I say, sir, that it is an unfair way to treat a public officer.

Mr. DINGLEY. You did not think so in the last Congress.

Mr. CRISP. I did think so. My attention was not called to it. Besides that, you have no evidence that the salary is too high. On the contrary, the chairman of the committee in charge of this very matter—the Committee on Indian Affairs—says it is not. You are left not to the judgment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but, according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine, to the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, who have no more to do with this bill than any of the other members of the House. The bill is reported by the Indian Committee. It is their duty to look into all of these matters, to make their report to the House after an investigation, and they report that $3,000 is reasonable compensation—the compensation fixed by the statute—and it seems to me that the House will be safe if it follows the judgment of the committee in charge of this particular thing which we are considering; and their judgment gives to these gentlemen performing this duty exactly what the law states they shall receive for their services.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I must confess my surprise at the attitude of the gentleman from Georgia who has just taken his seat. I heard him state the other day, when we were considering the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia, that he did not believe one-half of the new members of this House knew or understood the question or the amendments that we were voting on when we voted on that bill. I now find him confessing that for ten years past he has been voting for appropriation bills in which the salaries of different officers of the Government had been decreased below the statutory amount, and that this is the very first time that he has ever discovered that fact or had his attention called to it.

Mr. CRISP. I said that my attention was called to it in this particular case, and that I would not vote or vindicate a vote to reduce a salary fixed by law when the service had been rendered.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am surprised at the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois on this question. I am not surprised at some gentlemen on that side of the House (the Democratic side) who insist that these salaries should be raised, but I am surprised at the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. To say that we should come here and make a record, and go to the country on it, of increasing nearly two hundred salaries of officials of the different Departments of the Government who have been content with the salaries which they have been receiving under the appropriation bills for twenty years, would be to put us on rather a bad footing before the country, and would not be, in my judgment, a good record for this Congress. I know the gentlemen who have been filling these positions for the last year or two as Indian inspectors have not resigned, although the salary was reduced to $2,500 a year, instead of $3,000, which the statute originally fixed, and that they have accepted the reduction with good grace and performed the duties without complaint.

This bill, by the amendment at the beginning of it, introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], provides that the amounts herein provided shall be in full of all salaries for the service rendered, and afterwards, if by this pending amendment we reduced the salary fixed in the bill from $3,000 to $2,500, it makes full compensation for the service, and there is no room for going into court.

As to the law on this subject, it has been repeatedly decided that that is all they can receive under a bill which contains that provision.

Mr. KEM. You have said that these inspectors did not resign?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. KEM. If your salary were reduced to $4,000 do you think you would resign?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I certainly would not. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEM. That is what I think.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, I do not think the gentleman would resign if his were reduced to $2,500. [Laughter.] But I am simply saying to this side of the House—and they say this is no partisan question, but I do not desire to make a statement that is not exactly true, and I will admit that it is not wholly unpartisan in its character—that I do not want this side of the House to go to the country with a record of raising 200 salaries under the present condition of public affairs; for if the salary in this case is raised, when the legislative bill comes before the House for consideration it will become a precedent to raise all of the salaries there to the amount fixed by statute as far back as twenty-five years ago.

Mr. OWENS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. OWENS. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that if one of these inspectors had refused to receive the compensation of $2,500 fixed in the last appropriation bill he could have gone into the Court of Claims and recovered the salary fixed by the statute?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think not. Under the provisions of this bill, by the amendment adopted at the beginning, it provides that this shall be in full of all compensation.

Mr. OWENS. But suppose that he did not accept any part of the compensation, and stood on his rights under the statute, could he not recover in the Court of Claims?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is a question I understand the courts have not been called upon to determine.

Mr. OWENS. My understanding is that they have, and that an officer who declines to receive any part of the appropriation could sue for the whole of the statutory salary.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know of any such case. Do you know of any officer, let me ask in return, whose salary has been reduced for nearly twenty years who ever refused to take the salary and went into court on the assumption that the gentleman makes?

Mr. OWENS. My acquaintance with officeholders is so limited that I could not answer that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Possibly some other gentleman can tell us. I do not believe there is one who ever refused to accept the salary fixed in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised at the partisan speech made by my colleague from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. I think the line of argument he indulged in is unworthy of his head and his heart.

This question that is now before this committee does not involve 200 officeholders or any such number. The Committee on Indian Affairs has brought in a bill allowing five inspectors of Indian affairs salaries of $3,000 each as provided by law. The motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is to reduce those salaries $500 apiece. Now, I want to ask my Republican colleagues what argument has been advanced by the gentleman from Maine why the motion of the gentleman from Missouri should prevail? Has he shown that these men do not earn the $3,000 provided by law? Has he shown that the men who are filling these offices are not competent to discharge their duties? Not at all.

We have the word of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has said that the salaries should be restored in the appropriation bill to the amount provided by law. What is the argument that is presented here by these gentlemen who seek to have this motion prevail? Not that there is any merit in it, but they hold up the bugbear that in a bill that is soon to come before this House there are nearly 200 officeholders whose salaries were reduced some twenty years ago. I want to appeal to the members of this House if that is an argument that should be addressed to honest, intelligent men, who propose to discharge their duty and to do justice to Government employees. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say a word further in answer to the gentleman from Maine. He knows as well as I know that there is no comparison between the question now before this committee and the one that will come before it when the other appropriation bill is considered.

Away back in the Forty-fourth Congress, twenty years ago, by a consensus of opinion, not only of the members of the House and the Senate, but the men who were holding the offices, the salaries of these various places were reduced. Men have come and gone since then, and the men who hold these offices that are appropriated for in the bill that is suggested by the gentleman from Maine knew when they accepted the offices that the salaries had been reduced more than twenty years ago, and they accepted those offices with the full knowledge that they were only to get the amount that was appropriated for in the bill that had preceded their appointment.

That is not the condition that exists here. When these Indian inspectors were appointed by the President of the United States they were advised that under the law they were to receive a salary of $3,000 apiece; and I say, as I said before, that while this House has the brute force to reduce that salary, there is no more right, there is no more justice in it, than there is for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to attempt to reduce the salaries of the members of this House.

A MEMBER. Or of the President.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, as I said, if any of the men who opposed this committee had advanced any reason for this there might be some excuse for agreeing with them, but they do not do it, and I trust that the Republican members of this House will rise above partisan considerations and do justice to these men, and pay them the amount of salary fixed by the law and the amount that the Committee on Indian Affairs propose to give them. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois yielded the floor, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is recognized.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the original law that has been discussed here. It is in 17 Statutes at Large, chapter 138, and it reads as follows:

An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses—

And so forth. It is the Indian appropriation bill for that year, and in that bill it provides that there shall be inspectors, and it fixes the salary. It is nothing but an appropriation act.

Mr. SAYERS. It originated in an appropriation act?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, will the gentleman be kind enough to read the exact provision?

Mr. LACEY. That was in 1873, and when they came to compile the statutes they simply took the appropriation bill and put it into the statutes, and this sacred thing that we are told we dare not look at now because it is existing law is after all nothing but an old appropriation bill passed by a preceding Congress. So, Mr. Chairman, in 1875 the appropriation bill came up again, and the number of these inspectors was reduced to three, with the salary left the same.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What was the salary?

Mr. LACEY. Three thousand dollars, but it is in an appropriation bill. That is all there is to it. We have the same power here that that Congress had to provide appropriations and also to provide the number of officers to fill those places.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. What was paid the predecessors of these men who now hold these positions?

Mr. LACEY. Three thousand dollars, up to two years ago.

Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee. What was paid to the predecessors of the present officers?

Mr. LACEY. Three thousand dollars. But we must recollect that railroads have gone into that country; that the Indians, instead of being in the far West, are among civilized people. They are where the expenses have been reduced and where the dangers of performing the duties of an Indian inspector have been very greatly diminished. The situation is different, and Congress has simply trimmed down the salary to adapt it to the existing condition of things, and we are only doing in this appropriation precisely what was done in 1873, when the inspectors themselves were first provided for.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the committee just a moment and then I shall ask for a vote. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], in referring to the appropriation bill, overlooks the fact that while this provision was originally enacted in an appropriation bill it created an office of inspector which did not before exist.

Mr. LACEY. It afterwards reduced the number to three, and now it is proposed to increase them to five.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not make any difference. The office was created by a law, and after the act is passed creating the office it then becomes the statute law of the land. Now, Mr. Chairman, while I have very great respect for and confidence in my valued friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], whom I do not see before me now, the mover of the resolution, and great respect for and admiration of the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I likewise have respect for and confidence in the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this Congress. And I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee, in all their action all the way through this and other bills, has not been guided in any instance by partisanship in the slightest degree. They have not asked in the consideration of any question whether it affected a Democrat or a Republican. They simply have looked to the question of what was for the public good, and what they believed was for the good of the Government they have done. [Loud applause.] And even my valued friend from Oklahoma, who has suddenly disappeared——

Mr. FLYNN. I am here.

Mr. SHERMAN (continuing). Voted with the rest of the committee for this appropriation. It was a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs that the salaries of these inspectors should be restored to $3,000, where the original statute said they should be.

Now, my valued friend from Maine has appealed to the gentlemen of this House to vote for this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I shall appeal to the gentlemen of the House to sustain the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have investigated this matter thoroughly [applause], to stand by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who understands what these gentlemen do; who knows the duties they perform; who knows the dangers they have to encounter and the hardships they have to endure in the discharge of the duties of their office. My valued friend from Maine says if there was nothing more than the question of $500 it would not be of so much importance.

Why, sir, there is more than a question of the $500 paid to these inspectors. There is the question of whether we shall do what is right; and to this time this House, Mr. Chairman, in this Congress has not failed to do what it believed was right. This Congress, in the discharge of what is supposed to be its duty, and in compliance with the suggestion made by a President with whom we do not agree politically, stayed here during the entire Christmas holidays, depriving ourselves of the pleasure of being at home with our families at that the greatest of all holidays, for the purpose of doing what we thought was for the best interest of the country. And so we have acted all through this Congress, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I ask this House not to attempt to right one wrong with two wrongs; not to attempt to right one wrong with four hundred wrongs; but where they find the law fixing the salaries of officers who discharge their duties in a satisfactory manner to the Government, as has been the case in this instance, to vote down such an amendment, to stand by the committee that has investigated the affair, and to stand by the Commissioner who recommends this appropriation to the committee. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman. [Loud applause, and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by several members) there were—ayes 59, noes 87.

Mr. CANNON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman. [Cries of "Too late!"] If I can get enough to stand up we will have tellers to count.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If the committee should rise without any further amendment being offered to this section or this paragraph, when the committee sits again an amendment would be in order I take it?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. There is an amendment now pending to strike out the section, offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6249, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JAIL AT ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be passed; and I also ask that the letter accompanying it be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be reported to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the Attorney-General is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building to be used as a United States jail at Atlanta, Ga., for the confinement of prisoners awaiting trial and those sentenced to confinement in a jail.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the letter of the Attorney-General relating to this subject read.

The letter was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1896.

SIR: I have looked into the matter of accommodations for United States prisoners in the northern district of Georgia, about which I talked with you and Judge CRISP this morning, and write to say that in my judgment a suitable building in Atlanta should be rented to be used in confining Federal prisoners awaiting trial and under jail sentence in that district. Owing to the crowded and unsuitable condition of the jail now used in Atlanta and the fact that it is extremely inconvenient and expensive to use jails at other points, even if the use of proper ones could be secured, the action I suggest seems to be imperatively required. The judge and the marshal both recommend such action. I call your attention to it in order that the necessary authority may be obtained from Congress.

Respectfully,

JUDSON HARMON,
Attorney-General.

Hon. L. F. LIVINGSTON,
House of Representatives.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, has this matter been reported by a committee?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DINGLEY. I think it ought to be referred, unless it has been already considered by a committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not think the gentleman will insist on that when he hears the reasons. The city of Atlanta has outgrown the jail. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is not surprising.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The accommodations of the jail are not sufficient to take care of the prisoners. There are 100 to 175 prisoners there, and they have been huddled together in a little wooden annex, until recently four of them have died of measles and pneumonia, which has created quite a commotion. It is not possible to put these prisoners in the small county jails in the neighboring country, because those jails are not built securely and they have no appliances for heating or ventilation. It will be seen, therefore, that prompt action on this resolution is very desirable. It carries no appropriation, and it will not involve any appropriation in the future.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it will involve some expense.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why not?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is an amount——

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PEARSON. How did this matter come up? Has unanimous consent been given?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has not yet been given.

Mr. PEARSON. Is an objection in order?

The SPEAKER. Objection is in order.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I hope the gentleman will let me make my statement.

Mr. PEARSON. Certainly; but I desire to say that I shall object to the consideration of this resolution without its being referred to a committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If you send the resolution to a committee it will come back here and take its place on the Calendar, and before it can be considered these prisoners, many of them, will probably be dead of measles or pneumonia, or they will have to be shipped in the meantime to other localities at great expense, for the expense of transporting each prisoner is 10 cents a mile. There is an appropriation now for caring for prisoners, and out of that fund we are paying $22,000 a year to the Atlanta jail to take care of these prisoners, and I am assured by the judge and the marshal that if you allow the Department to rent a prison they can take care of them at a much less rate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Have they got ready-made prisons down there to rent? [Laughter.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have some buildings there that can be rented for this purpose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Fit for a prison?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes, sir; a brick building that can be rented at a reasonable price and used for a prison. Now, when I assure the gentleman that there is not a dollar of expense to be incurred, but that there will be really a saving to the Government and a saving of the lives of these poor prisoners, many of whom have not yet been found guilty of any crime, but have only been arrested and held for trial, I am sure he will agree with me that it is not fair or just to keep them in their present quarters under the circumstances.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to cut off the gentleman from Georgia, but this is a very important matter. It may be known to members of the House that this very question of the location of a new prison or penitentiary for those people is now under consideration, and this is an entering wedge to locate it at a particular spot, and, in the exercise of my right, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that the letter of the Attorney-General be referred with it.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

C. M. BEACH.

Mr. ODELL, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following report:

Resolved, That the compensation of C. M. Beach, now on the laborers' roll in the department of the Doorkeeper, be increased from $400 per annum to $720 per annum, he, the said Beach, performing in an efficient and satisfactory manner the duties of a folder in that department, and said increased sum being the minimum customary rate for such services; and that said extra compensation be paid by the Clerk out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Before that motion is put, the Chair will present a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 259) granting to the Columbia and Red Mountain Railway Company a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 879) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant to the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIX, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table, and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 146) granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Towne—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 625) granting a pension to Nellie L. Groshon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 178) granting a pension to Betsey J. Webber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 807) granting a pension to Charles Williamson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 638) granting an increase of pension to John Nichols—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 522) for the relief of George Hughes, of Portland, Oreg.—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 144) granting an increase of pension to Theophilus C. Ingalls—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 139) granting an increase of pension to Caroline B. Bradford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 651) granting a pension to Jane L. Buckingham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 760) granting a pension to Rhoda Chick—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 705) granting a pension to Emily B. Muncey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 246) granting a pension to Nancy Carson Blunt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 247) granting a pension to Wallace McGrath—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 719) to restore a pension to Harriet M. Knowlton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 819) granting a pension to Catherine O'Leary—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 826) granting a pension to Caroline Reed—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 350) granting an increase of pension to George C. Abbey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 702) granting a pension to Caroline Stockton Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 724) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Mallery—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 684) granting a pension to Marion McKibben—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 739) granting an increase of pension to C. E. Philbrook, widow of Alvah Philbrook, major of Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 568) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann M. Madden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 646) for the relief of Francis Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HARRIS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HUBBARD, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WILLIS, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. DINGLEY was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Samuel B. Herston, administrator of William C. Herston, deceased, against The United States, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FLYNN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5975) to amend an act approved August 24, 1894, entitled "An act to authorize purchasers of the property and franchises of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to organize a corporation and to confer upon the same all the powers, privileges, and franchises vested in that company," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 450); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 451); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5564) authorizing the Arkansas Northwestern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 452); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2916) to facilitate the collecting of revenue, to provide for the construction and equipment of sampling works for the sampling and assaying of imported silver ores and other ores containing lead, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 453); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 43) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase and distribute seeds, bulbs, etc., as has been done in preceding years, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 454); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 732) to regulate the issue and recording of the commissions of officers in several of the Departments, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 455); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (H. R. 2003) for the relief of Mrs. A. C. Wagner. (Report No. 456.)

By Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5400) to increase the pension of Mary L. Bacon, widow of the late George B. Bacon, late lieutenant-commander of the United States Navy. (Report No. 457.)

By Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5580) granting a pension to Archibald Hunley. (Report No. 458.)

By Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5712) granting increase of pension to John W. Hines. (Report No. 459.)

By Mr. ANDERSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 950) granting increase of pension to John Coombs. (Report No. 460.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 138) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Hazlip. (Report No. 461.)

By Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4275) to increase the pension of Mrs. Annis H. Enochs, widow of Gen. William H. Enochs, from $20 to $50 per month. (Report No. 462.)

By Mr. BAKER of Kansas, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 1022) to increase the pension of Byron Cotton. (Report No. 463.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5996) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell. (Report No. 464.)

By Mr. DOWNING, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 900) to provide for the payment of the claim of William H. Mahoney. (Report No. 465.)

By Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 2687) for the relief of B. J. Van Vleck, administrator of Henry Van Vleck, deceased. (Report No. 466.)

By Mr. HANLY, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 3377) for relief of George C. Ellison. (Report No. 467.)

By Mr. DOWNING, from the Committee on Claims:

The bill (S. 82) for the relief of the heirs of James Bridger, deceased. (Report No. 468.)

The bill (H. R. 608) for the relief of E. R. Shipley. (Report No. 469.)

By Mr. HUTCHESON, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 1280) for the relief of A. B. Pedigo. (Report No. 470.)

By Mr. STRODE of Nebraska, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 446) to place the name of Julia H. H. Crosby, widow of Freeman E. Crosby, late lieutenant, United States Navy, on the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, and her two children each at the rate of $5 per month. (Report No. 471.)

By Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 1062) to grant a pension to Armstead M. Rawlings, of Arkansas. (Report No. 472.)

By Mr. HALTERMAN, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4395) for the relief of Miss Juliette Betts. (Report No. 473.)

By Mr. POOLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4598) granting a pension to Mary Cray. (Report No. 474.)

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted an adverse report (No. 448) on the bill (H. R. 2764) regulating the issuance of licenses for the sale of intoxicants; and the same was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 6348) authorizing towns and cities in the Territory of Oklahoma to purchase certain reserved lands for cemetery and other public purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 6349) to grant right of way over the public domain for pipe lines—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DOCKERY: A bill (H. R. 6350) to amend section 843 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TOWNE: A bill (H. R. 6351) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 6352) to simplify the system of making sales in the Subsistence Department to officers and enlisted men of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 6353) to protect the insignia of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. LACEY: A bill (H. R. 6354) for the relief of settlers on railroad indemnity lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HITT: A bill (H. R. 6355) relating to claims against the United States for indemnity by subjects or citizens of a foreign State—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A joint resolution (H. Res. 125) authorizing the Attorney-General to rent a suitable building for prisoners at Atlanta, Ga.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALLEN of Utah: A memorial of the legislature of the State of Utah, praying that a portion of Arizona lying north of the Colorado River be annexed to the State of Utah—to the Committee on the Territories.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were referred as follows:

The bill (H. R. 5285) to refund certain import duties—Committee on Ways and Means discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 5726) for the relief of Edward Rice—Committee on Ways and Means discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 3222) for the relief of Jos. H. Wimpey, of McDonald County, Mo., authorizing him or his legal representatives to select 160 acres of unoccupied and unappropriated land of the United States (not mineral) and subject to homestead entry, and directing the issue of scrip therefor, in legal subdivisions—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 6208) for the relief of James C. Slaght—Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRODERICK: A bill (H. R. 6356) for the relief of the heirs of James A. Gregory—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6357) granting a pension to Elizabeth C. Schooley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARHAM: A bill (H. R. 6358) granting a pension to Charles W. Emmell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURRELL: A bill (H. R. 6359) to grant pension to George W. Park—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLSON: A bill (H. R. 6360) for the benefit of John J. Frazier, of Somerset, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6361) for the relief of Lemuel L. Stockton, of Savage, Clinton County, Ky.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6362) for the relief of Simeon Wilson, of Wallins Creek, Ky.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6363) granting a pension to Nearvey J. Terrell, of Desda, Clinton County, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6364) for the relief of James M. Hensley, of Leroy, Owsley County, Ky.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6365) for the relief of W. H. Langdon, High Knob, Clay County, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6366) for the relief of L. H. Rosseau, of Somerset, Pulaski County, Ky.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DOVENER: A bill (H. R. 6367) for the relief of D. B. Clark, of Wheeling, W. Va.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS: A bill (H. R. 6368) for the relief of Thomas J. Sheppard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARDY: A bill (H. R. 6369) granting an increase of pension to Leander Woods—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6370) for the relief of Smith Turner—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6371) granting a pension to Frederick L. Killion—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6372) for the relief of Martin Young—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6373) granting a pension to Martha E. Allumbaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 6374) to pension Mary M. Crow, widow of John Crow, who served in the war of 1812 or in 1815—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 6375) granting a pension to Lawrence Wagner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KULP: A bill (H. R. 6376) to reimburse Mrs. Henry W. Shuman, widow of the late Henry W. Shuman, of Pennsylvania—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEWIS: A bill (H. R. 6377) granting an increase of pension to Anna E. Pennebaker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 6378) for the relief of Eliza J. Holman—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PUGH: A bill (H. R. 6379) for the relief of Frank Mott—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RAY: A bill (H. R. 6380) removing the charge of desertion standing against Almon Springsteen, late Company F, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6381) granting a pension to Florence E. Bond, widow of John G. Bond, late first lieutenant United States Revenue Marine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REYBURN: A bill (H. R. 6382) for the relief of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 6383) for the relief of Mary C. Daigre, East Baton Rouge, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6384) for the relief of Mary C. Daigre, of East Baton Rouge, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SAUERHERING: A bill (H. R. 6385) to remove the charge of desertion against Carl F. W. Stolle, of Iron Ridge, Wis.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 6386) for the relief of the heirs at law of Edward N. Oldmixon—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6387) for the relief of John Dunn—to the Committee on Claims

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 6388) granting a pension to Fanny A. Crapo—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TRELOAR: A bill (H. R. 6389) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph Doms—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 6390) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Peter C. Lawyer, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 6391) to restore to the pension roll Levi Goens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6392) to increase the pension of John W. Stark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOMER: A bill (H. R. 6393) for the relief of Jonas Miller—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FARIS: A bill (H. R. 6394) to pension Sarah F. McCune—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE: A bill (H. R. 6395) for the relief of the legal representative of William Brandis, deceased, late captain Company D, One hundred and thirty-first New York Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Petition of Dr. George M. Ramsey and other citizens of Washington County, Pa., praying for an amendment to the postal laws so as to secure free mail delivery to all citizens, or to reduce postage rates to one-half to those to whom free delivery is not extended—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Theophilus Jones and 86 other citizens of Washington County, Pa.; also, petition of 106 citizens of Allenport, Pa., praying for free navigation of the Monongahela River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire: Memorial of the president and professors of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, stating reasons why the bill to organize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy, to provide a naval engineering reserve for time of war, and for other purposes should be enacted into law—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, memorial of Beelel Union of ex-Prisoners of War, in favor of House bill No. 306, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors confined in so-called Confederate prisons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia: Papers relating to the claim of Malinda L. Maddox, of Butts County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BURRELL: Petition of Archibald Hunley, of Clay City, Ill., asking for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOK of Wisconsin: Petition containing the names of 225 wholesale merchants and dealers in dairy products in the cities of Atlanta, Athens, Columbus, and Macon, Ga.; Richmond and Norfolk, Va.; Chattanooga, Memphis, and Knoxville, Tenn.; Charleston, S. C.; New Orleans, La.; San Antonio, Tex.; and Louisville, Ky., favoring the enactment of a law regulating and controlling the manufacture and sale of filled cheese—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina: Petition of Leroy Springs and others, of Lancaster, S. C.; also, petition of Hon. John McLaughten and others, of Orangeburg, S. C.; also, petition of Hon. Marion Moise and others, of Sumter, S. C.; also, petition of C. M. Hurst and others, of Sumter County, S. C.; also, petition of J. S. Buck and others, of Horry County, S. C., in behalf of placing the Winyah Bay bar improvement under the continuous-contract system—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of citizens of Louisville, Tenn., in favor of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GRAFF: Petition of veterans of the late war of the rebellion residing in Fulton County, Ill., asking the passage of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of 501 ex-Union soldiers of the Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of a service-pension bill, graded on the amount of service—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAGER: Petition of William R. Whitinall and 19 other citizens of Hastings, Iowa, in favor of House bill No. 3960—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARMER: Memorial of the Universal Peace Union against the appropriation of money for coast defenses, the increase of the Army and Navy, and the organization of militia of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut (by request): Petition of L. J. Korper and others, of South Willington, Conn., in behalf of House bill No. 2626, for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of citizens of Findley Lake, N. Y., against the sale of beer to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of citizens of Findley Lake, against the sale of beer and spirituous liquors at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HULING: Petition of citizens of Charleston, W. Va., protesting against the passage of a bill putting a duty on teas—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JONES: Papers relating to the claim of Annie M. Smith, of Accomac County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KULP: Petition of J. C. Foulk and 23 others, of Milton, Pa., in support of House bill No. 2626, for the protection of agricultural staples and American ships in foreign trade—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LACEY: Petition of S. R. Mills and 36 others; also petition of A. T. Foster and 26 others, all of Oklahoma, asking for the passage of the free-home bill—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MAHON: Petition of citizens of Fulton County, Pa., for the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. McCALL of Tennessee: Petition of various churches of Jackson and Paris, Tenn., for the relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MILLER of West Virginia: Petition of Bailey Post, No. 4, Grand Army of the Republic, of Huntington, W. Va., in favor of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORSE: Petition of Rev. James D. Lytle, on behalf of 150 members of the United Presbyterian Church, Hanover, Ind.; also petition of Rev. W. H. Hoag and 23 other citizens of Patten Mill, Washington County, N. Y., praying for the recognition of God in the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions adopted at a large public meeting held in the Unitarian church, East Bridgewater, Mass., urging the Government to put a speedy end to the atrocities being perpetrated on the Armenians—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MURPHY of Arizona (by request): Petition of C. P. Huntington, for the improvement of the harbor at Port Los Angeles, Santa Monica, Cal., with plan recommended by William Hood, engineer—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. NEILL: Papers relating to the claim of James H. Egner—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Milton Sanders—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Amanda Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OTEY: Papers relating to the claim of Noah P. Garst, of Roanoke County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PUGH: Papers to accompany House bill No. 6245, to remove the charge of disloyalty against Isaac Conley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY: Petition of officers of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Treadwell, N. Y., against the sale of beer to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of officers of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Treadwell, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REYBURN: Petition of citizens of Philadelphia, in favor of a law restricting immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SETTLE: Petition of the Religious Society of Friends of North Carolina—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE: Petition of citizens of Allegheny, Pa.; also, petition of citizens of Fayette County, Pa.; also, petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, favoring the passage of the Stone bill, for the restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of citizens of Allegheny County, Pa., for the improvement of the Allegheny River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. STROWD of North Carolina: Papers relating to the claim of James Hodges—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Nancy Peacock—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Arthur Pierce, of Johnson County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Handy Barefoot—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SWANSON: Papers relating to the claim of William Hodges, of Franklin County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of Jonathan M. Neiman and 75 other veterans, for the passage of an act granting a pension of $8 per month to every person who served ninety days in the Army or Navy of the United States during the civil war, and was honorably discharged, and a pension of $12 per month to each widow of such—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of South Carolina: Papers relating to the claim of James L. Roane—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WOOMER: Petition of H. H. Hain and 50 other citizens of Duncannon, Pa., in favor of the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of C. E. Rauch and 15 others, of Lebanon, Pa., together with Mrs. Sue M. Light, president, and 50 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in favor of the passage of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of citizens of Elizabethville, Pa., urging the passage of proposed amendment to the Constitution; also, a protest against the appropriation of funds from the National Treasury for sectarian education among the Indians—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 21, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 1443) making appropriation for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, direct me to report the same back with the recommendation that the House concur in the Senate amendments. These amendments make an increase of only a little over $2,000 in the total amount of the bill as passed by the House. Two items of the Senate amendments make an increase, while in other amendments, of no great importance, there is a cutting down. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No statement accompanying this report has been read. Is there such a statement with the Clerk?

Mr. HULL. This is not a conference report——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I thought it was.

Mr. HULL. It is simply a report of the action of the House Committee on Military Affairs recommending concurrence in the Senate amendments. I have stated verbally that there is an increase upon two items. One of these is for the construction of army service barracks; the other for completing cases, already begun, in the museum. Then there is a decrease in two or three other items, making the net increase by reason of the Senate amendments only a little over $2,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And your committee recommends concurrence in the Senate amendments?

Mr. HULL. The committee unanimously makes that recommendation.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIX, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table, and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russel N. Reynolds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1017) granting a pension to Robert Kiracofe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 997) granting a pension to Ella D. Cross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1505) granting an increase of pension to Rufus H. Paine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 878) granting a pension to Jared S. Chamberlain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1310) granting an increase of pension to Shubael Gould—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1276) granting a pension to John L. Britton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1291) granting an increase of pension to Celeste A. Boughton, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Horace Boughton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1105) granting a pension to Mary E. Sessions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1149) granting a pension to Sophia J. Chilcott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1511) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane Stewart Whiting—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 804) granting a pension to Mrs. Eleanor Carroll Poe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1435) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Kimball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keefe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1631) granting a pension to Emeline Filgate—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1787) granting a pension to Nancy T. Duncklee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1343) granting an increase of pension to Enoch G. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1420) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1495) granting a pension to Hans Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1522) granting a pension to Catherine Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1888) granting an increase of pension to William T. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 893) for the relief of Mrs. Mary B. Hulings—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 996) to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1323) granting a pension to Maria Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sandford—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1621) granting a pension to Josephine I. Offley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1128) granting a pension to Isabella Morrow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1924) granting a pension to Carrie L. Yeaton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Fannie Moale Gibbon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1784) granting an increase of pension to Josephine Foote Fairfax—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1945) granting a pension to Joseph Porter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2014) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Bull—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 823) granting an increase of pension to John B. Meigs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1682) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah B. Leet—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1790) granting a pension to Mrs. Hypolite Huard, of New Orleans, La., widow of Hypolite Huard, deceased—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 916) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Cornelia I. Skiles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 918) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Kate Ezekiel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1342) granting a pension to Lena D. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REMISSION OF FINES, PENALTIES, AND FORFEITURES.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1740) to amend section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to remit or mitigate fines, penalties, and forfeitures, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved December 15, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5294. The Secretary of the Treasury may, upon application therefor, remit or mitigate any fine, penalty, or forfeiture provided for in laws relating to vessels or discontinue any prosecution to recover penalties or relating to forfeitures denounced in such laws, excepting the penalty of imprisonment or of removal from office, upon such terms as he, in his discretion, shall think proper; and all rights granted to informers by such laws shall be held subject to the Secretary's powers of remission, except in cases where the claims of any informer to the share of any penalty shall have been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction prior to the application for the remission of the penalty or forfeiture; and the Secretary shall have authority to ascertain the facts upon all such applications in such manner and under such regulations as he may deem proper."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the only change that this bill makes in the present law is to add after the word "penalty" the words "or forfeiture." The original statute includes in the title the words "fines, penalties, and forfeitures," but by a clerical error the word "forfeiture" was omitted in the body of the act. This amendment has been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in a letter which has been made a part of the report. The bill has been unanimously passed by the Senate.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FINAL PROOF IN TIMBER-CULTURE ENTRIES.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 103) relating to final proof in timber-culture entries.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter timber-culture claimants shall not be required, in making final proof, to appear at the land office to which proof is to be presented or before an officer designated by the act of May 26, 1890, within the county in which the land is situated; but such claimant may have his or her personal evidence taken by a United States court commissioner or a clerk of any court of record under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the report be read.

Mr. LACEY. The report is very brief.

The report (by Mr. BARNEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands has had under consideration the bill (S. 103) entitled "An act relating to final proof in timber-culture entries," and recommend that the same do pass.

The timber-culture law having now been repealed, the law in question has application only to those cases which are now pending and will have no operation as to future public-land entries. It appears that the law as it now exists requires the claimant to appear at the land office, or within the land district within which the land is situated, to have the evidence taken in making his final proof. This often results in great cost and inconvenience to the claimant, as he often resides a long distance from the land. This bill allows this proof to be made before any United States court commissioner, or before the clerk of any court of record, and there seems to be no reason why it should not become a law.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has this bill been submitted to the Commissioner of the Land Office, and has it received his approval?

Mr. GAMBLE. In answer to the interrogatory of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], I will respectfully state that this bill was drawn by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and has received his approval and support. It has been passed in the Senate upon the recommendation of the appropriate committee. Since that time I have conferred with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and it is his desire, as it is also the desire of those who promoted the passage of the bill in the Senate, that the word "hereafter," in line 3 of the bill, be struck out. At the proper time, if there be no objection to the consideration of the bill, I will move that amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the amendment which the gentleman proposes to insert be read.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked for the passage of the Senate bill, amended by striking out in the third line the word "hereafter."

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish to seem captious about these matters, but the other day we had up here a very innocent-looking bill carrying a small appropriation, $40,000. Under an assurance that the bill was exactly similar to one that was entirely satisfactory to the Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. LACEY. You had no such assurance from the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, I only speak of assurances that went into the RECORD. Now, it turns out, as I find upon consultation with the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that it will take half a million dollars to fulfill the requirements of that bill; and so far from being identical with the other bill it increases the expenditures in the manner I have stated. I have therefore thought it proper in this case, as I think it is in all cases involving our public lands, to see that the officer in charge of these questions is consulted before they are acted upon. That seems to have been done in this case. Of course the Commissioner of the Land Office knows more about this matter than I do, and I yield to his judgment.

Mr. LACEY. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, I wish merely to say that when the inquiry was made of me the other day whether the bill then under consideration had been submitted to the Commissioner, I informed the House that it had not. So that the reflection made upon persons representing the committee in charge of that bill is simply a mistake on the part of my friend from Tennessee, who is usually so fair.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa is in error in supposing that I stated that the committee had done anything of the kind. I did not so state, did not intend to make such a statement, and I do not wish to be so understood.

Mr. GAMBLE. Further, Mr. Speaker, I will say in reply that I have the concurrence of the Committee on Public Lands to move this amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now ask that the bill be read as it has been amended.

The bill was read at length, the third reading being in full, and was passed.

On motion of Mr. GAMBLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIEUT. G. L. JOHNSON.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1499) to correct the muster of Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the record of Second Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson, late of the One hundred and forty-second Regiment of New York Infantry, so as to make his muster as said lieutenant date from the date of his enlistment in said regiment, and that he have all rights and emoluments due him thereby or by reason thereof.

Mr. TALBERT. Has this bill been considered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask what committee this comes from?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask the reading of the report, reserving the right to object.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, at the request of my friend from Iowa, I will make a statement, which can be made in somewhat less time than it will take to read the report, which is quite full, and which will, I think, be equally satisfactory to the House. This officer's services were rendered in organizations under my command.

This young man volunteered in April, 1861, and was mustered into the service on the 15th day of May, 1861, as a member of Company G, Sixteenth New York Volunteer Infantry, which company I commanded as captain. After the expiration of the term of service of the Sixteenth Regiment, or some days after the completion of its term of service—for the regiment remained and engaged in battle after its discharge was due—he was commissioned by the governor of New York, on my recommendation, a second lieutenant in the One hundred and forty-second Regiment of New York, then under my command. He came to Morris Island, South Carolina, where the regiment was stationed, and found that there were not sufficient men in the company to which he was to be assigned to allow of his being mustered as second lieutenant. The alternative was left to him to return home or engage in some other employment.

This young man, with a commission in his pocket, and not required to render any military service whatever, enlisted in the regiment and was assigned to a company; afterwards he was promoted to be sergeant and subsequently to be sergeant-major of the regiment. We were short of officers at the time and he performed duty, and efficient duty, as an officer. He commanded a detachment on Johns Island in an engagement in which he lost his right arm. He could not then do duty as an enlisted man nor be mustered as a second lieutenant, although he had held the commission for six months. Therefore, in view of these facts and his gallant record in both regiments in which he served, I asked the governor to commission him a first lieutenant. The commission was issued in due time, but was on board of a vessel at Fortress Monroe which was run into and sunk for something like six weeks under water. When the commission finally reached him he was mustered as a first lieutenant, from which time he served with that rank, and part of the time on my staff, and was honorably discharged from the Army with his regiment.

The officer was a brave man. He rendered efficient services and is entitled to the consideration provided in this bill.

This bill was passed by the House in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, and in the Fifty-third it also passed the Senate, but too late to reach the President for his approval.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the object of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. To authorize his muster as second lieutenant at the date of his reporting to the regiment with his commission, when he enlisted as a private soldier. It gives him the advantage of rank as second lieutenant from the date of his reporting until his promotion to first lieutenant.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will ask the gentleman, is not the time covered only about eight or nine months?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I think about that time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And he would be entitled to the difference between the compensation of a sergeant-major and a second lieutenant for about eight or nine months—a difference of about $23 a month?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Yes; about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the claim is meritorious. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

And then, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, with Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, strike out, in lines 11 and 12, the following words:
"For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $3,000 per annum each, $15,000."

Mr. GROW. I move to amend the part proposed to be stricken out by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "two."

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that we have already had an amendment to the amendment and have voted it down, and now the vote should be taken on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the gentleman from New York——

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, am I entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] to consent to pass over this paragraph until some information which has been sent for, relating to the expense account of these Indian inspectors, has been received.

Mr. CRISP. I desire at the proper time to make a point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object to passing over the amendment, but as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] makes a point of order, let us dispose of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 11, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, the point of order which I wish to make is this: I ask the Clerk to read the amendment added to the first section of the bill, which it is necessary to consider in determining the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 1, after the word "Department," insert the words "in full compensation for the service."

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] on the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] will please yield for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Georgia to state his point of order.

Mr. CRISP. The point of order which I desire to raise is that while it is perfectly competent for the House to appropriate a less amount for one of its officers than the salary fixed by law, yet it is not competent for the House on an appropriation bill to say that such amount shall be accepted in full compensation for services, because to do that would change existing law. I hope the Chair gets the point that I seek to make. In the absence of any provision that the sum appropriated shall be accepted in full compensation for services, it is perfectly competent to appropriate a less amount than the salary fixed by law, but where the bill provides that the amount appropriated shall be accepted in full compensation for services, it is a change of existing law. Now, it is conceded that the salary fixed by law for the five Indian inspectors is $3,000 a year. That was fixed originally in an appropriation bill which created the offices. Afterwards it was carried into the Revised Statutes, and is now sections 2044 and 2045. The Supreme Court has decided, in a case which I have before me, that of Langston against the United States, that it is perfectly competent for an officer of the United States to accept a part of the salary which is appropriated, and yet sue in the Court of Claims to recover the amount not appropriated for, unless the bill appropriating the money changes the existing law so as to prevent such suit.

Mr. CANNON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the precise amendment that he refers to, in substance this amendment, was made on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], in the first seven lines of the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Precisely; and that is the reason why the proposed amendment is out of order. If that amendment had not been put in the bill, it would be competent to appropriate a less amount than the salary fixed by law, but where your bill says the amount appropriated shall be accepted in full compensation, notwithstanding the law says the officer is entitled to a larger salary, it is obnoxious to the point of order in that it changes existing law. That is the very point.

If that were not in this bill, clearly this point of order would not lie; but where the bill says the amount appropriated in it shall be in full satisfaction of the salary of an officer, although the law says the officer is entitled to the larger salary, my friend can not contend that that does not change existing law; and if it does change existing law, then it is not competent to put it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that it has been the uniform rule now for years, on an appropriation bill, in cases of that kind, that when we passed that appropriation for the current year it is construed as existing law, so far as the point of order is concerned.

Mr. CRISP. Well, but, Mr. Chairman, the Supreme Court, the highest authority on that question, has decided otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of the great many gentlemen, appointed by the gentleman himself, who made these decisions in Committee of the Whole; and they have been made that way with substantial uniformity for twenty years.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Illinois is very familiar with the practice as to appropriation bills; and I will venture the assertion that the gentleman will find no case where a salary is fixed by law that it has been held that an appropriation of a less amount in the appropriation bill changes that existing law, unless the bill itself specifically changed the law and fixed the salary at another, or a lower, different rate. Now, the whole doctrine is disposed of in the case of Langston, and it is in these words:

While the case is not free from difficulty, the court is of opinion that according to the settled rules of interpretation a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum, without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by a subsequent enactment which merely appropriated a less amount for the service of that officer for particular fiscal years and which contained no words that expressly, or by clear implication, modified or repealed the previous law.

That is the decision of the Supreme Court. Now, I hope my point is clear. If there were no provision in this bill requiring these officers to accept this salary in full satisfaction it would be perfectly competent to appropriate a less sum than the salary, after which the officers could go into the Court of Claims and sue for the difference, as the Supreme Court decided in the Langston case; but where you incorporate a provision which requires the officer to accept it in full compensation you so change the law as to take away from him the right to go into the courts and sue for the difference, and inasmuch as you change the law, it is not competent upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Is the salary fixed on this incumbent by the appropriation bill or is it fixed by law?

Mr. CRISP. It was fixed originally in an appropriation bill when the office was created, and then it was transferred to the Revised Statutes and exists like any other of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BRUMM. Then a statute law now fixes the salary?

Mr. CRISP. It does now, undoubtedly.

Mr. BRUMM. If the gentleman is through, then, I just want one word. I want to say that if it is a statute you can not repeal it during the incumbency of that officer by statute. You can not in any way reduce the salary of the office while the incumbent is in it, even by act of Congress, much less on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRISP. His tenure is four years under the law.

Mr. LACEY. We have passed the question on the point of order when we passed on the amendment. The existing law is $2,500 a year. That is the existing law, enacted in 1895. It was existing law for this reason: Under the rules of the last House you could change existing law in an appropriation bill, provided you reduced the number of officers or reduced expenses. So when the appropriation bill of 1895 came in, it reduced the expenses and changed the salary of these men from $3,000 to $2,500. Now, this bill increases the amount to $3,000.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman please read the language of the bill of 1895?

Mr. LACEY. I have read the law. The language is this: It provides an appropriation for so many inspectors at $2,500 a year. Now, the existing law before that was $3,000 a year, but it was cut down to $2,500, and that was done under the rules of the Fifty-third Congress. The rules of this Congress are different. You can neither reduce nor increase, The committee proposes an increase. No point of order was made against that, and consequently the whole question comes up on the amendment that is now before the committee, and if it goes before the committee without the point of order having been made upon it, this House or committee has jurisdiction over it and can fix it at any higher or lower sum than $3,000, because we have passed beyond that question.

It will not do to say that, no point of order being made upon that, leaves before the House the one abstract proposition that this salary shall be $3,000 and no less, and that we can not make it $3,600, or $2,500, or any other sum. The whole question is now in the control of the committee, because no point of order was made, and the proposition of the Committee on Indian Affairs is to increase the compensation of these inspectors from $2,500 to $3,000.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair and the attention of my friend from Iowa to the fact that the act to which he refers, so far as I have been able to ascertain, contains no provision that this salary shall be accepted in full compensation for the services of these officers. In the absence of such provision they can sue in the Court of Claims and recover the $500 difference in each of their salaries.

I do not think my friend from Iowa has caught my point, and I fear that I have been unfortunate in making myself understood. My point is this: Wherever you appropriate for a salary and you appropriate a less amount than the salary as fixed by law the incumbent of the office may sue the Government in the Court of Claims and recover the difference, as was decided in the Langston case, unless the very act which appropriated the less amount stated in terms or by implication that the amount so appropriated was to be accepted in full compensation. Now, as far as I can ascertain by a very hasty examination of the last act, it did not even provide that the $2,500 appropriated was to be accepted in full compensation, but even if it had it would have been simply an appropriation, as stated in the first section of the bill, that "the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1896." It does not even propose to change the salaries as fixed by existing law. These salaries are fixed in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. LACEY. "The existing law" to which the gentleman refers is only the Indian appropriation bill of 1873.

Mr. CRISP. It is the Revised Statutes of the United States, section 2044.

Mr. LACEY. Well, the code commissioners simply took the appropriation act of 1873 and printed it in that book, but that does not increase its validity.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman does not seem to realize that these Revised Statutes are law, adopted and made law by an act of Congress.

Mr. DALZELL. Accepted as a whole by an act of Congress.

Mr. CRISP. These officials are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, their salaries are fixed by law, and they have a fixed tenure of office. The pending bill provides that whatever is appropriated for their salaries shall be accepted by them in full compensation for their services, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] proposes to say that $2,000 shall be accepted by them in full compensation for their services, and I make the point of order that to do that would be to change existing law.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROW. I was taken off the floor on my amendment in order to hear the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia. My point is that the gentleman can not discuss my amendment on the merits before I discuss it myself.

Mr. CRISP. I was merely showing that the gentleman's amendment reduced the salary, that this bill says that these officers must accept the amount here appropriated in full compensation, and therefore that the amendment changes existing law. That is the point.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, when a standing committee of this House——

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise another point of order. Has this matter been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been disposed of. The Chair is about to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the gentleman was being heard on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. GROW. When a standing committee of the House reports in a bill a provision as to which each member of the House can judge just as well as the committee, the committee certainly can not claim that it is a discourtesy to them for the House to vote against them on such a question. When a committee is charged with any matter requiring investigation, I make it a general rule to follow the committee in their recommendations. But every member of the House knows whether salaries ought to be increased or not just as well as the committee. Hence it is not a discourtesy to the committee in such cases should their recommendation for increase be rejected. All salaries are paid under law, and it is a very singular thing that Congress can not change the amount of a salary. The idea can not be maintained that if you put it at a certain amount in one appropriation bill it must stand unchanged unless a separate bill is brought in to make the change.

This salary was first fixed in an appropriation bill, and it can be changed in the same way as it was fixed. The idea that when once a salary is fixed in one appropriation bill it is fixed forever unless a special bill is brought in to change it is a very strange one. If that is the rule, then these gentlemen ought to ask the Appropriations Committee to report in another bill to pay these officers the amount that has been deducted from their salaries for the last two years. Everybody in the employment of the Government is receiving salary under law, and can not receive it otherwise, and it is a very strange contention that there is no way by which you can decrease a salary except by bringing in a special, separate bill, yet that you can increase salaries. The Constitution fixes certain salaries that can not be increased or diminished, leaving all the others to be fixed by the lawmaking power in the first place, and that power can change them afterwards as it sees fit.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much surprised at the attitude taken by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY] in the effort which he made here yesterday afternoon to keep the salaries of these five inspectors at $2,500 a year and $4 a day for traveling expenses. I do not think he understands the true position of these inspectors. These five men are not the appointees of the Indian Department; they are not selected by the Indian Bureau; they are the personal appointees, the personal political workers, if I may use that term, of the Secretary of the Interior. These men were appointed on the advent of the present Democratic Administration, and of the four who now hold these offices one comes from the State of Virginia, another from North Carolina, another from Georgia. I have no doubt that the distinguished gentleman on the other side [Mr. CRISP], late Speaker of the House of Representatives, who has taken such a keen interest in this matter, is not unmindful of the fact that one of these four inspectors is a distinguished Democratic gentleman residing in the district which the ex-Speaker has the honor to represent. I wish to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that these four inspectors have been denominated on the floor of this House by one of the leading Democrats of the country the hired spies of the Secretary of the Interior. I trust there is no man on the Republican side who, remembering the lively and sympathetic interest of said Secretary Hoke Smith in the well-being of the old soldiers of the Union, as shown by his administration of the Pension Bureau, would hesitate for a moment to show his appreciation of that officer by contributing $500 a year more for each of these, his personal selections, in order that they may have a larger amount of money on which to retire to private life at the close of the present Administration.

In general, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to appropriations for private purposes; but when the question involves so charitable an object as enabling these four Democrats to go out of the public service with a larger amount of money than they would be able in the regular way to draw under the present Administration, I must profess myself in favor of the proposition.

I wish to add this one remark: I am beginning to think that some people are mistaken in the reiterated statement that this Government is not able to pay the salaries provided by law. We have the most ample evidence that the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States not only has money enough to pay all the debts and obligations of the Government, but that he had money enough the day before yesterday to present to an humble citizen of the State of New York, entirely contrary to the spirit of the law, the sum of $208,440.

On that day, Mr. Chairman, there being $4,700,000 of the late bond issue not awarded, there was a bid pending before the Secretary of the Treasury from a reputable national bank in the city of Boston from which the Government would have netted $5,188,950; there was pending at the same time a bid made by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, which would net the Government $4,980,510. That difference of $208,440 could have been put in the Treasury of the United States under every stipulation and condition of that bond transaction.

While that bid was pending from a reputable national bank which had already been awarded a part of the bonds under this issue—I say that with that bid lying upon his desk the Secretary made the award by which was made the difference of $208,440 against the Government of the United States.

Mr. CRISP. I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not confining his argument to the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is hardly able to see that the gentleman from Massachusetts is addressing himself now to the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, when I rose in my place the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] had just taken his seat, having been discussing the question of the reduction of these salaries from $3,000 to $2,000 a year, having made no reference to the point of order, as I understood, but having discussed simply the merits of the pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. No question of order was raised against the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But the question of order being now raised against the gentleman from Massachusetts, he must confine himself to the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. BARRETT. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order should not be decided until this House has a thorough understanding of the facts as to the statement made in this debate hitherto, that this Government is not able and ought not to be called upon to meet this new expenditure. I repeat, there is evidence of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury believes the Government is able not only to pay all its legal obligations but to present out of hand on the day before yesterday to the so-called "Morgan syndicate" the sum of $208,440 wrested out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point again on the gentleman that he is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, I give notice that if the chairman of this committee [Mr. SHERMAN] makes any points of order on me there will be some more points raised during the progress of this debate which may not be agreeable to him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to decide the question of order, and thinks that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not confining himself to the point of order.

Mr. BARRETT. In regard to that I will say that I will not discuss the point of order further at the present time [laughter], but when the matter has been decided by the Chair I may again ask the attention of the House to a few more remarks concerning the present state of the Treasury of the United States. I wanted to and have called the attention of the committee to the fact that a treasury that can afford to present $208,440 to the "Morgan syndicate" out of hand ought to be able to pay the salaries provided by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that after the very clear statement of the point of order by the distinguished parliamentarian from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT] the Chair must be ready to rule upon it. [Laughter.] I will not say another word in reference to the point of order, but will merely ask that the Chair now rule.

The CHAIRMAN. This question of order is one of importance, and the Chair will hear any gentleman who may desire to be heard in opposition to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia. [A pause.] If not, the Chair is ready to decide.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I had considerable difficulty in hearing the point of order suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], but if I did understand the point raised by him it is this: The original creation of the office of these inspectors was by an appropriation bill passed in 1873. I wanted to be heard upon the relative condition of affairs existing in 1873, as compared with now; but it is not pertinent to the question of order and I shall not go into it at the present time. But as it is customary to give notice, I desire to say that before this debate closes I propose to put myself right on that question of increased salaries to anybody.

If I understood, I repeat, the gentleman from Georgia correctly, these offices having been created in 1873 by a provision in an appropriation bill and the salary fixed at $3,000 each, it changes existing law now to make any reduction of salary below $3,000. If I am right that is the real question to be decided.

Mr. CRISP. I beg pardon; I do not think the gentleman from Ohio apprehended the point.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Possibly not. I have just stated that the difficulty was that it was almost impossible to hear the point distinctly over here.

Mr. CRISP. This is a very important question, and should be decided properly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Undoubtedly, for it involves 400 points in one single appropriation bill before the House.

Mr. CRISP. It is important in this way: These offices were created by law. The gentleman will find it in sections 2043 and 2044 of the Revised Statutes.

I read section 2043:

There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a sufficient number of Indian inspectors not exceeding five in number, to perform the duties required of such inspectors by the provisions of this title. Each inspector shall hold his office for four years unless sooner removed by the President. Each inspector shall receive an annual salary of $3,000.

Now, I concede that it is competent for Congress to appropriate less than $3,000 to the Indian inspectors; but then I contend that if that is done it is competent for the incumbent of the office to sue the United States Government in the Court of Claims and recover the difference between the amount appropriated and the amount fixed by the law. I referred in that connection to the case of Langston against The United States, which covers that specific point.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman give the number of the report in that case?

Mr. CRISP. In the One hundred and eighteenth United States Reports, page 389.

Now, a practice has grown up in the House of providing in the appropriation bills that "the amounts herein appropriated shall be in full compensation for the salaries of the persons appropriated for for the current year," the purpose being to enable Congress on an appropriation bill to reduce salaries and to take from the incumbent the right to sue in the Court of Claims for any portion of the salary not appropriated. That provision when offered as an amendment to the bill is undoubtedly obnoxious to the point of order. That will be conceded by everybody.

That provision, however, was adopted on this bill, the point of order not being made, and the first paragraph of the bill now provides that the amounts herein appropriated shall be accepted by the officers appropriated for "in full compensation for their salaries."

My point, then, is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] offers an amendment to fix the salary for the current year of these inspectors at $2,000. If that should go into the bill the existing law would be changed to that extent, and the right of the incumbent to sue and recover in the Court of Claims would be taken away from him. This law, in other words, would change the existing law to that extent, and the point I make is that inasmuch as you have determined that whatever is appropriated in the bill shall be taken as full payment of the salaries fixed by law, you must appropriate the full amount of the salary unless you change existing law.

So far as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is concerned, and the point he makes, even conceding it to be good, still my point of order is well taken, because the salary fixed in the last act is $2,500, while the pending proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would put the salary at $2,000.

Mr. LACEY. I would ask the gentleman from Georgia whether we could not leave out the whole appropriation for these salaries, if we saw fit, notwithstanding that we have passed the first provision of the bill to which he referred?

Mr. CRISP. Undoubtedly we could.

Mr. LACEY. That being admitted, why could we not appropriate less than the full amount of the salary?

Mr. CRISP. Because if we made no appropriation these officers could sue the Government before the Court of Claims and recover the full amount of the salary to which they are entitled by law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have the point. The point of order is, under the contention made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], that we might and that it would be competent to appropriate a less sum than $3,000 per annum, were it not for a provision put into this bill yesterday, which seems to have been put in with a great deal of art and without, perhaps, any due consideration upon the part of the Committee of the Whole, that whatever amount of money we do appropriate shall be accepted in full satisfaction of the salary fixed for that office; and therefore, says the gentleman from Georgia, if you legislate to appropriate less than $3,000 you have changed existing law. But he has conceded that without the provision in the bill placed there yesterday we might have legally appropriated less than $3,000 a year.

Now, the validity of his argument, the force of his argument, depends upon the effect on the present legislation of the country of the amendment put into this bill yesterday. Is that existing law? There is the whole point. Non constat. We may strike this provision out of this bill when it comes into the House of Representatives, and if it is to have any such construction as the gentleman puts upon it, it must be stricken out of this bill, or there will be criticism along that line of battle when the people of this country see that by a simple provision like that the power of Congress to decrease salaries has been taken away from it, and it is bound by the ancient statutes of the country, passed in times when money was worth a great deal less than it is now, for the purpose of the payment of these salaries. That, then, is not existing law. There is no such law in existence. It is an amendment tentatively in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that the existing law claimed by the gentleman from Georgia to be changed is the section of the Revised Statutes which fixed the salary at $3,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the gentleman from Georgia has just admitted that in the absence of the amendment which I have referred to it is nevertheless competent to appropriate less than the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. But the contention is that the first amendment to this bill, taken in connection with this amendment to appropriate $2,000, would, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, reduce those salaries from $3,000, the existing law, to $2,000 for that year. That is the claim that is made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That, then, depends on whether or not we pass this bill. That amendment has no more effect upon this amendment or this proposition than has the title of this bill. How can it have? We have not passed it into law. That will be a question to be determined when the House of Representatives and the Senate pass upon the question whether this bill is to pass at all or not. That has no possible effect up to this time. It is a provision that will have to be acted upon in the House of Representatives, and it may be acted upon either separately or on all the amendments that shall be reported to the House. The gentleman admits that we are not bound by the existing law in the Revised Statutes to appropriate $3,000, and that we may appropriate less than that. Now, how does it change existing law, even upon the ground occupied by the gentleman from Georgia? It makes a new appropriation, not changing the salary, but simply changing the amount of money which Congress sees fit to appropriate.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Ohio answer just one question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will try.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you not think the amendment adopted is just as binding upon the Committee of the Whole as the existing law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. It has no possible effect.

Mr. TAWNEY. On the committee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. Not for the purposes of this rule. Is it possible that it can be done clandestinely—because that is the effect of it; nobody was told on yesterday this was to have the effect to prevent Congress from refusing to follow the extravagances of this bill. Nobody was told that an amendment was to be put into the law that was to take the salary that was fixed when the coal miners of my Congressional district were mining coal at 90 cents and a dollar, and put it under the plea of former legislation back to that price, when to-day those same miners are mining coal at 50 cents a ton. Nobody was told that when that provision was put in there a law made twenty-three years ago—when gold was at a premium and when the products of the farms of this country were being sold at double what they are now—was to be a conduit through which an increase of $500 a year upon five Government officers should be tolerated by a Republican Congress. Nobody was told that a salary fixed when horses were worth $125 and cattle worth 6 to 8 cents a pound was to be brought here as an argument to force this committee to go back to that scale of prices when cattle are now worth 3 cents a pound and horses worth $25 apiece. [Applause.]

I am here to say this. This committee may do just as they please. They may go on with this work of raising salaries. We are told that three or four hundred items of appropriation in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill are all affected in the same way under this question of order; and gentlemen may put in a provision like that and go forward with it; but I say that I stand here for one to make a record that will show to mankind that in this year, in the great depression of business, in a time when everybody is suffering, and appeals are coming to Congress from every direction, that I will not vote to increase salaries at a ratio of 25 per cent, or nearly that amount, in an appropriation bill, and that after an amendment is put into this bill which seeks to bar the action of this committee to set themselves right before the country.

What is the effect, Mr. Chairman, of this proposition? Having said that the amount of money which we have appropriated shall be in full of all salary claimed by every one of these gentlemen, we therefore, on old antediluvian statutes, statutes that were passed in time of inflated currency, statutes passed in times of higher price for labor and higher price for commodities, when, as was well said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] yesterday, these inspectors were compelled to travel at great expense over the country—we are compelled now to go back and hunt up these statutes and make these exaggerated appropriations, because we are powerless and tied hand and foot by a provision that we put into this bill on yesterday. My point in answer to the gentleman from Georgia is that that is no statute law, ought not to be law, and it never shall become law. It certainly can not become law if this House is intelligent and patriotic enough not to do away with our own power to prevent the increase of salaries. I warn you gentlemen of the House of Representatives, on both sides, that the people of this country have their eye on this particular Congress, and one of the things they are looking to is to see whether we are willing to create new offices and give exaggerated salaries to existing officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And we are warned by the conduct of the people toward the Democratic Congress, which has just been repudiated, that stood upon the reduction of salaries and made their legislative battle on that point. The boast was made in the proclamation of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who published an emphatic and effective appeal to the country at the close of the last session of Congress, pointing out the economy in appropriations, pointing to the reduction of the number of officers, pointing out the reduction in the aggregate of the salaries of the officers; and yet here we come, and, upon the first appropriation bill where it seems to be possible, we are putting up these salaries at the rate of $500 apiece, and we are doing that when we are told by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN], representing the district more affected than any other, that these inspectors are not only of no value to the country, but absolutely political agents of a political machine. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it not be proper, then, to abolish the office? They ought to, rather than take this course.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to say to the able gentleman from Minnesota that that question, interpolated here, has no effect. It does not even punctuate the RECORD with an intelligent question. [Laughter.]

Mr. FISCHER. The gentleman says he is opposed to increasing salaries or creating offices. Has not your committee, which does not meet, asked for a clerk?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is that a new office?

Mr. FISCHER. Your committee, that never meets and never had a clerk, has asked for a clerk.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did it not have a clerk in the last Congress? My committee has never reported in favor of an addition of 15 men to a force and taken 6 of them for the committee. [Laughter.]

So, Mr. Chairman, the point of order is not well taken. Congress is not compelled to appropriate a sum of money equal to the salary of the officer; and that is this whole question. Suppose, now, that in the case of the President of the United States we should attempt to appropriate $45,000 a year for his salary, would anybody undertake to say that that was obnoxious to the point of order because it changes existing law? The gentleman from Georgia admits that it would not be. The gentleman from Georgia admits that we are not compelled to appropriate the entire amount. That is all I desire to say. This matter is of vital importance to these appropriation bills. The argument puts us into this position: You must either leave open the whole question and allow suits to be brought in the Court of Claims by every officer whose salary is reduced, or you must put yourself in the painful position of not being able to abolish any useless office or reduce any salary, or you are precluded by the rules of the House from cutting down an appropriation of this character.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before the House is so interesting and so far-reaching that I have thought it sufficient excuse for asking the House to indulge me while I express my views concerning the point of order.

I might say by way of preface that full answer might be found to what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] as to the dire results that would follow if amendments lessening proposed appropriations can not be entertained in the one fact that this House, by its rules, has deprived itself of the power which the last House and the preceding House had, of admitting amendments upon an appropriation bill to change existing law, when by the proposed change the expenditures carried by the bill would be decreased. Passing that, however, I understand this case to be as follows: Yesterday there was adopted an amendment to the pending bill providing that the appropriations made by the bill for the payment of salaries shall be in full discharge of all claims for those salaries. Now, there is a proposition pending to lessen the amount of the appropriation for the salaries of particular officers, to appropriate less money than the amount fixed by the law, and the point of order is made that this amendment, or any amendment which would make the appropriation less than the amount fixed by the law, would be obnoxious to the rule against changing existing law by an amendment to an appropriation bill. The question is whether or not that point of order is well taken.

In my view, Mr. Chairman, a good point of order could clearly have been made against the amendment that was adopted yesterday. If made, it would unquestionably have been sustained. That amendment adopted yesterday was a proposition to change the existing law. That was the proposition by which this bill as it now stands will change existing law. By the adoption of that amendment, however, neither the committee nor the House bound itself as to what amounts should be appropriated. There was simply introduced into the bill a provision different from existing law. That new provision is that, so far as the appropriations carried by this bill are concerned—not the appropriation suggested by the Committee on Indian Affairs, but whatever appropriations may be carried by this bill as it shall pass—that so far as those appropriations are concerned they shall be in full compensation and discharge of the salaries of the persons therein provided for. That is the proposed change of existing law; because, but for that provision, if an appropriation were made of less than the stipulated amount of any salary the officer entitled to the salary would have an undoubted right to bring suit in the Court of Claims to recover the difference between the amount appropriated and his salary as fixed by law.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman says that that provision adopted yesterday was a change of existing law?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. Now, was it a change of existing law unless the amount appropriated is less than the amount fixed by law?

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is just the point that I am coming to. The existing law was, the existing law is, outside of this bill, that when an appropriation is made for the payment of a salary and that appropriation is less than the sum fixed by law, then the person who is entitled to that salary can sue and recover the difference. That is the law independent of the provision incorporated in this bill yesterday. But that provision adopted yesterday would change the existing law as to this bill and as to every item of appropriation that may be made in this bill. As to this bill and the appropriations contained in it, if that provision shall be retained in the bill, the law will be that the appropriations here made shall be in full discharge of the salaries of the officers provided for.

There is where the change of existing law would be made. What would be the meaning of that provision otherwise? To make good the point of order you must incorporate in the provision adopted yesterday something that is not in it and that can not be carried into it, I submit, by fair implication. You would be providing that, as to the officers whose salaries shall be appropriated for in this act, the amounts appropriated shall be received by them in full discharge of their claims, provided such amounts are equal in each particular instance to the amount provided by law. That provision would amount to nothing. It would mean merely that if you appropriated the full amount specified by existing law as the salary, then the man who received that salary must receive it in full discharge of the utmost claim that he ever could have for salary.

Now, I submit that in order to make good the point of order raised by my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], whom I almost always follow upon these questions and find exceedingly good authority—to make that point of order good you would have to tack onto the amendment adopted yesterday a limitation which would destroy it, so that it would be practically no amendment at all. In fact, however, the Committee of the Whole, in adopting that amendment, provided that as to this bill and all the items of appropriation for salaries contained in this bill the previously existing law shall be changed, so that the appropriations made here, whether large or small, whether the full amount of a salary fixed by law, or half of it, or a tenth of it, or a hundredth part of it, shall be in full discharge of the salary. That is the only meaning that amendment can have, the meaning that it does have. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] suggested the inquiry to me: Is not that amendment adopted yesterday all right, making no change of law until you change the amount of the salary? I say no. I say the proposed change of law was made yesterday. Everybody provided for in this bill is now required to accept in full discharge of his claim for salary, if he accepts it at all, the amount appropriated.

Now, how does anybody anticipate what will be appropriated? The effect of the other construction would be that instead of increasing the power of the committee, as was done yesterday by the adoption of that amendment, you would lessen the power of the committee. The effect of such construction would be that if the amount of appropriation recommended in this bill should in any case be less than the amount of salary specified by law, you must necessarily raise it. That would be the inevitable effect. So, Mr. Chairman, we come back to the case as we find it; that yesterday the Committee of the Whole adopted an amendment providing that as to this bill, and as to whatever the House may choose to do as to the appropriations carried by this bill, the existing law shall be changed, because without that change of law the persons for whom appropriations shall be made in this bill, in all cases where a less sum shall be appropriated than the sum fixed by law, could recover the difference by suit against the United States in the Court of Claims, but with this amendment law they can not recover. The power to appropriate a dollar or a thousand dollars for any salary remains precisely the same. It is not changed in any respect by the amendment adopted yesterday.

Now, it is conceded that although a salary of $5,000 might be attached to an office, it would be perfectly competent for Congress to appropriate $5 instead of $5,000; and then the law fixing the salary being unchanged, the officer could sue for and recover all the remainder—$4,995. But as to this particular bill, in view of the action already taken, the law is changed, if the amendment of yesterday become law, and the officer accepting the amount appropriated could not sue and recover a balance.

The amendment now pending before the Committee of the Whole does not propose any change of the law. The right always has existed—it is a necessary inherent right of a legislative body—to appropriate either the whole legal salary or a part of it. The proposition against which the point of order is made is to appropriate not all of what might be appropriated within the legal limits, but a part of it. And it has already been determined—the proposition is not to be determined now, it has already been determined—that as to appropriations thus made the law shall be changed so that the appropriations which we may make shall be in complete discharge of the claim of the person for whom the salary is provided.

I therefore submit that as to this particular matter—and I think the question is an important one; it may reach far and extend to many bills—as to this particular matter the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia—and I differ with him reluctantly and only on clear conviction—can not be sustained. While there is a proposed change of law, that change has already been accepted, and the point of order now raised does not go to it. The particular thing against which this point of order is directed is not a change of law. Whatever damage there may be from change of law, the proposal to make the change has already been indorsed. The present proposition is simply to do what the Committee of the Whole, and after it the House, has an undoubted right to do; the effect upon some individual may be different by virtue of the change already wrought by the adoption of the amendment of yesterday. The case is different from what it would be if that change had not been made. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to put a question to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose, when the amendment was offered yesterday to the first page of the bill, it had appeared as a fact that the salaries provided for in the bill were precisely those authorized by existing laws; suppose, under those circumstances, the point had been made that there was a change of existing law, how could that point have been sustained?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, it could have been sustained on this ground: Certain appropriations are suggested or proposed in this bill; but neither this Committee of the Whole nor the House has agreed to these appropriations. The Appropriations Committee of the House has recommended certain appropriations, and the question to be determined is whether or not the Committee of the Whole and the House will sanction the appropriation of those sums, or how much in any given case shall be appropriated.

The Committee of the Whole had recommended no appropriations; the House had made no appropriations. The Appropriations Committee of the House had merely recommended certain appropriations. The question whether the Committee of the Whole would recommend any of these appropriations, or in what amounts, was something which no one could anticipate. That was a matter to be determined, because any member of the House would have the right to raise that question and no one could say it would not be raised. First, what the Committee of the Whole would do, and next, what the House would do, with reference to any such proposition could only be determined by the event itself; it could not possibly be known in advance. So that if the point had been made that the bill was so framed that in each case the full amount of the salary attached to each office was appropriated, and no more—if it had been argued that therefore the proposed amendment would not change existing law, the suggestion would not have been good, and the point of order against the provision would still have been valid, because the change proposed yesterday to be made in existing law by the amendment then adopted is not that whatever had been proposed by the Indian Committee shall be accepted as full payment, but that what is appropriated by Congress shall be in full discharge of the officer's claim for salary, whether the appropriation be more or less. To determine whether a proposed amendment would change existing law we must compare the amendment with the law.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Suppose that $2,000 should be determined to be the right salary to be allowed these inspectors, and suppose the bill in that form should become a law, and the inspectors should decline to accept that amount as their compensation; does the gentleman believe that they would be debarred from going to the Court of Claims in a suit to recover the amount provided under the statute for their salaries?

Mr. DE ARMOND. That question I have not looked up; I do not undertake to answer it positively.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make the point that this proposition here is an effort to change existing law, and under the rules the point of order would be well taken, regardless of the point made by the gentleman from Georgia. The law now provides a salary of $3,000; and any amendment which might be offered different from that would be obnoxious to the rule which we have adopted.

Mr. DE ARMOND. With all due deference, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Illinois, I think his own contention will destroy his own argument. I understand him to take the position, and in that he may be correct—I may admit for the sake of the argument that he is correct—I understand him to take the position that one of these inspectors, if the amendment proposed shall be held to be in order and shall be adopted, and the appropriation of $2,000 shall be made for his salary, when under the law he would be entitled to $3,000, if he refuses to take the amount of $2,000, can go to the Court of Claims and recover the whole amount of his salary, while if, under the bill, he accepts the $2,000 it is absolutely a settlement of the entire claim. If that be true, then the gentleman must see that there is no change in the law made by the $2,000 amendment, because if it were otherwise it would be absolutely impossible for him to go into the Court of Claims and recover anything.

I come back, then, to the original proposition with which I set out, that there is no change in the existing law proposed to-day by the pending proposition, but that the change of law was proposed and accepted on yesterday.

Mr. RAY. Let me interrupt the gentleman for an inquiry. Do you claim that the words incorporated in this bill yesterday, providing that the appropriation for salary made by it shall be in full for the salary fixed by law if accepted, is the same as though the bill provided in express words that the salaries of these officers shall be whatever sum Congress sees fit to appropriate?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, not quite that, I will state to the gentleman. That is not exactly the contention. But I do claim that the provision is that these appropriations in the pending bill, whatever they may be, shall be the salary for the year to which the bill applies, not that the salary affixed to the office shall be that, but that the appropriation herein made shall be a discharge of all the obligations of the Government to pay the salary for that particular year, probably with the qualification "if accepted."

Mr. RAY. Now, let me interrupt the gentleman further. It seems to me that the gentleman's argument is subject to this criticism: The law says that these officers shall have a salary of $3,000 a year, and of course it is the duty of Congress to appropriate the necessary money to pay that salary. It is the duty of Congress to do it and it ought to do it. We may not do our duty, but if we fail, the officer may sue and recover the balance.

Now, Congress is seeking here at this time to do by indirection something that it is not its purpose to do directly—that is, we seek to change the salary of these officers by taking two steps, one of which has been already taken by the amendment adopted on yesterday and the other one you are now seeking to take. The first step taken was the insertion of the amendment that the acceptance of whatever we appropriate in this bill for the salary of one of these officers shall be in full discharge of the salary and of all claims against the Government for salary for the particular year to which the bill applies.

So far well and good. You can see that it is not quite equivalent to saying that the salary shall be whatever we do appropriate. Now, then, in order to change the law declaring what the salary shall be, in order to consummate what you desire to accomplish and practically change the law to the extent of reducing the salary to $2,500, you must go a step further and appropriate a lesser sum to pay the salary than the law says the officer shall receive. Then comes in the point of order. We have not thus far changed existing law. We have taken only one step toward it. One act in the performance has been played, but we must take the other necessary step before we do change the law. When we appropriate for the payment of the salary only $2,000, or $2,500, we have consummated by our legislation the act of changing the salary for the next fiscal year, and we have then changed existing law. Therefore, having gone half way before, now, when we undertake to appropriate a lesser sum than the law says the officer shall receive, we are consummating the act to change existing law, and it is just as objectionable to proceed by indirection, one step at a time, as though we had embodied the whole thing in one proposition and made the entire change in one single provision. In other words, the mere division of the proposition into two parts does not relieve it from the operation of the point of order.

Yesterday we changed existing law to some extent, but we did not effect the change in existing law we intend to accomplish.

To-day we do seek to consummate the change. We must take the action as a whole, not in parts, for each part is necessary to make up and complete the whole; that is the change of law intended, and that change is the reduction of these salaries from $3,000 per annum to $2,500 per annum.

Any provision in this bill intended to bring that result is a change of existing law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. There is no question that the adoption of the pending amendment, the other amendment to which I have referred having been adopted on yesterday, would have the effect of giving this official $2,000 instead of $3,000 for the particular year for which we are now appropriating. There is no doubt of that. But the question before the committee at this time and before the Chair is this: Is that to be taken as a change of law which is to be effected by what is in the pending proposition, or has the proposed change already been effected, in so far as this committee can effect it? That is the point.

I think my friend from New York misapprehends what I mean on that point, and also, I think, misapprehends the point at issue.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just there for a moment?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand you to say that the law has been already changed.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes; the amendment to change it was accepted yesterday.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, is it necessary for two things to concur in order that existing law shall be changed—first, the amendment on yesterday that the salaries herein provided for shall be in full, which, as I understand you to say, does not change existing law, unless you go a step further, and that is to appropriate a less amount than is required by the law? Then when both conditions concur, first the statement that the appropriation is in full of the salary for that year, and the second the decreased sum, you do change existing law? In other words, there must be a concurrence of the two propositions in order to change existing law. So yesterday, when that was offered, it was, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, no change of existing law until you had gone one step further and provided for a lesser salary. Now, the first time that you met the second condition was when the offer was made to reduce this salary from $3,000 to $2,000. Then both conditions concurred, which changed existing law, and without that concurrence I do not see that there is any change of existing law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The difficulty into which my friend from Virginia drops is precisely the same which has overtaken my friend from New York [Mr. RAY]. They confound two questions. The one is the question of changing law, the other question is as to a matter of fact which mixes up with the change of law and produces certain effects.

For instance, a legislative body passes a law defining what grand larceny is and fixing a penalty for the offense. Now, that law is a complete law. A question arises afterwards whether somebody is amenable to the provisions of that law by reason of having done something—whether you have a case to prosecute under that law. That is the question here that these gentlemen make, and they confuse the two things. The law is changed so far as this amendment of yesterday goes, for the present considering this amendment as adopted.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to ask the question, is the law changed——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Just wait until I finish my statement. There is in this bill now, by the amendment adopted, that which, if it ripens into law, will effect a change of the law. Now, the change of law is precisely the same—is a change of law complete and perfect, whether or not there ever arises a case upon which it shall operate. If that is not true, then you do not know whether you have a law until you find out that you have a case which that law will fit! Will anybody take that position? You can not know whether this law has been changed until you find out whether there is something that you can operate your change upon! That will not do. I say the law has been changed by the incorporation of this provision in the bill, assuming that this goes on and becomes a law. There has been incorporated into this bill a provision which, ripened into law, will change existing law. If the appropriations should be such that nobody may ever raise the question, and nobody ever be affected by it, then the law will be a law which has nothing to operate upon—fails to accomplish anything simply for that reason; but it will be law nevertheless.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is nevertheless a change of law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. It will be law in this bill, law upon the statute book, that nobody can take the salary provided for him in this bill except in full requital for his services.

Mr. OWENS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes.

Mr. OWENS. If you go ahead, as this bill provides for doing, and appropriate the full $3,000 of salary to which the officer is entitled under the statute, would not the amendment of yesterday, instead of being a change of law, be merely declaratory of the conditions existing under the present law, and not a change?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; it would not. Gentlemen are anticipating what is going to be done. That is the trouble about it. Yesterday there was something done. That was done without condition. It was not done upon condition that there should be certain amounts appropriated in this bill. It was done absolutely and at the outset, before reaching these appropriations, and it provided that certain appropriations—not the ones suggested by the Indian Committee, not any particular amount, not any particular item, but the appropriations that we shall make, appropriations that this bill when completed shall carry—that those appropriations shall be—not as the law was heretofore, but as we make it now for the purposes of this bill—in full discharge of the year's compensation to be paid to the persons provided for.

Mr. SWANSON. The error in your argument is that you conclude that that amendment of yesterday necessarily changed existing law. Now, is not the law existing to-day that a man who has a salary fixed by law is paid in full if you pay him that full salary? That being so, the act of yesterday did not change existing law at all. The error in your argument is that you conclude that the amendment of yesterday necessarily changed the law. We claim it did not change the law until followed by the amendment reducing the salary.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understand the claim of the gentleman, and I insist that I am not wrong about it. Now, let us get at the state of the law as it was. I hope the chairman will indulge me for a few minutes longer. Several questions have been asked me and I have spoken much longer than I intended to speak. I have not a particle of interest in this matter except to express correct views, if I have them.

Suppose you should read in this bill what was there before the adoption of this amendment, what was law before this proposition to change law. Now, what was it? That the sums appropriated for the payment of salaries, if equal to the sums provided by law for those salaries, shall be in full discharge of them; if not equal to those salaries, that the persons receiving less than the salaries fixed for their offices can go into the Court of Claims and recover the difference. That was the law before this proposed change. Of course that would not be incorporated into the bill, but it is the law and goes with the bill as effectually as if it were written there.

Let me call attention for a moment upon that view of the question to the case of Langston against the United States, which is cited by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] as an authority upon this question. Mr. Langston was a United States minister to one of the West India Republics, I believe. The law fixed the salary at $7,500 per year. Appropriations were made of $5,000 a year for some years, I do not recall just how many. That amount was received and receipted for by the officer. At the expiration of his term, or after three or four years had elapsed, he brought suit against the Government in the Court of Claims for the aggregate difference between the stipulated salary of $7,500 a year and the $5,000 appropriated each year. The Court of Claims decided in his favor. The question was carried to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court of the United States affirmed that decision. Now, then, that decision fixes the law this way, that where an officer is entitled to a certain salary, because that is the salary fixed for the office which he held, and appropriations are made of less than that sum, no other limitation being thrown in, he can receive partial payment and sue and recover the balance of the salary fixed by law.

That was the law when it was proposed by the amendment incorporated in the bill yesterday to change the law as to the appropriations to be made in this bill. That amendment was incorporated. Then, so far as this bill is concerned, that law is in process of change. There is in this bill that which was put there to change the law as to this bill, and as to all the appropriations borne in it. The question of what the change accepted yesterday will operate upon can not be mixed with the original legal question involved. Now it is suggested by gentlemen that this change does not accomplish anything until you make a change in the amount of the appropriation. A law against grand larceny can not accomplish anything—that is, can not be enforced—until somebody has been guilty of that offense. The law for the collection of debt does not accomplish anything until somebody invokes that law. The law for the limitation of actions accomplishes nothing until somebody invokes that law in a particular case; but it is the law all the same.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. When you speak of the law of grand larceny and those other things, that is where a person violates a rule that is already established. You admit you coincide with the gentleman from New York that you have only accomplished the first step.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; my position is that we have already taken all the steps necessary to change the law, except, of course, passing into law this bill as amended.

Mr. HOPKINS. Your position coincided with that of the gentleman from New York, that the change will not have occurred until an appropriation different from existing law has been made.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The change of the law has been completely accomplished, so far as the Committee of the Whole can accomplish it, by amendment before any reduction of the salary or change in an item of appropriation. The law is clear all the time. In other words, I claim that Congress has sole power to appropriate any sum or refuse to appropriate any sum precisely as it has always had, and that the amendment here pending, to reduce an item of appropriation, does not change the law at all; but that the proposition to change the law was one which passed yesterday without challenge; one upon which no question was raised.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say a word. I would have interrupted the gentleman from Missouri, but I have always found when I agree with him he can state it so much stronger and better than I can that I hesitate to interrupt him; and I have become willing to hesitate to interrupt the gentleman when I do not agree with him. I will ask the Chair to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 11, strike out the word "three," and in lieu thereof insert the word "two," so that it will read "for pay of five Indian inspectors at $2,000."

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the Chair if he has the bill before him?

The CHAIRMAN. I have.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Chair to look at the first section of the bill, and to follow me while I read a line or two of it:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose—

These are the words—of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department.

Now the amendment that was adopted yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

In full compensation of the services.

Mr. CANNON. That is right. Now, then, the gentleman from Missouri has well claimed "in full compensation of the services" covers the whole Indian service in this legislation.

The gentleman from Georgia admits that this whole salary of $3,000 might be stricken out, so as to appropriate nothing; he admits that that might be done either with or without this amendment. Now, it seems to me that if you can strike out the whole of it, you certainly can strike out a part of it. As I understand the object of the rule of the House, it is not to be technically construed so as to defeat the will of the Committee of the Whole, and if the right to withhold appropriations, without reference to this amendment, is conceded, then it can not be said that the adoption of this amendment in the first section defeats that right. Nobody claims that. So, when you come to speak of given cases it seems to me that you test the soundness of the argument of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] as well as of the argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this question is in a nutshell. The only inquiry is whether two statutes stand or can stand together, or whether there is such a conflict between them that the one must fall and the other stand. Now, the existing law unquestionably is that these officials shall each receive a salary of $3,000. Unquestionably that is the existing law. It is immaterial whether it was enacted originally in an appropriation bill or was incorporated in the Revised Statutes as a distinct proposition; it is in the statutes of the United States and is the existing law. Therefore each one of these persons is entitled to demand and receive for his services a salary of $3,000 a year. The amendment put upon this bill on yesterday says that each of these officers shall receive, in full compensation for his services, whatsoever this House provides that he shall receive. That is the situation. The law as it exists says emphatically that each of these men shall receive $3,000 a year; while the provision which we adopted on yesterday says that he shall accept as his salary whatever amount the House may appropriate. There is, therefore, a clear and irreconcilable conflict between the two enactments.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. LINNEY. Suppose the point of order had not been raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and we had gone on and passed this amendment, it would have been valid, would it not?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. As a matter of course.

Mr. LINNEY. Then, as there was no objection made yesterday to the amendment which was adopted, would not this amendment be the same as though the amendment on yesterday had not been adopted at all, it having been agreed to by unanimous consent?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It does not make any difference how the amendment was made. It was made, and at the time it was pending a point of order ought to have been made against it, which would undoubtedly have been sustained. I think there can be no question about that. Now, when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] admits that but for that amendment adopted on yesterday the House might appropriate less than the amount fixed in the existing law, he gives up his whole case. If that were not so, then the point of order could be made here and now, because there would be no power in this House to change the existing law unless it has the power to appropriate a less amount than that fixed in the existing law. But inasmuch as that power does unquestionably exist, the conflict, I say, is irreconcilable between the existing law and the amendment passed on yesterday; and inasmuch as the point of order was not made when that amendment was pending, it is too late to make it now.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. What is it that this House is undertaking to do? Is it not to so change the law that the salaries of these officers shall be $2,500 a year instead of $3,000 a year, as now fixed by law?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is exactly what they are proposing to do.

Mr. RAY. Now, is it not also true that if this House appropriates only $2,500 for each of these salaries, each of these officers can sue the Government in the Court of Claims and recover the other $500?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. He could do that but for the amendment adopted on yesterday, which ought not to have been made.

Mr. RAY. Please do not throw in anything that is outside of the argument. Let us confine ourselves to the proposition. On yesterday we adopted a provision which says that these officers shall receive whatever we do appropriate in full compensation for their services, but that provision does not have the effect thus far to reduce the salaries, does it?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It does not.

Mr. RAY. Now, the purpose was—and yesterday's action was but one step toward it—the purpose was, by this bill taken as a whole, to reduce these salaries. That is the object and purpose of this legislation, and when you have gotten through with your bill you must take your bill all together as the law on the subject. You can not pick out one phrase, or one sentence, or one section, and say that that is the law and that that fixes the salary of these officers, unless such phrase, sentence, or section is all there is on the subject. Therefore, when on yesterday we injected into this bill one provision which of itself does not change existing law so far as these salaries are concerned—when we injected that provision into the bill we took only one step toward attaining the object. It requires further legislation in this bill in order to consummate that proposed change of law, and that step we propose to take to-day.

We must read this part of the bill in connection with what has been done before, and if to-day we appropriate only $2,500 for these salaries, then that action, in connection with what we did yesterday, taking the whole bill together, changes the existing law. But we have undertaken to put into this bill a provision appropriating a less amount of money than the law says we ought to appropriate, a less amount of money than it is our duty to appropriate for these salaries; and while this Congress has the physical power to appropriate $2,500, or any other sum, in payment of these salaries, it has not any legal right to do it. In doing it we violate the law, and when we appropriate only that sum, $2,500, we subject the Government to a suit in the Court of Claims by each of these officers for the difference between his salary as fixed by law and the amount which we appropriate to pay that salary. Therefore, when to-day we undertake to say that each of these officers shall have only $2,500 a year, we are attempting to put into this bill legislation which, in connection with what we did yesterday, does change existing law, and I think that for this Congress to act upon any such basis, or to adopt any such construction of its rules as would permit such a thing to be done, is an outrage upon the law, the rules, and upon every officer of this Government.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I might agree with the gentleman on that point. I have not said to the contrary. But this is purely a legal question, nothing more and nothing less. What our policies, respectively, would be in the administration of the law is an entirely different question which is not involved here. The gentleman from New York confounds two questions which are entirely separate and distinct. One is as to the law, pure, statutory, existing law, and the other relates to the powers of the Congress of the United States in making appropriations in the fulfillment of law. These, I say, are entirely distinct questions. The question here is not what Congress may do in appropriating in obedience to law, but what the law itself commands the Congress to do, what power the law gives to the Congress of the United States to legislate upon this question. The existing law is that each of these men shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year. There can be no question about that.

Now, suppose this bill should say that these men shall each receive $2,000 a year salary. Suppose that in the amendment adopted on yesterday, instead of saying that they should accept whatever Congress might appropriate, we had said that hereafter they shall have not more than $2,000 a year each as salary, who is there here who would hesitate to say that that would have changed existing law? In order to test whether your proposed legislation changes existing law, you must look to the effect, the consequences of the legislation proposed to be enacted if it should become law. That is the test, and if the effect of it would be to give Congress power which it does not now possess, then that legislation changes existing law.

Mr. RAY. One other suggestion, Mr. Chairman. The provision which we injected into this bill yesterday is not, thus far, a part of the law of the land. It is not law; it has not even been adopted by the House of Representatives; it has not been passed by the Senate; it has not been approved by the President of the United States. It is not law, and the fact that we consented to it yesterday in Committee of the Whole does not even necessarily indicate that it will be approved when the bill comes into the House. Of course if the Chairman holds that what we did yesterday was an independent act, is to be regarded as law already enacted, and that appropriating money to pay salaries is entirely independent of that action, then the whole argument I make is overthrown. I make my argument on the supposition that this whole bill must be regarded as one general scheme on the subjects to which it relates. I am opposed to changing general law in appropriation bills. If the law fixes a salary Congress ought to appropriate the money to pay it. The business of the Appropriation Committees is to appropriate money and execute the law. We have not changed the law as yet so far as to change the salary, and the question is, Shall we do so? To-day we seek to consummate the change.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] has the floor.

Mr. RAY. The gentleman consented that I might enlighten him. If he objects, however——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman; let him go on.

Mr. RAY. I want to say right here that the argument of the gentleman from Alabama and that of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] fail when they say that the mischief was done yesterday—when they say that yesterday we changed the existing law, that all our future legislation in connection with this bill is to be upon the theory that what we did yesterday has already passed the House and the Senate and been approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman gives up his whole case. The gentleman from Georgia has already admitted that if the amendment offered yesterday is not the law, then no point of order can be made here. Everyone admits that. And if the gentleman is correct in assuming that we are to treat this provision as not being existing law because it has not passed both Houses and been signed by the President, he gives up his whole case—nothing remains.

Mr. RAY. Not at all, because here is a proposition to reduce this salary by refusing to appropriate the money necessary to pay it, and this is but part of a scheme—it is the second step in attempted legislation to reduce a salary. For that reason it is subject to the point of order. Until that scheme is consummated the point of order may be raised and ought to be sustained.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I have attempted to make this matter plain, and I dislike to repeat, but in order to test the question whether proposed legislation changes or does not change existing law you must look to the effect that the legislation will have upon future acts of Congress; that is the very test of the matter. Under the law as it exists now the Congress of the United States has no right to say that these men shall receive less than $3,000 each; and unless you put upon the bill the amendment introduced and adopted yesterday, we may appropriate less than the sum provided by law, yet that does not reduce the salary, because the officer may recover the amount in the Court of Claims.

Mr. RAY. But let me suggest in this connection that if you do appropriate less than the legal salary, without first changing the law, the officer has a cause of action against the United States, and may recover the difference in the Court of Claims; whereas if we should enact the provision adopted here yesterday into law and then cut down the salary by the appropriation to $2,500, taking the whole thing together as one scheme, as one act, as one law, we have changed the law, and have not only deprived the officer of part of his salary, but have cut off his right of action against the United States for that sum of which we deprive him by refusing to appropriate.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's assumption is not well founded. This is not one act; it is not one law. You test this matter just as well by supposing that the proposed legislation in an appropriation bill, instead of being offered as an amendment, came in here as a separate act. Let us so test the question. Suppose we had here an act of Congress saying that hereafter these Indian agents should receive as their salary whatsoever Congress might see proper to appropriate; suppose such an act should pass, would it or would it not repeal this section of the Revised Statutes? Could they both stand together? As a matter of course the last act would repeal the first.

Now you have on an appropriation bill a provision which as effectually repeals existing law as if you had put it in a separate statute; and the test at last is whether, if this act becomes a law, it is in conflict with existing law or whether both can stand together. If not, it repeals existing law; it changes existing law. If both can stand together, then the point can not be made. But it seems to me it is too plain for argument that the one or the other must give way; and that being the test, then the question raised here comes too late; it ought to have been made yesterday when the amendment was offered.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He says that until it becomes apparent that the existing law is changed the objection does not lie.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; I did not say any such thing; I said just the reverse.

Mr. SWANSON. Then does the gentleman say that before it appears that the existing law is changed——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I said that this amendment of yesterday is a separate, independent, and perfect piece of legislation in itself.

Mr. SWANSON. It does not change the existing law until you put an amendment in the bill varying these appropriations from the amount which the law provides.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We are discussing this question upon the idea that this amendment has been adopted and become law; we can not argue it sensibly in any other way. Arguing it in that way, I say that when it does becomes law, if it ever does, it will repeal the existing law, and therefore it is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, two things, it seems to me, have been confused in discussing this question, and I wish to ask the attention of the Chair to the distinction involved. Salaries are one thing; the law of salaries is another thing. The question to be inquired into is whether there is proposed here any change in the law of salaries—whether the amendment now pending would bring about or be part and parcel in bringing about a change, not of salaries, but of the law of salaries.

Now, up to the time that the first amendment was offered and accepted on yesterday, the law of salary was so many dollars and so many cents for the officer on the statute books. After its adoption by the House the law of salary became what? Why, it became whatsoever Congress might, in its discretion, thereafter insert in the appropriation bill as a salary for the particular office. The law of salary, therefore, that was so many dollars and so many cents written on the statute books, then became whatsoever Congress saw proper to make the salary.

It follows, therefore, Mr. Chairman, from that that no matter what Congress may fix as any particular compensation or salary hereafter in the bill, the law of salary as to the Indian bill having become changed so that it is this, namely, that the salary shall be that amount that Congress fixes in the bill, therefore whatever sum Congress fixes hereafter as a salary, in view of that amendment, can not be a reduction of salary from the standpoint of the present law of salaries, because the very law that we have provided in this bill is that the salary shall be whatever Congress fixes, and that being true, it can not be held that the amount we may fix in the bill is a reduction of the salary authorized by law.

So the idea as to whether the reduction comes in and changes the law cuts no figure. It cuts a figure, and a large figure, no doubt, as to the salary and to the pocketbook of the man who receives the salary; but it cuts no figure at all as to the question of what has been changed or may be changed with relation to the salary, and such change can not become obnoxious to the rule of order.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the only excuse that I shall offer for asking the attention of the Chair and saying anything on the pending question is the importance of the matter itself. On yesterday it was admitted on the floor in this committee that at least two or three hundred officers of the Government had been for ten or fifteen years receiving as salaries under appropriation bills less amounts than the general statutes provided for them.

Now, it is contended that this House can not, in framing an appropriation bill, lessen or reduce the amount which an officer shall receive as salary, or, in other words, that the House can not put the salary below the amount fixed in the general stuatues. It is said we can not do it by reason of the second section of Rule XXI of the present House.

It is also claimed, and undoubtedly it is the law, that in the absence of the amendment offered on yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and adopted by the committee, that if the House does appropriate a less amount than is fixed by the general statutes, then the officer can still recover the full amount by recourse to the Court of Claims. In other words, if we fix in an appropriation bill an amount as the salary for the fiscal year which is less than that provided in the general statutes, it would simply defer the payment to the official, or defer the time when he should receive the whole amount of the salary fixed by law.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] when he says that the amendment offered on yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri, and adopted by the committee, should not be adopted by the House, but upon the contrary I insist that it should be adopted and become a part of this very law, and for reasons which I propose to show later on. Because if we do not adopt it, then we simply withhold the salary from the officer that much longer, and he has a debt against the United States for the difference between the appropriation here made and the amount fixed in the general law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will not misrepresent my position in that manner. I did not take that ground.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Then I am very glad to say that I misunderstood the gentleman. I am glad to find that he is on the other side of the question. I understood him quite differently.

I insist that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri on yesterday is a very proper and necessary one to be adopted in connection with this bill, because if it is not incorporated in the bill it is simply idle in us to undertake to reduce the salary in this or any other appropriation bill. If we are not to reduce the salary in an appropriation bill, then we must go back, in each of the two or three hundred other cases to which reference has been made and which will come before the House in future appropriation bills, to the old laws—the law of 1875, for instance—under which salaries are fixed in some instances at more than twice what we think these officials should receive.

Then we come to the question of order presented here. We must consider in that connection the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and must construe it in one of two ways; we must either construe it as law, or admit that it is not law. If we consider it as law, then it stands before the House in considering the point of order just the same as if it had been enacted in a separate bill. What would that be then? It would be enacted by the Congress of the United States that during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made there should be paid as a salary of an officer, and be received by him as full compensation for his services, the amount which we see proper to fix in the bill.

That would change existing law, because it would enact on its face that whatever amount the Congress of the United States should appropriate should for that year be his salary. So, then, if we are to consider that as the law, then for the purposes of the objection made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] it is the law now, and that provision is simply in effect that whatever we appropriate shall be received and accepted as the salary. So, Mr. Chairman, we are not now doing anything to change existing law, but to carry out existing law. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] said that we should, in the appropriation bill, fix the amount of the salary for the fiscal year, and now we are proceeding, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], to fix that salary at $2,501 instead of $3,000.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we consider, upon the other hand, that it is not the law, then the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] concedes at once that the point of order which he makes is not well taken. Then, in whatever way you consider it, as a part of the law or not as a part of the law, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] is not out of order.

Mr. Chairman, this is to my mind an important question. We must do either one of two things, if this point of order is sustained. This House does not propose to raise salaries and to appropriate money for salaries higher than they have been for fifteen years past. [Applause.] If we can not reduce these salaries under the present rules of this House, the Committee on Rules should bring in a resolution to change these rules immediately.

But, Mr. Chairman, I take it that this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] is not objectionable under the rule, and I insist also that in every appropriation bill there should be an amendment similar to the one offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. What does that mean? I take it that the gentleman from Illinois was right when he asked the question of the gentleman from Missouri whether, if an officer refused to accept the amount appropriated in full, he would be obliged under the law to do it, or whether he could still hold his claim against the Government? I think he was right in the intimation that he would not be compelled to accept the smaller amount, and that therefore we do not change the existing law. We do not change the amount of his salary as fixed by law, but we say to him, "If you serve the Government of the United States for this fiscal year, you shall take $2,500 for your services, if you want any pay at the hands of this Congress, and if you accept that, you accept it in full of your services"; but I take it, Mr. Chairman, that if he refuses to accept it and takes none of it, then he might perhaps have his claim against the Government of the United States for the full amount of the salary.

So, Mr. Chairman, I insist that we are not undertaking to change existing law in any sense of the word; but if it was to be held that it does change existing law, then, Mr. Chairman, we must do one of two things, or else disgrace ourselves before the people of the United States. We must either change the existing laws fixing the salaries as they were fixed twenty years ago, or else we must change the rules of this House so that we can reduce them in an appropriation bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a few sensible remarks concerning this point of order, if you please. Supposing we pass no appropriation bill whatever relative to the pay of these officers, what effect would it have upon their standing in a court if they should sue for their salaries? Could it be said that the law had been repealed or had become inoperative by virtue of the fact that Congress had made no appropriation? Certainly not. Now, you propose to appropriate, say, $2,500 or $2,000, and with that you couple a provision that if the officer having done the work shall accept this appropriation it shall be in full payment. Very well. If he does accept it, then he takes by virtue of the contract, and is estopped under the appropriation law. But suppose he refuses to take a single solitary cent, and then sues for the salary provided in the law. Can the Government come in and demur to his petition or set up an answer that that is no longer the law? Certainly not. It seems to me that an appropriation made even with the proviso contemplated can not be said to change the law, because it can not affect the right of the officer, having performed the service, to go into the courts and maintain his action upon the law.

Mr. CRISP. Just a word. There has been some effort made upon the other side in discussing the point of order—an effort which I regret—to exert an influence on the mind of the Chairman by referring to the fact that heretofore there have been reductions of salaries on appropriation bills, and that if the Chair shall sustain the point of order pending the ruling will affect two or three hundred salaries that are to come.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no necessity for any difficulty of that sort. There is no objection—I think no serious objection will be found on this side of the House—to a proposition to reduce salaries. That is not the point. The point is that you can not legislate on an appropriation bill. You can not reduce a salary on an appropriation bill, and my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who referred to the reductions that had been made heretofore, knows very well that under the rules of the House, as they were in Democratic administrations here, there was an express provision of the rule which authorized us to reduce salaries. Certainly gentlemen have not forgotten that. The rules of the Fifty-third, Fifty-second, and prior to that time read:

Nor shall any provision in any appropriation bill, or amendment thereto, changing existing law be in order except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salaries of the officers of the United States.

The reductions that took place on appropriation bills in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, to which my good friend from Ohio refers, took place in accordance with the rules that those Houses had adopted for their own government. Now the rules of the Fifty-first Congress, under which we are operating, provide:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto.

There is no difficulty, Mr. Chairman, about this majority reducing salaries of officers if they choose to do so by simply bringing in a bill reducing salaries; but under the rules you have adopted it must not be done on a general appropriation bill. That is all. There is no difficulty. Gentlemen need not be frightened by the specter of their own inability to reduce salaries. You have got the power to do it; you have the power to-day under the rules you have adopted. You may have the power to do it in defiance of your rules; but if you will observe your rules, you will not do it on an appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word or two upon its merits. It is admitted that the salary is fixed by law. It is admitted that these officers have a title to their office—acquired by the nomination of the President and confirmation of the Senate—and a tenure of four years. This is a proposition to change existing law in this respect, that these officers, if they accept the money in this appropriation bill, then the law is so changed as to deprive them of the right to sue in the Court of Claims for the excesses or difference, which right the highest court in the land has determined that to-day they have. Now, then, gentlemen say that the enactment of yesterday changed the law. How? How, I ask the Chairman, does that change existing law? Reading the bill you reach a proposition appropriating the full amount of the salary due an officer. Does that change existing law? You reach a provision appropriating a less amount. Does not that change existing law? There is nothing in the first amendment indicating change, and nothing pointing out any change, and there is no reason any man should anticipate that the first amendment would affect the salary.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the conclusion is plain. It is simply another effort on the part of the Appropriations Committee to legislate on appropriation bills, notwithstanding the rules of the House say they shall not do it. It has always been contended by the Republican party, and was the rule when they had control, that an appropriation was simply intended to appropriate money in accordance with existing law. There always has been an effort upon the part of the Appropriations Committee—I do not say it in criticism of them, because we all like to reach out for power—there has always been an effort on the part of that committee, notwithstanding the rule says they should not legislate, to legislate. And when they found that the Supreme Court said that if they appropriated less than the full amount of the salary that the officer could sue for the difference, they have presented an amendment, "If you accept the salary under this law you shall not go to the court and sue us again." So they are seeking to do to-day what the rule says they shall not do, and what I submit, in all fairness and justice, they ought not to do.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry for the purpose of guiding us in what may be done when this bill is reported to the House. Do I understand that under the rules of the House it would be in order if this amendment is thrown out on the point of order, when the bill is reported to the House, to move to recommit this appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with instructions to amend their report to this House so that these salaries should be fixed at $2,500 a year? I agree with the contention made by the gentleman from Georgia that under the present status of the bill it would be a change of existing law. I suggest that to him, that when the bill is reported to the House, supposing the point of order to be sustained, would it be in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with instructions to report the bill back with the salaries as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CRISP. It has constantly and always been held here that you can not do by indirection that which you can not do directly. It would be out of order in the House if out of order here.

Mr. BARRETT. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to a situation which occurred in this House on the 7th day of February, 1893, when, the House being in Committee of the Whole House, having directed the Committee on Appropriations to report on an appropriation bill a matter which under the rules would have been obnoxious and liable to the point of order, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House then held that the Committee of the Whole, and therefore the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, had no right to assume when there was a direction given by the full House, and that therefore the point of order would not hold, and so overruled the point of order. Now, expecting as I do that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia will be sustained, I raise this question at this time, when the House is considering the parliamentary issue, so that we may see if he will agree that when the bill shall have been reported to the House a motion may be then made, and not objected to, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with instructions to report back this section fixing the salary at the rate of $2,500 per annum or $2,000 per annum.

I am simply trying to ascertain from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] if he will be kind enough to express an opinion, whether or not, in his judgment, such a motion could then properly be made, and whether, when the report shall be made by the committee in accordance with that instruction, the point of order could be raised against it.

Mr. CRISP. I can refer the gentleman to the authority in one moment. It has been uniformly held that it is not competent for the House to do by indirection that which it can not do directly. An amendment that is out of order here would be out of order in the form of an instruction to a committee. In other words, the House can not do indirectly what it can not do directly. I suppose the case to which the gentleman refers was a case where the committee had obtained the consent of the House as to some matter which was, in itself, in violation of the rule. Of course, the House can change its rules.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, this matter has taken such a wide range that I think it is deserving of careful attention and consideration. I find in the RECORD of February 7, 1893, that there was reported from the Committee on Appropriations an item which the Chair held would have been subject to a point of order but for the fact that the House had, by resolution, instructed the Committee on Appropriations to report the item. Now, I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether or not he is willing to say, with his full knowledge of the parliamentary procedure of this House, that when this bill shall have been reported to the House it will be in order to move to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee to report this item at the rate of $2,500 a year in full compensation for all services rendered by these inspectors?

Mr. CRISP. I suppose the case to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers was one where the Appropriations Committee obtained unanimous consent or obtained an order directing the committee to do a certain thing. That, of course, can be done. Again, the Committee on Rules has on some occasions reported a special rule authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to report some item in a bill which would not have been admissible under the general rule. That has been done several times.

Mr. BARRETT. Am I correct in my assumption that when this bill shall have been reported to the House it will be in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs with instructions to report a provision along the line suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], and that it will not then be in order in the Committee of the Whole to raise the point that such a provision is not in order because it changes existing law?

Mr. CRISP. That is, of course, a question for the Chair. My own opinion is that you can not, by a simple motion to recommit with instructions, authorize the committee to report anything changing existing law.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia at this time is well taken, but I desire to give full notice now, so that the gentleman may prepare himself on the parliamentary points involved, that if this appropriation of $3,000 as it stands in the bill shall be sustained, I will, when the bill is reported to the House, move to recommit it to the Committee on Indian Affairs with instructions to revise this item so as to fix these salaries at $2,500 a year, which shall be in full compensation for all services rendered by these inspectors.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on this question. The law fixing these salaries seems to be that embraced in the Revised Statutes, and it fixes them at $3,000 a year. Now, if this bill should pass with the amendment adopted yesterday, inserting the words "in full compensation for services for the fiscal year," and also with the amendment reducing the salary to $2,000, and if these inspectors should go on and serve during the year and accept the $2,000 there would result practically a reduction of the salary from $3,000 to $2,000.

But that is not the whole question presented here. This point of order arises on an amendment proposing to reduce the appropriation for salaries to $2,000 a year. That proposition standing alone is clearly within the power of the Committee of the Whole under the rule. Without further provision it would not reduce the salary, because under decisions which have been cited here the courts have held that under such an appropriation as that the incumbent of the office may accept the $2,000 and afterwards maintain his action in the Court of Claims for the balance of the salary. Hence this simple proposition does not change existing law.

But the Chair is referred to the amendment which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole yesterday inserting the words "in full compensation for services for the fiscal year." That amendment would clearly have been subject to a point of order if one had been taken at the time, unless another proposition, which the Chair will state later, would have relieved it from the point of order. It was an effort to provide that the salaries and payments made in this bill should be received in full compensation in accord and satisfaction of the salaries provided by law. It was a notice to the Committee of the Whole of the propositions embraced in the bill to reduce salaries. Now, I think that under the practice of the Committee of the Whole it has been uniformly held that where an amendment subject to a point of order has been inserted in an appropriation bill, no point of order being made against it, and debate had followed, a proposition to amend that amendment, if germane to the matter in the amendment, would be in order, and a point of order against the amendment in the second degree would not lie. The question is whether the amendment now sought to be inserted, taken in connection with the previous amendment, would not fall under the rule applying in that class of cases. But further than that, if the proposition were the one on which a point of order was raised—the proposition of the gentleman from Oklahoma to strike out this provision—it is conceded that the amendment would not be subject to a point of order, because the House may refuse to appropriate a dollar for these inspectors during the fiscal year for which we are now providing.

Now, an appropriation of a less sum for the salary of these officers than that fixed by law would, if this less sum should be refused by these inspectors, still leave them without any reduction of salary, because if they should go on and serve for the year their salaries, in spite of this provision in the bill, would not be reduced, unless they should accept the $2,000 under the conditions named. If they did not choose thus to accept, they could go into the Court of Claims and collect the $3,000.

As already stated, Congress has a right to refuse to appropriate one dollar of this salary of $3,000. The greater must include the less, and therefore Congress has a right to make a limitation upon this appropriation, to fix conditions; and under the rules of the House this is not a change of existing law and, as just stated, it is not a reduction of the salaries unless these men should decide to accept the $2,000 appropriated by the bill.

So the Chair holds that the point of order is not well taken. The amendment is in order.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, this question is now open to discussion under the five-minute rule. I desire to detain the Committee of the Whole but a moment.

Sir, it would be a strange state of things if the legislative body which appropriates money for the support of the Government were to be controlled in its judgment of how much should be appropriated because of the possibility of lawsuits that might arise.

I desire at the close of my remarks to modify in one particular my amendment. I am in favor of a salary of $2,500 for these agents, just what they have received for two years back and received under the appropriations of an overwhelming Democratic majority in this House. If the action of that Democratic House did injustice to these men and deprived them of their legal rights it is not our business to come in and restore them. If the contention made here is right these officers can bring suits for the difference in their claim of salary; a rule of the House does not overthrow any rights under the law. If they are entitled to $3,000 under the law the rule of the last House under which the amount was reduced can not deprive them of it. I desire to modify my amendment (in view of the fact that an amendment for salary of $2,500 has been voted on) by changing the amount to $2,501.

One word upon the merits of the question. When we appropriate for these services $2,500 a year with $4 a day as allowance for expenses, do we not provide a reasonable salary? Sir, if I were here simply for the amount of salary that a member of Congress draws, I would take the pay of one of these agents in preference to that of a Representative. I repeat, it is not our business to redress the wrongs that a Democratic House may have inflicted on Democratic employees. I am opposed to any increase of salaries at this session of Congress. I do not feel bound by what the committee may report in these matters. I mean no discourtesy to the committee. But I can judge what salary ought to be allowed an employee in a case of this kind as well as any member of the committee.

When a committee has investigated a subject requiring time and attention to ascertain facts, as a member of the House I should feel bound in courtesy and fairness to accept the report of the committee. But do we not know about the merits of this case, which is one only of salary, just as well as any member of the committee? As to the statement that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wants this salary fixed at a particular figure, we are not here as his agents; this is not a Corps Legislatif, like that under Napoleon, to record the edicts of any of these Commissioners or of the Secretaries of the Departments.

We judge for ourselves in these matters, and we do not care whether the Commissioner or any Secretary is in favor of what we do or not. It is no concern of ours. We act upon our own understanding of each case that comes before us, and do what we believe to be our duty to all the people.

But I desire to say, and that is all I desired to say after calling the attention of the House to the matter, that the salary proposed seems adequate for the service. There are men all over the country to-day working for one-half of the wages they received, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, at the time this law was passed fixing the compensation of these inspectors. And are we to be controlled in the making of appropriations by the threat of lawsuits growing out of what we do? I vote my judgment on all of these matters, as I doubt not other members do, whether the courts may construe the action to be lawful or unlawful. That is a matter that must be left to the courts in the end anyhow. It would not control my action if a man receiving a salary of $2,000 should come here with a letter from the appointing power saying that it ought to be raised to $3,000.

And I want to say to the members of the committee that it is no want of courtesy to a committee which brings in a report here to find some of its recommendations disregarded by the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to limit all debate on this paragraph and all amendments to twenty minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question. It has been asserted that these inspectors get $4 a day and all their expenses. Now, the five special agents specified on page 8, at the bottom of the page, are provided for at the rate of $3 a day. Do not the inspectors get just the same as the agents?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I do not understand that they get $4 a day. It is a Department regulation, however, and I understand they receive their actual expenses, not to exceed a certain sum. They do not receive, however, $4 a day, I think.

Mr. PICKLER. They certainly do not get more than $3 a day if their pay is on the same basis as that of the special agents.

Mr. GROW. It is the same thing, whether they get $4 or $3 a day. Their expenses are paid, whatever the amount may be.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I called on the Auditor of the Treasury for the Interior Department this morning for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the traveling and incidental expenses, including hotel bills, of these five inspectors paid from the Treasury. He informed me that they received, in addition to their salary, whatever it may be—$2,500 a year for the last two years—first, all of their transportation expenses, including parlor-car and Pullman-car charges, hacking, etc., and then that they received all their personal expenses at the hotels, not to exceed $5 per day, as provided by the regulations in the Department. He further informed me that these charges for personal expenses covered all the time they are on duty outside of Washington, and that they were held to be on duty all the time they were absent from home. If an inspector, for example, was appointed from New York, he was held to be on duty when absent from his home in that State, and his expenses went on all the time that he was away from New York, which amounted practically to the whole year.

I inquired as to the amounts which were paid to these gentlemen for expenses during the last fiscal year. I was promised an itemized statement of these, but as yet it has not been received. I learned, however, that the amount advanced the inspectors for these charges was in the neighborhood of $1,400 each, although very likely all of this was not used. That would make the salary, including traveling expenses (if the salary was fixed at $3,000), at least $4,000 a year, or, deducting the amount paid for traveling expense and including only board and lodging, at least $3,500. In other words, in estimating the salary and determining what is an appropriate salary for these officials, we should take into consideration the fact that they are boarded by the Government at good hotels, in addition to their salaries; and in considering the question of salaries you should bear in mind that the salary of $2,500 for an Indian inspector is equivalent to at least $3,000 for any other official who pays his own board and expenses.

I believe that the post-office inspectors have only about $1,600 compensation and expenses. So it will be seen that if we give these officials $2,500 a year, in view of the facts I have stated, we give them a larger salary than any other officials of the Government who are required to be on traveling duty; almost more than any of the officials of the Government except a few of the highest paid in the service.

Now, I am disposed to be very liberal in this matter, and if we make the salaries of these inspectors $2,500, as they have been for two years past, considering the fact that we practically board these men at an expense of at least $500 each, it seems to me that this ought to be satisfactory.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the chairman of this committee said at the beginning of the debate that he had not investigated the matter for himself, but knew only what the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have said in regard to the matter, and undoubtedly these general representations were made, and they seemed to be entirely satisfactory to the committee, just as they have often seemed to myself when I have had charge of matters of this kind when on appropriation committees, but subsequently I have ascertained, on a more careful investigation, that there were facts which had not been communicated, that tended materially to change my view of the matter—in view of these considerations, it seems to me that, under all the circumstances, the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to be willing to concede that $2,500 a year, taking into consideration the board and traveling expenses paid these officials, ought to be ample compensation, it being really a much higher salary then we pay the post-office inspectors, and a much higher salary than we pay any other gentlemen who are performing duties of this character for the Government.

We ought to settle down to the conviction that when we have done what the last Congress did in two appropriation bills, and have given these gentlemen $2,500 a year, and provided for their board when on duty, which covers most of the year, we have done all that in reason ought to be asked.

Mr. GROW. I changed that to $2,500.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think when we do what was done by the last Congress, we do substantially everything that ought to be asked for these officials by any gentlemen who may be their friends and who may desire to extend to them all the advantages that may reasonably belong to them.

Mr. GROW. My amendment is now for $2,500.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the merits of the proposition. It is conceded on all hands that this salary is fixed by law at $3,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, you have heard, and so have all the members who have been here any considerable time, a great many criticisms on that side against individuals on this side—against so-called cheeseparing by cutting off the amounts of salaries. Now, here is a case, and I put it to any fair-minded man, because we ought to look at it as business men, dealing fairly with each other and with public officers—I put it to you now: Here are five men, who were appointed to these offices at a salary fixed by law. They were appointed for a term of four years—appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They entered upon the discharge of their duties at this fixed salary. Of course I admit that you have the right to abolish the office if it is unnecessary, but I am just appealing to you now as fair men. These men went into the discharge of the duties of these positions at $3,000. The Committee on Indian Affairs, and that is the committee whose duty here is to investigate the question, have reported a bill appropriating for the salary as fixed by law. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] talks about everybody knowing about this. I have no idea that the gentleman himself knows what these Indian agents do. I do not know myself.

Mr. BOWERS. They are having an almighty good time, I will tell you.

Mr. CRISP. I want to show you how erroneous it is for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say we all know as much about these Indian inspectors as the Indian Committee know. He is mistaken. He does not know where they go or anything about it; but the Indian Committee is charged with the duty of ascertaining about these things. That is their business. They are the eyes and the ears of the House in respect to this matter. My friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] went this morning to an Auditor. He did not go to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. DINGLEY. I went to find out how much was audited and paid; and as the Auditor has charge of auditing all accounts of the Interior Department he was the proper officer to call upon.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; the gentleman did not go to the Secretary of the Interior, but he went to an auditor who audits the accounts. He did not go to ascertain the necessity for this work or the character of men necessary to discharge the work, the confidence reposed in them, the ability necessary. He did not do that, but he went to the Auditor to find out, not how much more salary the officers have drawn, because they can not draw any more, but he went to find out what their allowance was. That allowance is what each officer actually paid out, that is all. The officer does not make a dollar out of it. He has to swear to every dollar paid out. It is not like our mileage when we come here. We draw at one rate and pay at another. These men paid out every dollar for which they got a return. Now, what figure does that cut? My friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, can tell you better than I can the character of the duties these men have to perform and the responsibility which rests upon them, and it looks a little odd to me to find gentlemen on the other side of the House who have usually been in favor of reasonable salaries for reasonable work putting the House in the attitude now of cutting down this particular salary and giving no reason on earth for it. You might just as well cut down the salary of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] as a member of Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the figure which we propose is precisely what the last Congress appropriated, over which the gentleman from Georgia presided.

Mr. CRISP. But has the gentleman from Maine arrived at that condition of mind where he is willing to say, if I admit that the last Congress did wrong, that two wrongs make a right?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, not at all. I take it that the gentleman from Georgia was perfectly satisfied with the action of the last Congress, and as he had control of that Congress it is reasonable to suppose that he did not disapprove of the action taken two years ago, especially when that action was reaffirmed one year ago.

Mr. CRISP. Gentlemen on that side are doing what they have often done, criticised the cutting of salaries and when they are in power doing the very same thing. But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has been here many years, and I question whether he ever knowingly or intentionally voted before in his life to cut a salary below the amount fixed by law.

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, I have, a great many times; and two years ago, as well as last year, I stood by the committee, which the gentleman from Georgia appointed, in making the salary of Indian inspectors $2,500.

Mr. CRISP. But the gentleman's clarion voice was not heard here appealing to his party to cut salaries. On the contrary, the cut has been here, and the opposition has been there. Now, if the gentleman from New York wants to ask me a question.

Mr. QUIGG. I wanted to know if it occurred to the gentleman from Georgia to make the suggestion which he now makes, when he was Speaker of the House, to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the last House; and if so, I shall not blame the gentleman from Georgia for what the last Congress did.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, "when the gentleman from Georgia" was Speaker of the House "the gentleman from Georgia" believed that each committee of the House could manage its own business without any suggestions from the Speaker of the House. [Loud general applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. How much time is there left?

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman from Georgia made them, and knew how they would work when he had made them.

The CHAIRMAN. There are five minutes remaining.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to have the attention of the committee for a few minutes only upon this proposition. This question was before this committee yesterday, and after a full and fair discussion the motion to reduce the salaries to $2,500 was voted down. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, under inspiration from a source that I will not now name, comes before the committee this morning and proposes to increase that salary $1, so as to force another vote, which is a factional opposition to the Committee on Indian Affairs, in my judgment.

Mr. GROW. Will you allow me to ask you a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted now.

Mr. GROW. As a personal explanation. It was on my own inspiration.

Mr. HOPKINS. This must not come out of my time.

Mr. GROW. Then the gentleman ought not to make an imputation.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, the statute that is before me fixes the salary at $3,000. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] who sits before me undertakes to convey an impression to this body that they get $1,400 in addition to that, which swells their salary to something like $4,400.

Mr. DINGLEY. No; I did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. HOPKINS. The statute which controls the Department, as well as those in it, says in regard to the expenses the following:

Each inspector shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 and his necessary traveling expenses, which shall not exceed 10 cents per mile for actual travel while in the discharge of his duty, a statement of which expenses as to each inspector shall accompany the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior.

I very much prefer, Mr. Chairman, the report of the Secretary of the Interior, with the sworn statement of these inspectors, as to their actual expenses, by name, than to go to any subordinate officer of the Government to find the amount of money that has been expended by any one of these men. If the gentleman from Maine desired to get his information, as familiar as he is with the statutes, why did he not take the last report of the Secretary of the Interior as to their expenses, instead of going to the Auditor this morning, who made a statement to him and might make a different one to me, or to any other gentleman, if a call should be made upon him this afternoon? Now, what I insist is this, that the language of the statute fixes the amount of the salary, and so long as the Committee on Indian Affairs propose to follow the law after a fair and full examination of the subject, we should not be led astray by a statement that $1,400 in addition are paid to these men. Everybody who knows anything about it knows that not one dollar of this amount, whether $14 or $1,400, goes into the pockets of the inspectors.

Mr. DINGLEY. He is paid board.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is money he actually expends. Now, what is there about these fine hotels? You would suppose from the statement of the gentleman from Maine that these gentlemen were luxuriating in a hotel like the Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York or the Palmer House in Chicago. Not at all. They are men who are sent out upon the outskirts of civilization; men sent into dangerous parts of the country with great responsibilities and a vast territory to cover. They are men who, instead of living in the manner described by my friend from Maine, have to rough it as men do often in the Territories.

I know, Mr. Chairman, from past experience something of these officers.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. I know it requires a high degree of intelligence. I know it requires great judgment and discretion; that it requires ability that $3,000 is a small compensation for. You must remember, gentlemen, that these offices were regarded when they were created as important offices, from the fact that they are made Presidential offices, and the appointees are required to be passed upon, not only by the President, who appoints them, but they are subject to confirmation by the Senate of the United States. As much care is taken in their selection and their confirmation as is usual in the appointment of a Cabinet officer.

Now, I say, from the experience that I have had with these men in years past, that instead of their getting too large salaries, their salaries are meager compared with the ability, the experience, and the intelligence required for the performance of their duties.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes of the remaining time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. When these inspectors were first authorized they were supposed to be important officials. It was substantially before the transcontinental railways were constructed. It was substantially before we had the Indians in hand. At that time no land had ever been allotted to a single Indian. But as the years have rolled round there has been an absolute revolution in the Indian service, and I know what these inspectors do. Year after year I have kept track of them, and, measuring my words, I say that, considering the importance of the duties now performed by them, whatever this committee may do, my deliberate judgment is that they are the best-paid officials in the employ of the Government for the service they perform when you pay them $2,500 a year and all expenses. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no antagonism to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have great sympathy with my friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] in wishing to see committees sustained, because it happens to be my lot, as it has been for many years, to stand with and for committees; but yet, while I have no antagonism to my friend personally, and while I have no antagonism to his committee, my judgment as a member of the House is, without intending to reflect in any way upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, that on the whole $2,500 a year is pay enough for these inspectors, and, again disclaiming any desire to reflect upon the committee reporting this bill, I shall so vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just a word in conclusion, Mr. Chairman. I am glad to learn from my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the Pacific railways have been constructed since 1873, the year in which these inspectors were provided for by law. I had an idea that those railways had been constructed prior to that time. [Laughter.]

In reference to the suggestion of my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that $5 a day is expended in hotel bills by these inspectors——

Mr. DINGLEY. Not exceeding that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill proposes to appropriate but $7,000 for expenses, $1,000 of which is to pay expenses already incurred, so that there will be but $6,000 to pay the expenses of five agents, and if they pay $5 a day for hotel expenses during the year, as my friend says, that will amount to $9,000, or half as much again as this appropriation; so, Mr. Chairman, I believe that what these inspectors really do pay is not $5 a day on an average, or even one-half that sum. Moreover, the gentleman from Maine suggests that the Auditor audits their hotel bills at all times except when they are at home.

Now, the very next section of this bill provides for paying the hotel bills of these inspectors while they are located in the city of Washington under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, which the Auditor has heretofore refused to allow. One further suggestion, Mr. Chairman. No amount has yet been appropriated to pay the expenses of these inspectors for the coming year, and judging from the opposition to this part of the bill manifested by my distinguished friends from Illinois and from Maine, an attempt will be made to strike out the provision for that purpose, so that there will be no appropriation made for the expenses of these inspectors during the coming year. On the main question I have nothing to add to what I said yesterday, that I believe the committee was right in its decision to recur to the old law and give these inspectors the $3,000 a year which the law provides for, and further, that if the salary is to be changed it ought to be changed, not in the manner proposed here by taking these officers by the throat and saying, "Take $2,500 a year or nothing," but by amending the general statute which fixes these salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this paragraph has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 57, noes 78; so the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph and amendment was limited to twenty minutes, and the time has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. All amendments, too, are ended by the adoption of that motion, I believe, and the question now is on the motion to strike out.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; you can not cut off amendments in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are not cut off, but debate upon the paragraph is ended. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] moves to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

Mr. SKINNER. I withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment to strike out the whole paragraph.

The question being taken, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 89.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we now return to page 6, to dispose of the question reserved at the suggestion of the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, including also expenses of going to and going from the seat of Government, and while remaining there under orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $7,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to settle claims of Indian inspectors for traveling and other expenses heretofore incurred while on duty in Washington under orders of the Secretary of the Interior, where such claims have been disallowed or suspended by the said accounting officers: Provided further, That the sum expended for this purpose shall not exceed $1,000.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I rise to make a point of order. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] desire to make such a point?

Mr. BOWERS. No, sir; I rose to occupy five minutes in debate.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that the portion of this paragraph beginning with the word "Provided," in line 18, and extending to and including the word "dollars" at the close of the paragraph, is a provision not authorized by law—is new legislation, and therefore not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] on this point.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have nothing to say on the point of order. This is, I suppose, new legislation, and out of order if the point is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman concedes that there is no existing law authorizing this?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $1,500: Provided, That he shall be allowed $3 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare: And provided further, That he shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MILES. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 5 and 6, the words "five hundred"; so that the clause will read:

For necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $1,000.

The amendment of Mr. MILES was read by the Clerk.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, in this case there is not, as there was in the case of the Indian inspectors, any existing law or statute fixing this salary; and here, it seems to me, is a fine opportunity for this House to practice economy. In the last appropriation bill I find the appropriation for this purpose was $1,000. Here is a proposition for an increase of $500. It seems to me unnecessary, and unless some satisfactory explanation be made I must insist on the amendment.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, my excuse for asking attention at this time is that the present amendment is in line with a bill which I introduced here in the early stages of this Congress. I refer to House bill 4141, which provides for a reduction of all Federal salaries upon a horizontal "Bill-Morrison" basis, a reduction of 33⅓ per cent. In introducing that bill, however, I provided a saving clause that whenever this country shall come to the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 the old salaries may be reestablished.

My purpose in introducing that bill (although I come from North Carolina) was not for "buncombe," but for practical effect, to meet the deficiency in the Treasury and at the same time to exemplify to the country this just principle that if the growers of wheat, the growers of cotton, the growers of corn—if the laborers in agriculture and in various branches of manufacturing industry—are compelled to accept gold prices for their labor and their products the official classes of the country may take notice that the time may come when they shall be compelled by the sovereign will of the people to accept the same scale of prices for their services.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SKINNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman states that he introduced that bill early in the session?

Mr. SKINNER. I did.

Mr. PICKLER. Has the gentleman been before the committee to which the bill was referred, to advocate his measure?

Mr. SKINNER. There is a member from North Carolina upon that committee——

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. SKINNER. And I have urged him to secure a report.

Mr. PICKLER. Have you ever been before the committee yourself?

Mr. SKINNER. No, sir; I have not. And I will anticipate the gentleman by saying that I did not introduce the bill either to popularize myself at home or to unpopularize myself on this floor, for I am a high-priced man; I believe in reasonable and even high salaries under proper circumstances. When we have the conditions out of which high prices can properly arise and be paid, this House will find me liberal in all respects; but I can not permit the discussion to proceed along the line of reducing salaries without calling the attention of legislators to this question and serving notice upon them that the day will come when their salaries will also be reduced to correspond with the price of labor and the price of products.

In regard to these special inspectors, I wish to say that when they receive $2,500 as fixed in the last two appropriation bills, together with mileage and their expenses at hotels, they receive a larger salary than any Congressman receives.

And, Mr. Chairman, I have this much further to say, that if the leader of the Republican party will permit the Democrats, in connection with a part of the Republicans, to put them in such a position as this, raising salaries in this respect when prices are reduced all through the country, they are placing themselves in a very unfortunate position, to say nothing of its being bad politics, and they will hear from it in the next campaign.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina this inquiry: Is it not true that the large majority that was given for the increase of salary in this bill on the last vote came from the Democratic side of the House? Two to one, I should say.

Mr. SKINNER. Well, I can not say anything as to that.

Mr. McMILLIN. You have more than two to one majority.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, very large latitude has been given to the members in the discussion of points of order to-day, circling around a great deal of discussion on nearly all political points. But, in view of the fact that there has been a general expression of uncertainty as to the point of order raised on yesterday by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], for the information of the members of the House—the new members and to refresh the memory of the older members—I desire to state the facts in connection with the point of order, simply because my friend from South Dakota, in the very nature of things, at the very next session of Congress will again attempt this amendment and again claim that it is not existing law.

Briefly, let me say, that on the 27th day of February, 1892, the House passed this amendment, on an appropriation bill——

Mr. PICKLER. On an appropriation bill?

Mr. BOWERS. I said on an appropriation bill—on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PICKLER. That is what I thought.

Mr. BOWERS. I will read the provision:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the President shall detail officers of the United States Army to act as Indian agents at all agencies where vacancies from any cause may hereafter occur.

That went to the Senate, and on April 6 it passed the Senate with an amendment providing that whenever the President should be of opinion that the good of the service required him to appoint a civilian, he might do so. There were some twenty-three or twenty-four of these officers named, and not a charge has been made against them. Their offices have been faithfully administered, and the duties thoroughly, faithfully, and well performed.

In the statutes of the Fifty-second Congress, page 120, will be found the statute to which I have referred, the same that I have just read, that after the passage of the act the President should detail army officers for these positions, etc.

Mr. PICKLER. That is simply the language of the appropriation bill.

Mr. BOWERS. It is the statutes of the Fifty-second Congress.

Now, I call the attention of members to this fact, in order to save a little time in the next session, when my friend brings up that matter again, as he has got to do, and as he will do every time he is here, and undertake to say that he did not know it was statute law.

Mr. PICKLER. It will become law at this session, in my opinion.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, I can not say as to that. I am not a prophet. But we will see.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, just a word in explanation of the provision.

The appropriation for the current fiscal year for traveling and other incidental expenses of Indian schools was $1,000. That appropriation was entirely exhausted before the 1st day of February of this year, so that for the last five months of the fiscal year our superintendent, for whom we appropriated $3,000, is not provided with the means to inspect the schools, and it seemed to the committee absolutely absurd to have an efficient and high-priced superintendent and then fail to furnish him with the means to visit the schools, as he ought to do, and make proper inspection of them. Experience having demonstrated that $1,000 was not sufficient to carry him along for seven months of the last year, we concluded to give him $1,500 and see if it would not carry him over the entire twelve months.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it seems very important that all of the appropriations that involve traveling expenses in the Interior Department should be increased this year. This is, of course, as we all understand, an important year in the United States, and the appointees of the Interior Department ought to have every possible facility to go to every point in the United States where there are matters of interest involved. A Presidential year is always an interesting year to superintendents and inspectors appointed by the Interior Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think if my friend from Ohio was acquainted with the present superintendent of schools in the Interior Department he would hardly make that insinuation. It may apply to some others, but certainly not to him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is a general increase all along the line for the traveling men in these Departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For pay of one superintendent of irrigation, $3,000.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee——

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make a point of order upon that provision.

Mr. BRODERICK. Let that be reserved.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have no objection, if the gentleman can not make his speech on the next item.

Mr. BRODERICK. I do not care to make a speech. I wish to obtain information.

Mr. CANNON. This paragraph creates a new office, that of commissioner of irrigation, and I do not think we had better do it this year. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. BRODERICK. I suppose this is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, this does create an office that does not now exist. If I can say one word with reference to the facts while speaking on the point of order, I will suggest that it seemed to the committee, upon full investigation, that it was very necessary to provide for this officer. A large sum of money is appropriated for irrigation purposes; quite a considerable sum of money is expended from tribal funds in irrigation, and it seemed to us desirable that the money should be expended under the most efficient management possible.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Following the effective and telling arguments of the late Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], under the rules of this House, I will suggest that it is perfectly competent for the Indian Committee to have a bill referred and reported and to enact this legislation independently.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from Illinois support the bill then?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I rather think not; but it is perfectly competent to proceed in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of irrigation, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $2,000.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on that also, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of five special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for, and for pay of the five special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $40,000.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 4 on page 9 the following:
"For expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $4,000."

Mr. PITNEY. I should like to reserve the point of order until that matter can be explained.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want simply to say to the committee that this proposition does not establish any new commission. The "commission of citizens" was established in 1869, upon the recommendation of President Grant, who, as you all know, was no theorist. He had had a great deal of experience in life upon the frontier, and knew precisely what he was talking about. It was at his request that this commission was established, and the commission now exists under authority of law. From 1869 to the present time this commission has received an appropriation for its expenses every year. It has survived every assault brought to bear upon it by the friends of the Indian agents and the Indian contractors, and has saved this Government thousands of dollars, as well as rendered signal benefit to the Indians. The bill which is before the House to-day has no clause in it anywhere making appropriation for the expenses of this commission.

We have heard a great deal within two days about respecting existing law in appropriation bills. If we have a commission that we do not want it seems to me the proper way is to bring in a bill to abolish it, but it never has been the policy of the Republican party to starve out a commission by refusing to make an appropriation to support it.

Mr. Chairman, this commission is made up of some of the most respected citizens of this country. The chairman of the commission is the president of Amherst College. Mr. Darwin R. James, president of the Board of Trade of New York, and once a distinguished member of this House, is a member of this commission. Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, is also a member of the commission. Mr. Francis E. Leupp, who is one of the most intelligent newspaper correspondents at this capital, is another member of the commission, and these are simply samples of the nine men who make up the board. They give their time without any compensation. They give their services to the Government, and these services have almost revolutionized the condition of Indian affairs.

The commission found when it began its work that under the old existing law such things as partnerships between the agent and trader, or the agent and contractors; receipting for supplies never delivered; overestimating the weight of cattle for the contractor; taking vouchers in blank, to be filled with fraudulent sums; carrying false names upon the rolls; paying employees for whom there was no employment; reporting employees at higher or lower salaries than provided by law; farming out the appointments controlled by the agent; using annuity goods for the agents or employees; trading with the Indians; selling them their own goods; selling annuity goods to the whites, and other forms of fraud were practiced, and largely through the instrumentality of this commission these frauds were stricken down. It oftentimes found that some of these inspectors, these patriots about whose salaries we have heard such tearful and eloquent remarks in this debate, were in partnership with the Indian contractors, and derived a portion of the spoils of the contract.

This commission has not merely done great good in connection with these business matters, but especially in the education of the Indians they have been of the greatest service. When it was established there were no Government schools whatever. There were no means provided for the education of the Indians except by mission schools supported by churches. Largely through its instrumentality education among the Indians has been built up, until last year we had in Government schools 16,584 pupils and in the contract schools 5,880 pupils; so that we have to-day a nearly complete system of education established among the Indians; and it seems to me it is a very inopportune time when it is proposed to abolish, at one stroke, or at least by degrees, the contract schools and make necessary more extended Government schools, to refuse to appropriate this mere pittance to sustain so beneficent a commission. It seems to me that these public-spirited men who have rendered such excellent service should be supported by this House, and instead of being made the target of attack, they should receive the thanks of Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Chairman, as a Democrat I desire to say a few words in favor of the retention of the board of Indian commissioners. Among the changes in existing law noted in the report by the gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee, there was no mention made of the salient change in existing law which is a virtual abolition of this board of eminent and philanthropic gentlemen. I shall endeavor to show the committee why these gentlemen should be retained in office; and I claim that the board should be continued, for two reasons. The first is, the welfare of the Indians, to aid in the protection and care of "these wards of the nation," as they were termed by General Grant when President of the United States; and the second reason is the prevention of fraud and fraudulent practices by contractors through collusion between the contractor and the agent. It is proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to abolish this board of ten gentlemen, a board which has existed for the last twenty-seven years. It can not be urged that this board should be wiped out on the ground claimed, that it is under a principle of economy in which the committee framed this bill. I have noted on the margin of the page a few of the changes, all in the way of advancement of salaries.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him? In the next item to that to which the gentleman is referring there is a reduction of $10,000, and the reductions of the bill amount to $130,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I hope my time will be extended if I am to be interrupted.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me one second?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Very well.

Mr. MILES. I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Indian Affairs to the fact that the reduction to which he has just referred is along the line so much favored on that side of the House, to wit, when it touches the farmer, and that is the only reduction that I have been able to find in this bill. When they propose to employ these practical farmers they cut their salaries down from $70 to $60 per month; and the farmer, as usual, is the target of Republican legislation.

Mr. BOWERS rose.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I decline to be interrupted unless my time can be extended.

Mr. BOWERS. Indian farmers!

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. In answer to the gentleman from New York, I desire to state that I note that he has made this one reduction. I notice that he has reduced the appropriation for stockmen and practical farmers from $70,000 to $60,000. I also note that the pay of interpreters has been increased from $10,000 to $12,000; that the pay of the five Indian inspectors, as the committee is already aware, has been increased from $12,500 to $15,000; that $1,000 is specifically appropriated in payment of rejected claims, on the bottom of page 7; that the appropriation last year of $1,000 for traveling expenses for the superintendent of Indian schools has been increased to $1,500; that the committee have provided for a new office, that of superintendent of irrigation, with a salary of $3,000, and traveling expenses of $2,000; that the appropriation for the repair of buildings has been increased from $25,000 to $30,000; that the appropriation for matrons has been increased from $10,000 to $15,000, and that the expense in the purchase of goods and supplies has been increased from $35,000 to $40,000; and yet they make a kind of showing of economy, and they practically destroy this board of gentlemen who give all their time for nothing, who devote a large portion of their time every year to visiting the Indian schools and to inspecting the supplies, and because they receive the pitiful sum of $4,000—$2,000 of which goes to clerk hire and $2,000 spent on actual expenses, railroad travel—the committee says that they abolish this board on the ground of economy or on the ground that the board is useless.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PITNEY. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. This appropriation has been omitted this year for the first time. It is true that attempts have been made in the House in prior years to leave it out, but it has always been reinstated in the Senate. Now, I think we should appear in a great deal better light before the American people if we struck no blow, if we made no raid, upon a board of this character. The gentlemen who have filled positions on this board ever since the time of President Grant have been men of business capacity, men of distinction, men of eminence in their various communities; and at this point let me state the fact that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are both in favor of the retention of the board of Indian commissioners. Let us see who are the gentlemen whom it is proposed to legislate out of office, because the failure to appropriate this small sum of $4,000 for expenses will amount virtually to the abolition of the board of Indian commissioners. The chairman of the board is the president of Amherst College. The secretary, General Whittlesey, the gentleman who receives the salary of $2,000 a year, is an ex-Union officer, and I certainly think that every gentleman on the other side of the House as well as every gentleman on this side ought to be willing to vote for the retention of a board the secretary of which is an ex-Union officer. The third member is Mr. William H. Lyon, of Brooklyn, a merchant well known to a number of the members of this House, a man who started as a poor boy, who devoted himself to mercantile pursuits and accumulated a large fortune, thereby demonstrating his business capacity. Mr. James, another member of the board living in the city of Brooklyn, is a constituent of my colleague, Mr. FISCHER. These gentlemen are both practical merchants and men of large business qualifications.

The next member is Mr. Albert K. Smiley, who is well known for the practical interest he has taken for many years past in the welfare of the Indians. He lives in the State of New York, at Lake Mohonk, and travels in California during a portion of the year visiting the various Indian schools from time to time. Mr. Jacobs is a prominent business man of Ann Arbor, Mich., and Mr. Garrett is a public-spirited citizen of Philadelphia. The bishop of North Dakota, Bishop Walker, and Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, are also members of the board. These gentlemen are bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but the board itself is, of course, nonsectarian, and Mr. Francis E. Leupp is a distinguished journalist and writer, now living in this city. I have gone through the list, Mr. Chairman, in order to show the committee the character of the gentlemen of whom this board is composed. Suffice it to say that they serve without a dollar of pay; that they give their services, which would be worth perhaps $100 a day each to the welfare of the Indians for nothing. But, Mr. Chairman, the great argument in favor of the retention of this board is that it exercises a supervision over the contractors and prevents that collusion between the agent and the contractor which had subsisted for many years prior to the creation of the commission. For that reason I say to you as practical business men, as men in favor of honest government, as men opposed to abuses and fraudulent practices, this board should be continued by Congress, and no steps should be taken in this House to attack an organization which has existed with manifest benefit, not only to the Indians, but to the whole community, for the last twenty-seven years.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] that the point of order which he has reserved does not lie, because this item was in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. PITNEY. I have not made any point of order yet, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will see its way clear to accept the amendment that is proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL]. I noticed that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in his opening remarks suggested that the reason why this commission was practically abolished by the bill was that the committee's policy was not to relieve the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from their just responsibility; but I want to point out to the gentleman that the responsibility of those officials is not lessened by the existence of this commission, but, on the contrary, is accentuated.

When this commission has performed its work and has called attention, as it has done again and again, to cases of collusion and fraud on the part of Indian agents and Indian contractors, the responsibility of the Secretary of the Interior is much increased, and, in the face of the reports made by this board, he has never dared to fail to support the commission in its recommendations. I want to say also that the existence of this commission, the members of which work without salary and travel all over this country, spending a great deal more of their own money than the $4,000 appropriated to pay their expenses, is worth more to the Indians and worth more to the public service than all the inspectors that the Indian Department has in its service. There can be no real opposition on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the continuance of this commission. Its members, I repeat, work without salary. They do their work efficiently. Their reports are full of useful suggestions which are constantly taken into consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs and by the House in framing legislation. The excellence of their work has never been in any way impugned, and it does seem to me that the committee ought to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and ought to fasten the responsibility, as the existence of this commission does, upon the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FISCHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say but one word with reference to this amendment. My colleague from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] has alluded to the fact that Mr. James, one of the members of this commission, is a resident of my district. Let me add that another member—Mr. Lyon—also resides in my district. I was absent from the committee room when this section was taken up, and as I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I want to say now that had I been present I should have urged the retention in the bill of the provision continuing this commission, knowing so much, as I do, of the work carried on by this organization. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] that the work done by these commissioners is far more valuable, far more effectual, far more beneficial, than the work of the inspectors. These commissioners are gentlemen who stand high in the community. Some of them are merchants. They are all men of eminence, and they serve without pay. They devote all of their time that is absolutely necessary for the performance of the duties of the office to those duties, and they do it gratuitously.

We treat them very shabbily indeed when we refuse to allow them the money absolutely necessary for the traveling expenses incurred by them in carrying on this work. It would be just as wise to abolish these offices entirely as to deprive the officers of the money necessary for the purpose of paying their expenses. To discontinue this appropriation means practically the abolition of the commission.

The chairman of the committee was unable to give attention to this subject, inasmuch as I returned to the committee room after the committee had passed upon this clause. But it is not new legislation. It has been in former bills. The proposition is simply to reenact old legislation. And I think I can safely say that when the chairman of this committee is heard from there will be no division of opinion on the question.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, when I was on the floor speaking of the expenses of the Indian inspectors I intimated that the Auditor for the Interior Department had promised me an itemized statement, and in the absence of that itemized statement I gave the facts in a general way as I had understood them from him. I have now that itemized statement and will make it a part of my remarks.

Allow me to state, in a general way, that the expenses of the Indian commissioners amount to about $1,100 a year each; $500 each is the amount which is chargeable to board and lodging. This is that part of the expenses which practically increases their salaries to that extent, as other officials pay their own board and lodging. In justice to those gentlemen I insert in my remarks the itemized statement of the Auditor for the Interior Department to which I referred, which is as follows.

Actual and necessary expenses of Indian inspectors during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895.

Name.	Period.	Board and lodging.	All other traveling expenses.	Total.
Thomas P. Smith	July 1, 1894, to Jan. 20, 1895	$350.75	$385.33	$736.08
James McLaughlin	Apr. 1 to June 30, 1895	142.00	132.47	274.47
Paul F. Faison	July 1, 1894, to June 30, 1895	449.95	240.80	690.75
John W. Cadman	do	530.95	211.91	742.86
C. C. Duncan	do	517.05	714.20	1,231.25
Province McCormick	do	611.60	494.94	1,106.54
		2,602.30	2,179.65	4,781.95

In addition to the above amount the sum of $673.91 was allowed on claims of railroad and telegraph companies for expenses of transportation and telegraphing incurred by Indian inspectors during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I think I can support this amendment proposing to allow $4,000 for the expenses of a commission of gentlemen who are to serve gratuitously in the interest of the Indians. I believe that this is about the most respectable part of the whole Indian outfit.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the next paragraph. Here we are stumbling over this four-thousand-dollar appropriation to pay the expenses of a commission whose members receive no salaries and whose work has unquestionably had a beneficial effect upon the Department. Yet I surmise and believe from what has happened in the past that while the pending amendment encounters opposition, the next paragraph of this bill will be passed. It is a paragraph providing an appropriation of $60,000 to pay political farmers. This appropriation has been made from year to year; it is a stereotyped thing. The proposition is to hire these farmers to teach the Indians how to farm and how to take care of their cattle. But, sir, these Indians, taking them from one end of the country to the other, can teach any of these political farmers whom any party in power may appoint much more about farming than the so-called "farmers" can teach the Indians. I know what I am talking about. I am acquainted with a number of these men; I have been on reservations with them. There are plenty of reservations in my district.

Mr. PITNEY. As the gentleman is referring to the next paragraph, which is not yet formally before the committee, I should like to ask him a question. The paragraph provides that nobody shall be employed as one of these farmers or stockmen unless he possesses certain qualifications.

Mr. BOWERS. Exactly; and I assert that there is not one of these men that has qualifications equal to the ordinary Indian whom they are sent to instruct in farming. I make this statement from numerous instances that have come under my personal knowledge I know that these so-called farmers are simply political farmers.

A MEMBER. We have not reached that paragraph yet.

Mr. BOWERS. But I want to call attention to the fact that here we are haggling over an appropriation of $4,000 to be expended in a manner which appears to be appropriate and beneficial, but we shall immediately go on and appropriate $60,000 for some political farmers whose services are perfectly useless and who are assigned to their positions as rewards for political services.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am unwilling to detain the Committee of the Whole; but it seems a matter of justice that something should be stated in justification of the action of the committee in regard to the provision now under consideration.

Too wide a range has been taken in this discussion, especially by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who claims that this commission has to do with the education of the Indian children. I have taken pains to refer to the statute, and it has reference only to the letting or subletting of contracts. These contracts are made annually for the supplies of the Indian Service; and the committee felt justified in placing the responsibility in these matters upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an officer of this Government, who is responsible to the Administration and who ought to assume this responsibility himself, independent of any outside commission which may be appointed to oversee and superintend his action. There is nothing in the law of 1879 extending the jurisdiction of the commission to the subject of education. This, then, Mr. Chairman, explains the motive that governed the committee in making this report.

Mr. Chairman, I feel like saying a word in reply to the gentleman from New York, who has seen fit to charge this committee with submitting an extravagant report. I state to him that the amount of the appropriation this year is something like $400,000 less than it was a year ago under the distinguished leadership of the eminent gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Holman.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GAMBLE. Allow me to finish my statement. I say that the appropriation this year is nearly $400,000 less than the amount of the appropriation last year, except for a contingent recommendation of $250,000 in regard to the Oneida Reservation.

I might state, in conclusion, that no one of these commissioners—and I have no criticism to make upon any of them—resides in my district; so that I am not called upon to defend them.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Will the gentleman, before he takes his seat, yield for one suggestion?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I simply desire to say to the gentleman that I did not claim that this bill was extravagant in its appropriations. I said that certain specific items, which I mentioned, had been increased. But I made no charge of the kind the gentleman criticises.

Mr. GAMBLE. I beg pardon then. I understood the statement differently.

All I intended, Mr. Chairman, in connection with the matter, was to give the reasons which governed the action of the committee, and I felt justified as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs in making the statement I did, to show exactly what our action had been, and am perfectly content now to let this Committee of the Whole House do as it sees fit with reference to the recommendations of the committee. We will be entirely satisfied with their action.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to disagree with our excellent chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the members of the committee. I trust the committee, however, will see its way clearly to make an appropriation for the continuance of the Indian commission. Two of them are my close personal friends and one was my illustrious predecessor here. They are certainly better qualified for the supervision they exercise than a paid agent of the Department. These gentlemen, who are prominent in the walks of life and who have won fortunes in their business affairs on their own account, are certainly far better qualified to investigate the affairs of the Department in connection with the Indians than a three-dollar-a-day paid agent, and knowing their ability I believe that the very best thing to be done is to continue them in their offices.

I trust, I repeat, that the Committee on Indian Affairs will see its way clear to accept the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, before I ask a vote on this proposition, I wish only to say that my colleague [Mr. GAMBLE] from South Dakota has stated the contention so far as the committee is concerned clearly and accurately. He has given the reasons for the action of the committee, as I gave them in presenting the bill in the first instance, when my colleague from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] was not in the House. Hence he did not know that I had explained that provision at the opening of the debate.

He has stated the reasons which impelled the committee to omit the provision from the bill, and in conclusion stated the fact that the Committee on Indian Affairs submitted its position to the full committee of the House, and is ready and willing to take the views of the Committee of the Whole upon this matter as well as upon other matters connected with the bill.

I ask a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $60 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $60,000; and no person shall be employed as such farmer or stockman who has not been at least five years immediately previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming within the State or Territory where such agency is located, and where practicable competent Indians shall be given the preference.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "five," in line 12 of page 9, after the word "least," and insert "two."

Mr. FLYNN. The bill now provides, Mr. Chairman, that nobody shall be eligible to the position named in this paragraph, that is, as a practical farmer in any State or Territory or on any Indian reservation, unless he has resided five years in such State or Territory. In Oklahoma Territory we have been unfortunate in not having men who have resided that long in the Territory who were competent for these places.

The object in putting in five years was to prohibit the sending into the Territory or States of any outsider to act as farmers. This amendment will limit that time to two years, and I think we will accomplish all that was sought to be accomplished in the former legislation by adopting the amendment, because there are men who have been in these Territories or States for two years who are actual settlers who are practical farmers, and who are competent to fill the positions. I think, therefore, it will cover the exact point we were after in fixing the other proposition at five years. Two years' residence will give an indication of good faith, as well as demonstrate a man's ability, if he resides in the community that long. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MILES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice the concluding phrase is that where practicable competent Indians shall be given preference. In practice are they given the preference?

Mr. FLYNN. No, sir.

Mr. MILES. I only asked for information, not knowing the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to resist the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma, for I can see some reason as applied to Oklahoma why it should be adopted, namely, because that Territory has not been settled long enough to make it practicable to obtain farmers to fill these positions after five years' residence.

But I take the floor because I do not wish to have the speech made about ten minutes ago by the gentleman from California to go into the RECORD by itself without explanation. I have no doubt whatever of the accuracy of the picture the gentleman draws, so far as it relates to the Indians of his district or State; but if he were as slightly familiar with the Indians of the plains as I am even with the Digger Indians on the Pacific Coast, he would not undertake to make his general statement applicable to all Indians. There are Indians and Indians. For instance, on the Pacific Coast the Spaniards came there two hundred years ago and occupied the country and in a way civilized these Indians, taught them agriculture, taught them stock raising, and a hundred years ago the Indians of California were pretty good farmers. They may need no instruction now in farming and stock raising.

We have had no hostilities with the Digger Indians of California since the United States possessed that territory, anyhow. The grandfathers of the Indians now in California were pretty well-trained farmers, and what the gentleman said is perhaps true as to them, that they do not need the guidance of these so-called boss farmers to instruct them in agriculture; but that is not the case with the Indians in my district, the most warlike and picturesque Indians now remaining in the United States, namely, the Sioux Indians. Less than twenty years ago they conducted a successful military campaign against the armies of the United States. Within less than twenty years a considerable army of the United States, well equipped, was totally destroyed by these Indians. They have never been civilized or taught agriculture. After the great Custer massacre they were pursued and finally captured, and, as prisoners of war, they were carried down to the reservations where they now are, which reservations amount to little more than military prisons; that is, the Indians are not allowed to leave the reservations without permission. They have been kept on those reservations about sixteen years. They have had very scant opportunities to learn agriculture.

From time immemorial down to less than twenty-five years ago there was no necessity for them to cultivate the soil or to raise stock. The antelope, the elk, and the buffalo were then as abundant on their hunting grounds as steers, sheep, and horses are now on the lands from which we have crowded them. Twenty-five years ago nine-tenths of the territory which I represent was as much an unknown country as the headwaters of the Nile or the Kongo. These Sioux Indians had never come in contact with the whites, until within the last sixteen years, except in warfare. They have never had an opportunity to learn agriculture and stock raising, as there has been no necessity for them to learn anything of the kind when there was an abundance of game for them to live on according to their aboriginal methods of life. But now they have abandoned, as I trust for all time, all hope of ever again successfully going on the warpath. Their young men are willing to learn the methods of civilized life by which our young men similarly situated must earn their living, but they must have teachers. Not having a right to go among the white farmers to work and learn in that way, what other way can they learn unless they are taught. These men who are sent by the Government to teach the Indians in my district I know to be faithful, efficient, and useful men, doing a beneficial and necessary work in instructing these Indians in civilized methods of earning a livelihood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him how many farmers there are in his district?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. My time has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no special information in reference to this item that would give me better knowledge of the subject than my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN], who is also on the committee, and I assume that his amendment is in the interest of the betterment of the service. For that reason I do not oppose the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Has there been a reduction in the pay of farmers to $60 a month?

Mr. SHERMAN. There has; but I will say to my friend that that is simply the maximum. The Commissioner informs us that very few farmers receive more than $60 a month. They range from $25 a month upward. We simply decrease the maximum to $60 a month instead of $75. There were not more than three or four who were paid more than $60 anyway.

Mr. PICKLER. While that may be the case generally, the head farmer ought to be allowed $900 a year, or $75 a month. I offer that as an amendment. I know exactly what these men do, and I fear other gentlemen do not.

Mr. BOWERS. How many head farmers are there?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota that he allow the pending amendment to be voted on. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment after the word "month" in line 8, page 9, inserting the words "except head farmer, who shall, in the discretion of the Secretary, receive not to exceed $75 per month."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will accept that amendment in that form.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 8, after the word "month," insert "except head farmer, who shall, in the discretion of the Secretary, receive not to exceed $75 per month."

Mr. STEELE. That should not be "in the discretion of the Secretary." It should be "in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Mr. BOWERS. Before a vote is taken on this we want some explanation. I want to know how many head farmers there are in addition to these 90 farmers that are provided for in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are none in addition. They are included in that number.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I will give the gentleman an illustration. At the Cheyenne River Agency, in the State of South Dakota, there are 2,500 Indians. What is known as the head farmer is the chief farmer at that agency. That agency extends over a territory 200 miles, probably, in length and 150 miles in breadth. These Indians live on different portions of the reservation on which this head farmer is located. He is always a white man, so far as I have known. He is called the head farmer. He is selected as a practical farmer, and goes about this reservation from place to place, and instructs these Indians in farming. I am told, Mr. Chairman, that he settles a great many little difficulties with the Indians. If they want plows or supplies; if they want a wagon or anything that the Government furnishes them—and the Indian wants everything he can get, and is very different from the white man in that respect [laughter]—these men settle a great many of these matters that the agents can not possibly settle.

Mr. FISCHER. That is the reason you call him a "head" farmer.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; he is a man of judgment, and is well worth $1,000 a year.

Mr. BOWERS. How many are there of these head farmers?

Mr. PICKLER. About one to every agency.

Mr. BOWERS. About 200 of them.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I see that this section provides:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen in addition to the agency farmers now employed.

I would like to ask the gentleman if this illustration he has given would apply to this section?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know whether it would or not. The head farmer comes in under some other provision.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman at what compensation the head farmer is now employed?

Mr. PICKLER. At $900 a year, $75 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have the amendment read for information.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SHERMAN. That ought to read "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" instead of "Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Division.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. TALBERT. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Division.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman ask for a division?
Mr. PICKLER. I call for a division.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 31.
So the amendment was rejected.
Mr. TALBERT. I offer the following amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 7, strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy," and in line 10 strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy."

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, my reason for this is to put in the appropriation bill the same sum that was put in the appropriation last year. I notice in looking over this bill that there seems to be a disposition to increase the salaries of every class except that of the farmer. There is an increase given to the judges of the Indian courts, to the Indian commissioners, and the disposition is to increase the salaries of all of them until you reach the salary of the farmer, and then the disposition is, as is always the case, it seems to me, in this House, to decrease the farmer's salary and give him an unfair showing with other classes of citizens. I am opposed to this, Mr. Chairman, and in justice to the farmer I offer this amendment. All other classes of citizens, it seems, must have protection and help at the hands of this Congress. When corporations, or railroads, or any monopoly come in here and ask for anything, it goes through like a hurricane; but when you strike the farmer you must come down upon him and still increase his burden and reduce his salary and his profit. I do not think it is right. Why, Mr. Chairman, you might stop the court, you might stop the lawyer from pleading, you might stop the doctor from giving pills, but when you stop the plows the fire goes out in the furnace and everything else stops, and why is it? It is because the farmer is the foundation stone of all other industries.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. You have followed the plow some yourself? You are a farmer, I understand?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. On how many farms do you know of a farmer, a hired hand, who gets $60 a month?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, of course, I say none, but these are overseers or general managers of these farms.

Mr. BOWERS. Does not the gentleman know that where they are regularly hired they do not get more than $20 a month?

Mr. TALBERT. I know, sir, superintendents who get $120 to $200 a month. These are gentlemen who must be experts in the business. They must have information in the matter of farming that does not exist in the brain of a common plowman, much less of an Indian, and might be able to teach the gentleman from California, as he seems to underestimate himself. If he comes along, I think he could learn something from this class of farmers. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWERS. He might be able to teach me; but I do not think you can teach me anything about practical farming. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from California is a farmer who works for $5,000 a year. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, no.

Mr. TALBERT. I think you [Mr. BOWERS] claim to be something of an agriculturist yourself. I am astonished at the attitude of a gentleman who is himself drawing $5,000 salary here wanting to give somebody else only $60. [Great laughter.] I think I could teach you better manners than that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWERS. Many of them are working for $12 and $15 a month. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I think if you will give some of these men an opportunity they will cut you out of your job. [Great laughter.] And that is what the gentleman seems to fear.

Mr. BOWERS. You know that a great many of these "farmers" are nothing but political hacks. [Great laughter, and general disorder in the Hall, during which the Chairman vigorously rapped for order.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. TALBERT. I thought the Chair was out of order [laughter], as he makes so much fuss with the gavel that we can not hear. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire that the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken; and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 5 down to and including line 15.

The question was taken; and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOWERS. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "sixty," in line 7, and insert "sixty-five," and strike out "sixty," in line 10, and insert "sixty-five."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be factious about this paragraph, but I do not think the committee ought to object to this amendment. As to these head farmers—if this section applies to them, and I suppose it does—I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has just said. I do not know why these reductions should come upon the men who are classed as farmers. As I have already stated, at the agency to which I alluded a while ago the farmer gets $75 a month, and I suppose it is just such farmers that this bill reduces to $60 a month. Now, you can not get the right kind of a man for that service for $60 a month.

Mr. BOWERS. Farmers?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; farmers.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman please state to the best of his knowledge the going rate of wages for farmers throughout the United States, in his State, and in the West generally—the wages for a good farm hand, who oftentimes knows more than the boss?

Mr. PICKLER. Farming hands in my State, during the plowing season, get from $20 to $25 a month, and during harvest time they are paid $2.50 a day, and sometimes more.

Mr. BOWERS. But take it all the year round, what pay does a farmer get?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know of any hiring of farmers all the year round.

Mr. BOWERS. Is it not a fact that the average pay in the United States of a competent farm hand will be found not to exceed $20 per month? And if that is so, will the gentleman tell us why when such a man attempts to farm for Indians he should receive $60 or $70 a month?

Mr. PICKLER. I am not denying that you might hire farm hands for $20 a month, but I do say that it would be very poor policy to employ a man to teach Indians farming that you could get for $20 a month.

Mr. BOWERS. But it is provided that the Indians themselves shall be given a preference.

Mr. PICKLER. I am talking about head farmers, the class of men that are required for this purpose, and my position is confirmed and emphasized by the fact that we are now paying them $75 a month.

Mr. BOWERS. That is all wrong.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, why not leave it to the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to pay these men sixty-five or seventy dollars a month, as he may deem proper, especially when he has been paying them $75 a month? I do not believe in reducing the wages of Government employees simply because they are farmers.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] that the men required for this purpose are not ordinary farm hands. They are men who are employed for the purpose of teaching ignorant Indians how to farm. There is a farmer—or perhaps a farmer with an assistant, as the case may be—at an agency to teach a whole tribe of Indians how to farm, and those men are not ordinary farm laborers.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, on the question of what would be reasonable pay for one of these head farmers, my friend from Minnesota who sits in front of me [Mr. FLETCHER] was until recently the owner of a farm in my district, and he tells me that for three consecutive years he paid $100 a month for a superintendent for his farm, and I do not think that is extravagant pay for superintendents of farms in North Dakota. And that man was employed to superintend only one farm, whereas these farmers that are employed for teaching the Indians are compelled to superintend farms extending over a region of 150 miles wide by 200 miles long.

Mr. FISCHER. How large was the farm of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Fourteen thousand acres, the gentleman tells me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I was just going to add when I was cut off that I suppose the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] in fixing the wages of farm hands at $12 a month was estimating the value of his own services as a farmer. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] will carry. I believe that these "boss farmers" on the Indian reservations in the West, the men who have charge of teaching the Indians to farm, are the most important men upon the reservations. The time of this House has been consumed nearly all day in the discussion of the question whether certain employees of the Indian Bureau shall receive $2,500 or $3,000 per annum.

I believe that the boss farmer on every Indian reservation in this country has it within his power to do more good to the Indian than any one of these Indian agents who have been referred to, or all of them together. On most of the Indian reservations in the West irrigation is practiced. It is necessary that the boss farmer shall not only be a man of judgment and discretion, not only that he shall understand farming, but that he shall understand these children of nature as they are found in the Indian country. Not only must he be qualified to teach them farm labor, but he must understand irrigation and be able to instruct them in the proper methods of irrigating their farms.

We have endeavored in times past to educate the Indian and make him self-supporting. Every man who lives in the West understands that the only way in which the Indian can be made self-supporting is by teaching him to work. Hence it is necessary that the man who is placed in charge of an Indian reservation as an instructor in farming should be qualified in every particular to carry on the business—should be a man the value of whose services entitle him to a good salary; and he should receive a good salary.

In reply to the question suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] a moment ago—and I presume he desires to interrogate me again, as I see him on his feet—in regard to the wages paid to gentlemen who have charge of farming operations in the West, I will say that I employ to-day a man who looks after some 500 acres, and I pay him $75 a month and his board. I believe that generally throughout the West men who have charge of farming operations on farms of any considerable size receive at least that salary.

Mr. STEELE. What kind of farming does the gentleman carry on upon his farm of 500 acres that justifies him in paying $75 a month to the man in charge? What does he do? Do you raise enough on your farm to pay the superintendent? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Well, up to date we have done so. I will say, however, that owing to the financial policy which seems to be in vogue in this country at the present time, and which apparently will continue for some time to come, prices of products are falling to such an extent that I presume we may be compelled to reduce the salaries of our superintendents.

Mr. BOWERS. Is it within the knowledge of the gentleman that the farmers generally employed at Indian agencies possess the qualifications which the gentleman so beautifully explains to be necessary?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say in regard to that——

Mr. BOWERS. Have you any knowledge of the facts?

Mr. MONDELL. I have personal knowledge of only two farmers on Indian reservations. I know those gentlemen personally, and I know that they are absolutely qualified. I know that they can earn $75 a month anywhere, and I know that they are doing more good for the Indians on the Shoshone Reservation in Wyoming, than any and all other men employed on the reservation.

Mr. PICKLER. Allow me to say that the farmer of whom I spoke a few moments ago owns a farm of 320 acres, under cultivation; he owns a large number of horses; his farm is well stocked and has fine improvements. He being a man of such qualifications, when the Government wanted him it was obliged to pay him $75 a month. That is the sort of men we want for Indian farmers.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PICKLER, there were—ayes 48, noes 34.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PICKLER and Mr. SHERMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

[Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and other articles for the various tribes of Indians provided for by this act, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, $275,000.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to offer an amendment——

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to move that the committee now rise; but if this amendment is not likely to cause discussion——

Mr. PITNEY. Before this amendment is read I desire to reserve a point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. I make this proposition, that the amendment be read and remain pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. PITNEY. Is my point of order reserved?

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. HERMANN, as follows:

Add to the pending paragraph the following:

"Provided, That the lands now allotted to or which may be hereafter allotted to any Indians in severalty, under agreements already made, when such Indians, under the provisions of any existing law, have become or shall become entitled to the benefits of and subject to the laws of any State, and when such lands shall be embraced in and as a part of any county or town organization, so as to enjoy full and equal participation in the benefits of such local government, and when the Indians enjoy their equal privileges as citizens, shall be subject to State and local assessment and taxation, the same as any other lands similarly located in such State: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the sale or incumbrance of any such land on account of such assessment and taxation, or in any manner interfere with the trust in which such lands are held by the United States while such trust continues: And provided further, That during the continuance of said trust said taxes so assessed and levied shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to the county treasurer or other legally authorized officer of the county or municipality to which such taxes are payable, at such time as said taxes shall become due and payable: And also provided further, That said taxes shall only be paid on the receipt of the sworn statement of the county treasurer or other legally authorized officer of the county or municipality to which such taxes are payable, showing that such tax has been legally assessed and levied, and that said tax is then due and payable, accompanied by the certificate of the Secretary of the Interior that said lands are within the State and county described in said statement and that the lands therein described have been allotted in severalty or belong to Indian citizens of the United States, and that he is satisfied, after sufficient inquiry, that the assessment of the lands for taxation is a fair and reasonable one, and the taxes levied just and equitable, both independently and in proportion to the valuation and taxation of lands in the same county, town, or other municipal corporation: And provided further, That no moneys shall be so paid for road or highway taxes which by the laws of the State may be discharged by work, but the Indians owning such lands shall be required to so discharge such taxes: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied, and so certify, that the public expenditure of such taxes is fairly made to give the lands of such Indians their just share of benefit.

"SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act there shall be paid annually, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as shall be necessary to pay said taxes so certified under section 1 of this act."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY] stated that he desired to reserve a point of order. Was that upon the paragraph or upon the amendment?

Mr. PITNEY. I wanted to reserve a point of order on the paragraph, the item of $275,000. I was under the impression that it was a new appropriation, but am informed that it is simply a change in the location of the item, so that I have no point of order to make, except upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has made the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. HERMANN. I think I have an understanding with the chairman of the committee that the point of order is to be reserved and the amendment go over until the next day when the bill is considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1865) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective Departments;

A bill (S. 1904) to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 1780) to provide for the erection of a wall around the jail of the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (S. R. 82) directing the Secretary of War to inquire as to the present condition of the Sacramento River, California, and to estimate the cost of such improvements as may be necessary.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV the following bills and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 1904) to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 1865) to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make certain disposition of condemned ordnance, guns, and cannon balls in their respective Departments—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1780) to provide for the erection of a wall around the jail of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Joint resolution (S. R. 82) directing the Secretary of War to inquire as to the present condition of the Sacramento River, California, and to estimate the cost of such improvements as may be necessary—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PICKLER. That will not interfere with the evening session?

The SPEAKER. No; "when the House adjourns."

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not interfere with it.

The motion of Mr. DINGLEY was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILES, for four days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BURTON of Ohio, until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROMWELL, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HULING, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SPERRY (on motion of Mr. JENKINS), until Tuesday morning, on account of sickness.

To Mr. EDDY (on motion of Mr. KIEFER), until Tuesday morning next.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will now take the usual recess until this evening, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] will please act as Speaker pro tempore.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. HOPKINS as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the Clerk to read the clause of the rule under which the House meets on Friday evenings.

RACHAEL PATTEN.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, the unfinished business coming over from the last Friday session, the bill H. R. 1185, is first in order, and I ask that that bill be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachael Patten.

Mr. TALBERT. No motion has yet been made to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the House is in session. At the adjournment on the last Friday evening session we were considering the bill H. R. 1185, and the question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask that the bill be reported to the House.

The title of the bill was again reported.

The question was taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and on a division (demanded Mr. McCLELLAN) there were—ayes 48, noes 4.

Mr. McCLELLAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask if the gentleman takes the position that none of these pension bills shall pass, or has he only objection to this special bill?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly not; I do not object to the consideration of bills that are proper before the House; but I do object to this particular bill.

I am perfectly willing to allow the bill to be laid aside, and will withdraw the point.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside without losing its status.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection to that, and withdraw the point of order.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside without prejudice.

HENRY H. SCHRAWDER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of Henry H. Schrawder.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS HOLADAY.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2326) granting a pension to Thomas Holaday, the question being on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 8, after the word "month":

"Provided, That the pension herein granted shall be paid to Thomas Holaday, and that no part of it shall be retained by any authority to reimburse the Government for any pension heretofore paid."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to pursue the policy of passing bills of this character in the House on Friday night sessions, I want to give notice now that I shall demand the presence of a quorum. This is a bill that we objected to before, in the Committee of the Whole, and we intend to object again.

Mr. CROWTHER. Who objected to it?

Mr. ERDMAN. I did.

Mr. CROWTHER. I believe the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. ERDMAN. I am.

Mr. CROWTHER. And consented to the passage of the bill in committee?

Mr. ERDMAN. No; my recollection is to the contrary.

Mr. CROWTHER. This bill was passed at the last meeting, after consideration, by the members of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ERDMAN. And against my protest.

Mr. CROWTHER. And your opinion is therefore set up against a large majority of the members of the House.

Mr. ERDMAN. On that question I am willing to set up my judgment.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside without losing its place on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire the amendment to be pending?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the pending bill, with the proposed amendment, be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PETER B. PALMENTEER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2797) granting a pension to Peter B. Palmenteer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of this bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask that this bill be laid aside in the same way that the others have been laid aside. Otherwise I shall be obliged to raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the objection to this bill?

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand, it raises the general question of the pensioning of contract surgeons, and I think that should be taken care of by a general bill and not by special legislation.

Mr. POOLE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would not also prefer to have a general bill pensioning the widows of major-generals and brigadier-generals?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am in favor of such a bill, if the records of the major-generals and brigadier-generals were distinguished ones.

Mr. POOLE. You are very well aware that we have never passed such a general bill as that, but we have time and again passed special bills for the widows of major-generals and brigadier-generals, and we have time and time again passed bills pensioning contract surgeons. I do not see why we should not do it to-night.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If such legislation is passed I think it should be passed by the whole House.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill is to pension Peter B. Palmenteer, a private in Company D, Seventh Michigan Cavalry.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I supposed it was bill numbered 124. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill for the information of the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter B. Palmenteer, late a private in Company D, Seventh Michigan Cavalry, and to grant him a pension at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act, the same to be in lieu of any other claim for pension under existing law.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported an amendment striking out the words "from and after the passage of this act, the same to be in lieu of any other claim for pension under existing law."

Mr. MEREDITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us have the report, so that we can see what it is.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. May I ask that in cases where the reading of the report is called for the gentleman who introduced the bill or the gentleman in charge of it may make a brief statement, to save the reading of the report? The reports are very long, and it would facilitate the passage of bills if we could have brief explanations.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should like to suggest to my colleague that the gentleman who reported this bill is not here.

Mr. PICKLER. The report is very short.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It will only take a minute to read the report.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2797) granting a pension to Peter B. Palmenteer, having carefully examined the same, together with the evidence, respectfully submit the following report:

On September 10, 1862, the claimant enlisted in Company D, Seventh Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and served from that date until December 15, 1865, when mustered out and honorably discharged. On September 24, 1879, a claim was filed by him under the general law, and on June 2, 1885, a pension was granted at the rate of $2 per month, for injury to spine, from December 16, 1865, to February 20, 1884, when the disability ceased. On August 26, 1891, a claim for restoration was rejected on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability.

On November 27, 1891, the claimant filed under the act of June 27, 1890, and the medical examination, which was made in 1892, shows applicant's condition as follows: "Four-eighteenths for injury to right arm; nothing for injury to spine, chest, and abdomen, and old age; two-eighteenths for rheumatism; and is disabled from pensionable and other causes." On July 21, 1893, however, this claim was rejected on the ground of no ratable degree of disability under said act.

It seems that in 1892, when the medical examination was made, the claimant was clearly entitled to at least $6 per month, and since that time his rheumatism and other infirmities have increased to such an extent as to warrant the amount fixed by the bill.

In view of all the facts, your committee respectfully recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 8, all after the word "month," and that as so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say in reference to this bill that the committee went over it very carefully. It seems to be a very meritorious case, and I for one trust that the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. FOSTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4220) granting a pension to Charles A. Foster, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to renew my objection to that. It is special legislation, discriminating against a class of contract surgeons.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, that bill came up last Friday night. The gentleman was here and the other gentlemen who are objecting this evening were here, and after the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] I explained that in this case the applicant was a gentleman over 80 years of age, who probably would not live until the House passed a general bill. He had a pension under the act of 1890, under the interpretation of the Pension Department, for four years, and it was cut off a few months ago. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman ought not to raise any question upon this bill, it being one of a class in which he says pensions ought to be granted. I agree with him as to that, but why wait in this case until the old man is dead before you pension him? Why not do it to-night?

Mr. McCLELLAN. My colleague's explanation has been very satisfactory. I feel that this is an exceptional case, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I am much obliged to my colleague. There is an amendment pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN E. EVANS.

The bill (H. R. 3432) for the relief of John E. Evans was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JULIA A. HILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 141) granting a pension to Julia A. Hill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of this bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, these bills come so rapidly that I am hardly able to follow them. I should like to have the gentleman in charge of this bill make a statement about it. It is the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], I think.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case was read at length at the last Friday evening session. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania was here. I also have an impression that he was present when the matter was heard in the committee. This lady is the widow of Col. Charles W. Hill, late of the One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was in the service during the entire war; was brevetted as major-general for distinguished service, which commission I hold in my hand. This lady, his widow, is without any means. She cared for him in his illness for several years, until his death. She has lived by teaching from that time until this. She is without health, and the evidence in support of her claim is such that in any court of justice where justice is to be had would prove that he died of a disease contracted in the service. That, gentlemen, is the case in brief.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL M'KENNA.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3596) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael McKenna.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, there are two bills which were passed over—the bill (H. R. 2326) to pension Thomas Holaday, and the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton. I ask unanimous consent that on these bills the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills to their engrossment, third reading, and passage, and that there be allowed fifteen minutes' debate on each of these bills when they come up for passage in the House. That practice obtained in the last Congress.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Assuming that they shall not come——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does that also cover the amendment to one of these bills?

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Do I understand that the proposition of the gentleman from South Dakota is to limit debate to fifteen minutes on each side on these bills?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am afraid I shall have to object to that.

Mr. PICKLER. That was the custom during the last session. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I scarcely think debate ought to be limited on these bills. They affect principles.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills to their engrossment, third reading, and passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is——

Mr. PICKLER. What limit of debate does the gentleman desire?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not think we should have any limit of debate at all. That will shut off debate altogether, because there has been debate on the bills.

Mr. PICKLER. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the engrossment, a third reading, and passage of the bill. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the special rule.

Mr. WOOD. I believe, Mr. Speaker, I was recognized. Am I not recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Illinois, but supposed that he had yielded the floor to the gentleman from South Dakota. If he did not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. PICKLER. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. It is not necessary for the gentleman from South Dakota to yield to me; I already had the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD. I wish to say in regard to these two bills that the House understands very well to-night what the situation is, and I think we might as well have this matter out now as at any time. We might as well meet the question on these bills to-night as any other time.

Several MEMBERS. There is no quorum.

Mr. WOOD. Gentlemen around me suggest that there is no quorum here.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ERDMAN. What are we discussing?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois, and he is now making known the object for which he has sought recognition.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the special rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois, without he yields.

Mr. PICKLER. I thought the gentleman was through. There is no motion before the House.

Mr. WOOD. I was about to move that these bills be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I can not consent to that. I agreed with the gentlemen over yonder that these bills should be laid aside for the present, and I do not like to fail to fulfill my agreement.

Mr. WOOD. By what authority does the gentleman agree with one or two gentlemen over there on the other side that this shall be done?

Mr. PICKLER. It was done by unanimous consent. It is not my movement. It was the unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that these bills were laid aside by unanimous consent without losing their place on the Calendar.

Mr. WOOD. In deference to gentlemen around me, I will not insist upon the passage of these bills; but I wish to state this question of quorum will have to be met some time; and if a quorum is not here, the country would like to know why it is not here. Now I shall not submit the question I was about to raise, and will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

LEWIS C. SCHILLING.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2224) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Schilling.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lewis C. Schilling, late a private in Company A, Fourth Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2224) granting a pension to Louis C. Schilling, submit the following report:

Louis C. Schilling is now pensioned at the rate of $17 per month for wound (gunshot) and for rheumatism. His condition is now such as to wholly disable him from manual labor and to require the almost constant attention of another person.

Dr. A. C. Adams, in his affidavit, says that soldier is suffering from the following disabilities, viz:

"Rheumatism, general piles, internal; heart disease, valvular; gunshot wound of right leg.

"Rheumatism affecting joints and muscles, intense pain in back of neck and head, disturbing seriously the function of the brain; pain in arms interfering with their usefulness, requiring assistance in dressing; pain and swelling of lower extremities interfering with locomotion and giving constant suffering, requiring the aid of crutches in order to move about; intense pain in back from neck to hips. Piles, internal, bleeding profusely at times, producing exhaustion and constipation. Heart disease affecting valves, producing dispnœa."

Dr. George Latimer files an affidavit which, among other things, states the following as to soldier's condition:

"Said soldier is subject to often recurring attacks of rheumatism, which confine him to bed and leave him so crippled that he is compelled to walk with a cane and a crutch."

T. Fitzgerald, Albert Wood, John Hohns, and Jacob Adams testify as to soldier's disabilities, and while they vary somewhat in the form of their statements, they all agree as to his total disability and to his almost helpless condition for a considerable portion of the time.

His pensioned disability is gunshot wound, and it is shown that the rheumatism resulted from that, and that his helpless condition is due largely to the rheumatism, so that if the Pension Bureau had found his disabilities to have existed as claimed he would have been entitled to $50 per month, or if they do exist as the committee found they do he would be entitled under the law to that rate.

The soldier served in Company A, Fourth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The committee recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman in charge of this measure will give us some more full and satisfactory explanation of why this soldier should have a large pension. I fail to find any reason in the report, and I should like to have the information spread before the House in some form.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, the report sets out quite fully the facts of this case, except that it does not set out all the disabilities found to exist by the Pension Office and to be of service origin. One examining board found (and this does not appear in the report) that the claimant was totally disabled and classified him as belonging to the first rating, which would give him $50 a month.

Mr. MILES. How much does this bill propose to give this soldier?

Mr. KERR. Fifty dollars a month.

Mr. MILES. The report does not state.

Mr. KERR. The bill does, and it was read before the reading of the report. Another examining board examined this soldier and found that by reason of his rheumatism or some other trouble affecting his arm he was disabled to such an extent as to require assistance in dressing, and found that from that one disability he was disabled three-fourths, yet the Bureau in fixing his rating fixed his disability at two-eighteenths. As the report sets forth, he is subject to rheumatism, confining him much of the time to his apartment, and he also requires constant assistance in dressing and undressing. Two other witnesses, as set forth in the report, testify that he requires constant attendance. Now, all that is required under the general law to entitle a man to $50 a month is that he shall require occasional, not constant, attendance, and where he requires constant attendance he is entitled to $72 a month. So that if the House relies upon the finding of the committee this soldier is certainly entitled to $50 a month. This is a bill introduced not by me, but by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HULING], but I, as a subcommittee, investigated it and came to the conclusions set out in the report.

A MEMBER. How much pension is this man drawing now?

Mr. KERR. Seventeen dollars a month.

Mr. GRAFF. Is it not true that this man appeared before the committee so that they had an opportunity to observe him?

Mr. KERR. He did, and unless he was simulating his disabilities, and no member of the committee suggested such an idea, he is in such condition as to require the almost constant attendance of somebody. Now, if for even one or two months in the year he required constant attendance, he would be entitled under the law to $50 a month, so that it seems to me to be but simple justice to give him what the committee has recommended.

Mr. ERDMAN. This is a proposition to overrule the Pension Bureau in this case. The House is asked to overrule the Bureau without any evidence. The Pension Bureau had before it all the evidence, and I ask this committee whose judgment is more likely to be correct, that of the Bureau with the evidence before it, or ours without any evidence?

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that in every case that comes here the House overrules the Pension Office?

Mr. ERDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that a man can not secure the favorable report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions unless his claim has been rejected in the Pension Office?

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes; but we do not seek to overrule the Department in such cases.

Mr. KERR. But do we not overrule the ruling of the Department by making a different determination?

Mr. ERDMAN. No; I do not look upon the province of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in that light at all. I look upon the relation of that committee and the House to the Bureau in these pension matters as analogous to the relation of equity to law. It is the correction of the law wherein that, by reason of its universality, is deficient. It is a means of doing justice in cases that can not be reached by the general law; and if the gentleman can not give us any better reason than he has stated now, and if he can not satisfy me or some gentleman on this side that this soldier should have a preference over all other soldiers in this respect, I shall require a quorum to pass upon this bill.

Mr. COFFIN. I will ask the gentleman whether it is not the fact that if the Pension Bureau would treat those applying for pensions with a spirit of greater fairness and justice, we should have fewer applications here for pensions? [Applause.]

Mr. ERDMAN. I desire to say to the gentleman that the Pension Bureau as now administered is more liberal than it ever has been in the past. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] In order that the gentleman may satisfy himself of this fact, I refer him to the Assistant Secretary of the Interior. I ask the gentleman in charge of this case not to press it at this time, because it may discontinue further business to-night.

Mr. KERR. I will say, like the gentleman from Illinois, that this is a good time to make a fight, if we have to make one, on these bills.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation, there were—ayes 91, noes 5.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the Committee of the Whole) said: There are 111 members present—a quorum. The ayes have it; and the bill is laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. [Applause.]

SETH PORTER CHURCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3292) granting an honorable discharge to Seth Porter Church, alias Samuel Church.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge to Seth Porter Church, alias Samuel Church, from Battery I, Second United States Artillery, to date August 29, 1848.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does this bill need to come before the Committee of the Whole? It does not appropriate anything. It simply corrects a man's record.

The CHAIRMAN. It is probably to remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Does a bill of that kind need to come before the Committee of the Whole? My understanding is that only bills making an appropriation or disposing of United States property are required to come before the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. A bill of this kind might involve an allowance of pension or back pay.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Of course if the bill grants any allowance or makes an appropriation it must receive consideration in the Committee of the Whole, but as it is simply to correct the man's record, I do not see the necessity for it.

Mr. HULL. Does not the rule expressly provide that Friday night sessions shall be devoted to bills removing charges of desertion and bills granting private pensions?

The CHAIRMAN. Because a bill is in order at a Friday night session, it is not necessarily to be considered in Committee of the Whole. The only question in the mind of the Chair was whether this was a bill to remove the charge of desertion.

The amendment reported by the committee, adding to the bill the following proviso, was read and agreed to:

Provided, That the passage of this act shall not entitle such soldier to any pay or allowances prior to the date of such discharge.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CHARLES W. RINEHARDT.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt, late third-class musician in the United States Marine Corps band, by removing the charge of desertion against him therefrom, and granting him an honorable discharge as of date August 15, 1882.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Reinhardt, and to grant him an honorable discharge, having considered the same, would respectfully report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This young man enlisted in the Marine band; afterwards all of his family died except his father, who desired the consolation of his only child in his old age, and he went home. Your committee think his leaving the service excusable.

The facts are fully set forth in the reports and affidavits hereto annexed.

[In the matter of House bill No. 4919, House of Representatives, for the relief of Charles W. Reinhardt.]

Charles F. Reinhardt, being duly sworn, on his oath says: That he is aged 63 years, and resides at La Fayette, Ind.; that he is the father of said Charles W. Reinhardt; that said Charles W. Reinhardt is his only child; that his brother and sister and mother died after his enlistment in the Navy, which left me alone, helpless, and heartbroken in my declining years; that I am much in need of his services and his company.

He is a good boy, my only hope; but being handicapped by reason of being a deserter at large, he can be of no service or comfort to me unless the charge of desertion can be removed, and he be permitted to again come home and give me aid and comfort the few short years I have to live; and I hope that you will be charitable to me; that you will restore to me my only living child, one who was my pride, and is now my only hope. His habits are good, and his record in the service was first-class.

I went to considerable expense to educate him in music, and he enlisted without my consent. He was made to believe that he could be honorably discharged at any time he so desired.

CHAS. F. REINHARDT.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23d day of December, 1893.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM C. MITCHELL,
Notary Public.

—

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Whereas Charles W. Reinhardt, son of Charles Reinhardt, an old and well-known and highly etseemed citizen of La Fayette, Ind., did, on the 15th day of August, 1882, desert from the Marine Corps at Washington, D. C., and is still a deserter at large; and

Whereas the circumstances under which he enlisted in said Marine Corps on February 9, 1881, and deserted, at the time mentioned, are as follows, viz: He, said Charles W. Reinhardt, lived in La Fayette, Ind., from the time of his birth, in 1859, until 1878, when he left for Leipsic, Germany, to finish his musical education at the conservatory of music in that place. He remained there two years. On his return to the United States he met Mr. Sousa, the then director of the Marine Band, and finally enlisted, as aforesaid.

After enlisting he wrote to his father, Charles Reinhardt, telling him what he had done. His father was much displeased and sharply reprimanded him for enlisting as a third-class musician on so small a salary, i. e., $21 to $24 per month. He replied that there was no opening except in the third class, and that Mr. Sousa assured him that the members of the corps were earning from $60 to $125 per month extra from outside engagements. But shortly after his enlistment this source of income was cut off by an act of Congress prohibiting military bands from taking outside engagements. Being greatly disappointed at the turn things had taken, young Reinhardt became despondent and finally deserted, as stated above, and is now a deserter at large; and

Whereas since said Charles W. Reinhardt deserted from the Marine Corps his mother, brothers, and sisters have all died, leaving his father alone in his old age, except this one remaining son; and

Whereas said Charles W. Reinhardt, except his one act of desertion, has always borne a good reputation and had always been a good and useful citizen:

Therefore, considering the offender's youth, his former irreproachable character, the circumstances under which he entered and left the service, the yearning of his aged and lonely father to have his son with him in his declining years, and believing that to relieve this young man from the consequences of his one thoughtless act could work no harm to the service, we, the undersigned, respectfully pray this Congress for the passage of a special act relieving Charles W. Reinhardt from the charge of desertion.

Ira J. Chase, Governor of Indiana; Claude Matthews, Secretary of State; David P. Vinton, Ex-Judge Circuit Court; James Murdock, Francis Johnson, B. Miln Smith, Postmaster; W. C. L. Taylor, Jno. S. Williams, B. Langdon, Judge of Circuit Court; John F. McHugh, Senator Tippecanoe County and City Attorney of Lafayette; George T. Beardsley, City Treasurer; F. E. D. McGinley, Mayor; William V. Stuart, J. M. Dresser, W. C. Mitchell, Ex-County Clerk; David H. Flynn, County Clerk; J. Frank Byers, County Auditor; John M. La Rue, Ex-Judge Superior Court.

—

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, August 27, 1892.

SIR: The Department has considered the statement made by you in June last, addressed to the President of the United States, and by his direction referred to this Department, in which you request the pardon of Charles W. Reinhardt, a deserter from the United States Marine Corps.

In reply I have to inform you that it appears, from the record of service of Reinhardt, that he enlisted in the Marine Corps, at Washington, D. C., for five years, and was rated third-class musician, February 9, 1881; that he deserted from the Marine Barracks at that place August 15, 1882, and that he is still a deserter at large.

The Department is empowered to remove the charge of desertion only in cases coming under the provisions of the act of Congress "to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion," approved August 14, 1888, which applies only to deserters from enlistments during the late war, or when such charge is conclusively shown to have been erroneously entered or retained upon the records. It appearing that the charge of desertion was properly entered on the records of the Marine Corps against the name of Reinhardt, the Department has no power to remove said charge, and in view of the facts stated no recommendation for pardon can properly be made in this case. An application might very properly be made to Congress by the friends of Reinhardt for the passage of a special act for his relief from the charge of desertion.

Very respectfully,

F. M. RAMSAY,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LOUIS KIMMEL,
United States Marshal's Office, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. MEREDITH. The affidavit just read as a part of the report is the most curious affidavit I have ever seen; but I think this is clearly a case calling for mercy, and in behalf of this old man I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In behalf of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BISHOP], who reported this bill and who is absent on business, I wish to say that this is a very meritorious case. The committee considered it very carefully. The beneficiary of the bill was nothing but a boy at the time he deserted; he deserted in time of peace; and really it was nothing but a technical desertion.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

THEODORE WERNER.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2142) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Theodore Werner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Theodore Werner, late a private in Company E, Forty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due to said Werner by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask for the reading of the report for the information of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POOLE. As I understand, this is a report from the Committee on Military Affairs; and the committee, after careful examination, recommends the passage of the bill. If so, what is the use of our having the report read? The Military Committee has no doubt gone over all the facts. Why not accept their report and pass the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I called for the reading of the report because I desired some information about the case. I wanted to know on what grounds the Military Committee were reporting bills in favor of removing the charge of desertion. In a number of cases that have come under my observation persons wanted the charge of desertion removed when they were in fact deserters, and did not seem to have any excuse. I wanted to see whether this committee requires any excuse in such cases before recommending the bill. I do not expect to interpose further objection; but I wish to know the grounds on which the committee is acting, so that we may determine whether it would be better to have a general bill removing the charge of desertion from every man who may ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] desire to have the report read in his time?

Mr. McCLELLAN. For the information of the Committee of the Whole I ask that the report be read.

Mr. STEELE. I shall object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. HULL. Let the report be read.

Mr. STEELE. I want it understood that there will be some trouble in passing this bill. According to the adjutant this man deserted in the face of the enemy.

Mr. PAYNE. The report was about to be read in my time. When it has been read I will yield to my friend from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. PARKER. I think this bill ought to be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over, retaining its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The report was about to be read in the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield for the request that the bill be passed over.

Mr. PICKLER. Upon whose objection is this done?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection, but there is a request for unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman who reported the bill and who is familiar with the case is not here. He ought to be here when it is considered.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection.

WILLIAMSON DURLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8234) granting a pension to Williamson Durley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Williamson Durley, of Hennepin, Ill., who was a private in the company of Capt. George B. Willis, Fortieth Regiment, Fourth Brigade, First Division of the Illinois State Militia, and who served as such in the Indian war of 1832, known as the Black Hawk war, and pay to him a pension at the rate of $12 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3234) granting a pension to Williamson Durley, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant, Williamson Durley, swears that in June, 1831, he enlisted in Captain Campbell's company of Illinois Volunteers, in the Black Hawk war, and served therein for a period of about thirty-one days; and further that in 1832 he again enlisted under Capt. George B. Willis, and served for a period of nineteen days. A record of the claimant's service in Captain Campbell's company has not been obtained by your committee, but a certified copy of the rolls of Captain Willis's company is on file, and shows the nineteen days' service alleged by the claimant in that organization.

Mr. Durley is now 87 years old, and unable to do anything toward earning a support. His entire reliability was vouched for by Hon. T. J. Henderson, of Illinois, who introduced a similar bill in the Fifty-third Congress. Your committee in that Congress favorably reported the bill, but it failed of passage because of lack of time to consider it.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended, with an amendment striking out the word "twelve" in line 11 and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. HARBAUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 377) for the relief of George W. Harbaugh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to remove from all the records in his Department the several charges of desertion appearing on the rolls and hospital record of George W. Harbaugh, as a late private in Company G of the Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and as a late private in the Sixth Independent Battery, Ohio Light Artillery, and in Battery M, Fourth United States Artillery, and grant to said George W. Harbaugh an honorable discharge of date October 30, 1863, from Company G, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and also grant to said George W. Harbaugh an honorable discharge of date June 24, 1865, from the Sixth Independent Battery, Ohio Light Artillery.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the report of the committee accompanying this bill is quite lengthy and very full. Let me say in brief that this bill passed the House in the Fifty-third Congress, and there was a favorable report upon it by the committee in the Senate, but owing to lack of time it did not pass.

The facts are that this man, then really a boy of 15 years of age, belonged to the old Iron Brigade, and the record shows that he did gallant service in all of the battles in which that brigade participated. At the time he was charged with desertion he was in the hospital. The committee went through all the testimony in the case and examined it very fully and made an elaborate report. As I have said the House passed it in the last session and the Senate committee made a favorable report upon it. I hope action will be taken upon it now without the necessity of reading the long report.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The wording of this bill is peculiar. It says shall remove from him the "several charges" of desertion. Were there several charges, or only one?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. As I remember the facts in the case he first belonged to one regiment, from which he was charged with desertion, but was actually in the hospital. Afterwards he was transferred to another regiment and was charged with desertion from that regiment, but I do not remember the facts. The report of the committee, however, is very full, and if the gentleman insists of course it can be read and will explain all of these points. But the committee acted upon it after a very careful examination of all of the facts and were satisfied that it was a meritorious case.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri has stated that this man was in the hospital at the time the charge of desertion in the first instance was made against him. The other charge was made on the 29th day of August, 1862, and the record shows that he was at the battle of Bull Run on the 29th day of August, 1862, which accounted fully for his presence at that time. The other charge was accounted for, as has been shown, he being present and in the hospital at the time. I made the report in the case and examined all the facts myself.

Mr. STEELE. Any report concerning the military record or history of a man brought into this House for action ought to have with it the official record. This report does not provide that data. It may be all right, but I think that in all of these cases we should have full information covering all the points in the case, so as to know exactly how to act.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. JENKINS. Allow me to say that the committee had before them the official record and consulted it before bringing in the report.

Mr. STEELE. We ought to have the data on which to act.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to say to the gentleman from Indiana further and to the committee that I served with Mr. Harbaugh and know him to have been a very gallant soldier. He served through the entire war, except about three months, and the charge of desertion is merely a technical one. The gentleman from Missouri has stated the case accurately, and I can assure the committee that it is merely a meritorious act to pass the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I know him to be an excellent man.

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; as the gentleman from South Dakota says, he is an excellent man, and he has a large family who, of course, would like to have this charge of desertion removed during his lifetime.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will the gentleman state how many times he was charged with desertion?

Mr. JENKINS. He was charged with desertion twice, but he was accounted for on both occasions. On one occasion when charged with desertion he was laid up in the hospital here suffering from a wound received in trying to keep General Walker of this House from coming to Washington. [Laughter.] And then about the close of the war, after the surrender of General Lee and Johnston, he happened to be away from the command with one of the officers and when he came back the battery had been ordered home and there was no opportunity to remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. STEELE. What period in the service was that?

Mr. JENKINS. That was after the surrender of General Lee. It was simply a charge made in pencil on the back of the muster roll.

Mr. STEELE. There is a general law that covers all cases where men were absent on account of sickness, or were in hospitals, and there is also a general law which covers cases where they were away from their regiments after having served for the period of over three months prior to the 1st of May, 1865.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, I can say to the gentleman that it will do no harm at all to pass this bill, for it is certainly a meritorious case.

Mr. STEELE. The general law ought to cover it.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DAN S. PLACE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 951) to amend the military record of Dan S. Place, first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of Dan S. Place so as to show him honorably discharged from the service as first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 951) to amend the military record of Daniel S. Place, first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers, have carefully considered the same and the papers pertaining thereto and report:

Daniel S. Place was enrolled as a private in Company G, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers, July 27, 1861, and was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant for meritorious conduct, to date April 23, 1863. He was severely wounded and partially disabled in action at Port Gibson, May 1, 1863. While convalescing was ordered on light duty at New Orleans, where he remained until September, 1864, and was placed on detached duty at Elmira, N. Y., by special orders from the War Department, dated October, 29, 1864.

While serving at Elmira, on duty at Prison Camp, he was charged with "conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline" and "conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman," the specification being that he did, contrary to orders, carry out and mail letters for prisoners of war confined in the camp.

He was found guilty of the offense charged by a court-martial, but as the letters were shown to be of purely social character and contained nothing of importance, the sentence of the court was out of all proportion to the offense, in that it sentenced him to be cashiered the service and forever prohibited from holding any office of trust or emolument under the United States Government; that his sword be broken by a noncommissioned officer, his straps taken from his shoulders, and his buttons cut from his coat in the presence of the troops of the command.

The latter part of the sentence, requiring his personal degradation in the presence of the troops of the command, was disapproved by Bvt. Brig. Gen. A. S. Devier, commanding the military district of New York.

On March 15, 1865, the case was reopened at the instance of Senator Henry S. Lane, of Indiana, and a lengthy report made and filed by the Acting Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, in which, among other things, he says:

"It is not believed that he should be disfranchised, and as he is represented to be a man of good character and undoubtedly loyal, the interests of the service would justify a removal of all disability in order to enable him to reenter the service if the governor of the State sees proper to commission him."

Upon this report, by direction of the President, the disability to reenter the service was removed.

There remains, therefore, against Lieutenant Place nothing of the original sentence save the dismissal from the Army, which, in view of his established loyalty before and after the offense charged, the trivial character of the offense itself, viewed in the light of the facts submitted to the judge-advocate-general upon the reopening of the case, his brave, efficient, and faithful services as a soldier, his high character and standing as a citizen during the thirty years that have passed since the war, your committee believe ought to be removed. Your committee do not discredit the necessity for the maintenance of military discipline, which it is conceded involves exact obedience to orders, but it believes the highest demands of such discipline have been more than met by the punishment already inflicted.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying bill favorably and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I make the point of order that this bill is not subject to consideration to-night under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is not in order under the rule under which the House meets to-night. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I do not know just what distinction there is between that bill and other bills.

Mr. STEELE. This is not a case of desertion.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I know it is not a case of desertion, but since it has come up, I ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. We can not do it under the rule.

Mr. STEELE. The House has no jurisdiction of the bill to-night.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. It would have no jurisdiction if the point is made, but if the point of order is not made it could be laid aside by unanimous consent. Now that it is reached, I should be glad to have it acted upon.

Mr. PAYNE. While I think this is a very meritorious bill, so far as appears from the reading of the report, I do not think we ought to go out of the line of the rule for Friday night sessions, and I doubt if we have the power to consider it, even by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the purpose of the Chair not to allow any bills to come before the committee except such as are in order under the rule. As soon as the Chair noticed the character of the bill he decided that it was not in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask whether the committee has possession of the bill. If it is not before the committee I do not see how we could entertain the request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILSON KALE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1836) granting an honorable discharge to Wilson Kale.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of, and grant an honorable discharge to, Wilson Kale, of Truro, Iowa, late a private of Company G, Sixth Regiment of California Infantry Volunteers: Provided, That no pay or emoluments shall be due said soldier by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a very brief explanation of this case. That bill passed both Houses in the closing hours of the session of the Fifty-third Congress; I think some two or three days before the session closed. It was not signed, but failed in the general ruck of bills that were left on the President's desk at the hour of adjournment.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FRANCIS E. HOOVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1094) granting a pension to Francis E. Hoover.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, at the rate of $72 per month, the name of Francis E. Hoover, late a private of Company I of the Sixty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers, in lieu of the pension now being drawn by him.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment striking out the words "seventy-two," in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1049) granting an increase of pension to Francis E. Hoover, report as follows:

The soldier served one year, nine months, and nine days in Company I, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged from the service. Nothing appears of record derogatory to his character as a soldier. He was pensioned at the rate of $8 per month for rheumatism from August 25, 1890. This pension was increased to $12 in 1893. The testimony does not show the disease of the soldier to be of service origin. During the past two years this soldier has been bedridden, absolutely unable to assist himself, requiring the constant assistance of an attendant. He can not be moved without suffering the most excruciating pain from head to foot, with no hope of recovery.

On account of the terrible suffering of this soldier and the necessity for constant assistance, taken in connection with his poverty, your committee believe the case is one calling for the special intervention of Congress. If the soldier's disease was of service origin he would undoubtedly be entitled to $72 per month under the law, and his case is so extraordinary your committee believe that he should receive said sum. It therefore reports the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment: Strike out the words "seventy-two," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will be able to give us something better than is set forth in this report.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill, and I confess the report is not half so strong as the evidence would warrant. The soldier is a resident of the city of Elkhart. I myself visited him personally. I found him stretched upon a bed where he had lain for some two years, with every joint in his body stiffened so much that he could not even get his hands to his mouth. He was poor and destitute. For some months, or ever since he has been confined to his bed in that condition, he has been supported by the Grand Army post and by friends. He is a man of most excellent reputation. Unquestionably the disease from which he is suffering relates back to injuries received in the war.

Mr. ERDMAN. Will my friend permit me, just there, to read one line of the report?

Mr. ROYSE. Yes.

Mr. ERDMAN (reading)—

The testimony does not show the disease of the soldier to be of service origin.

Mr. ROYSE. Well, I think that the committee are mistaken upon that. But nevertheless, whether or not——

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will allow me, it simply has not been proven to the satisfaction of the Pension Office that it originated in the service.

Mr. ERDMAN. The report does not say that.

Mr. ROYSE. I think the committee are perhaps a little bit modest in not making this as strong as they might have made it under the evidence. This soldier was upon the march back from Nashville, and was in the battle of Franklin. On that march he suffered from rupture of the blood vessels of the legs, or varicose veins. That finally resulted in large ulcerations. He suffered from that for a long time, and since his return from the Army he has suffered from these ulcerations. The rupture of these blood vessels was undoubtedly occasioned by that severe march. He had some symptoms of rheumatism in the Army, and after he returned these attacks of rheumatism became more numerous and frequent, and finally resulted in this disease, which all the physicians have testified is a form of rheumatism. It has dislocated many of his joints. The joints of his fingers are all dislocated, thrown out of place, from the effects of this rheumatism. All the joints are anchylosed. It is a form of rheumatism that this man is suffering from now which evidently goes back to the time of his service in the war. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ERDMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. KIRKPATRICK], a member of the committee, makes this report, and says that the testimony does not show the disease of the soldier to be of service origin; and he does not attempt anywhere to argue that this soldier is entitled to this pension by reason of disability of service origin; but it is proposed to give, as a mere gratuity, as a charity, this large pension to this soldier because of the terrible suffering of the soldier and the necessity for constant assistance. There are thousands and thousands of soldiers situated exactly as this soldier is. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. HULL. Will not my friend allow me just one question?

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. If they could prove that this condition was the result of actual service would he not get $50 a month?

Mr. ERDMAN. He would get $72 a month, and ought to have it; and I would vote for it.

Mr. HULL. This compromises at $50.

Mr. ERDMAN. But I do not like these compromises.

Mr. HULL. What I want to get at is that the only reason he comes to Congress is because he can not actually connect this disease with the service. If he could he would not have to come here.

Mr. ERDMAN. There is no attempt to connect the disease with the service.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to make a statement in reference to this case, either in the form of a question or a statement to him or the committee, just as he desires.

Mr. ERDMAN. Either way.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, in making the report in this case, of course I had to act entirely on the evidence submitted to me; and while the testimony tends very strongly to show the disease of which this soldier complains was of service origin, yet I am not so sure that it fully establishes that fact. But I reached the conclusion that the extraordinary condition of this soldier was such as to directly appeal to Congress for special aid and assistance. If the disease of which he complains could be traced directly to service origin, there would be no necessity for a special bill, and this man would be entitled to $72 per month under existing law.

Mr. ROYSE. He would not be here if that could be done.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The committee in considering the matter concluded that inasmuch as the testimony was not entirely satisfactory upon the point of service origin some difference should be made between that and a case where there was no question about that proposition, and consequently agreed upon $50 a month as a fair sum to be given the pensioner. It seems to me that no man can examine the testimony in this case and for one moment question the right or the privilege or the power of the committee or the duty of Congress to make a suitable provision for this soldier, notwithstanding the testimony may not show that the disease of which he complains is of service origin. He is there upon his back, unable to feed himself, and would absolutely starve to death without the assistance of some one, and his condition certainly appeals strongly to Congress for relief, and I hope this committee will not hesitate for one moment to pass this bill. [Applause, and cries of "Vote!"] I do not believe that it is just to refuse aid under the extraordinary circumstances of this case. Some of those opposing this bill have not hesitated to vote a larger sum to the widows of our generals.

Mr. McCLELLAN. How many bills have we passed to pension the widows of your generals?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We have been liberal in that respect, and I believe in a case of this kind Congress ought not to indulge in cheeseparing. Let us relieve as far as possible the wretched condition and sufferings of this soldier; give him $50 a month; he is entitled to it; his condition demands it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ELLIS. They gave an increase of salary to the Indian inspectors.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are 20,000 soldiers, veterans, in the exact position and condition of this man.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Then we ought to give them all $50 a month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Give them all $50 a month.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I will be with you on that subject.

Mr. ERDMAN. But do not take out one favored friend and exclude all the rest. When it comes to this feast of the Treasury let them all participate under a general bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I will vote for a bill of that kind, and believe I would be doing God's service; but I do not propose to refuse aid to this worthy veteran and allow him to die in poverty and in want waiting for a general bill to reach all such cases. I hope and trust this bill will pass and this old soldier may feel that want and starvation no longer look him in the face. He has enough to bear now, is unable to move, can not feed himself, can not brush a fly from his face, suffers the most excruciating pain when moved by others, and is absolutely without hope except in that land free from pain and trouble.

Mr. ERDMAN. This report proposes to pension this soldier at a very high figure—what is a mere gratuity, a mere charity—upon the express statement that the disease is not owing to service origin. I am opposed to that class of legislation until you enlarge it so as to embrace all such soldiers. I give notice in regard to this bill that I shall want a quorum in the House when it passes. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the committee to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty."

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 1.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PICKLER. Who makes the point that there is no quorum?

Mr. ERDMAN. I make the point.

Mr. PICKLER. I want the RECORD to show.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and four gentlemen are present; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to. The question is now on laying aside the bill as amended with a favorable report.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 4.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. When the Chairman has observed that there were twenty or thirty gentlemen who did not rise and vote, and four have only voted in the negative, is it not competent for the Chair out of that twenty to count three or four to make up the quorum, without a fresh count?

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that there is no quorum present, and it is very close.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, who raised the question of no quorum? You counted the committee only a few minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not hear the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. The question is, who raised the question of no quorum? We would like to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [After a count.] One hundred and thirteen gentlemen are present; the ayes have it, and the bill is laid aside with a favorable report. [Loud applause.]

FRANCIS WALSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension heretofore granted to Francis Walsh, of Stockham Nebr., late a member of Company B, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, under pension certificate numbered 681343, and who is now indigent and bedridden, being paralyzed as a result of a shell wound received in the line of his duty in battle at Antietam, Md., and by reason thereof in need of constant attendance, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $12 to $72 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Walsh, late a member of Company B, Third Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in relation to this claim. The soldier was a private. He received his injuries from a piece of an exploded shell, though the report uses the phrase "gunshot wound." The injuries were of an internal character. The soldier could realize them very sensibly, but in the earlier stages of his application for a pension they could not be clearly defined. This fact will explain some of the statements referred to in the report upon which rejections were made in the Pension Office. Later on the Pension Office granted him a pension based upon the claim which he had alleged from the outset, thereby conceding the correctness of his claim as to the injury set forth in his declaration. He maintained uniformly the same claim.

The various medical examinations made show the gradual development and increase of his disability up to the present time, when it amounts to total disability, requiring from one to two persons to take care of him, one person continually. The committee were thoroughly convinced that the injury resulted from the wound as set forth in the report, and that under the general law the soldier was clearly entitled to a pension of $72 a month. The Pension Office, however, rejected the claim; yet the committee believe that the soldier is entitled to that pension, and so recommend.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read by the Clerk for the information of the committee.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.,

having carefully examined the same, respectfully submit the following report:

The soldier was enrolled as private in Company B, Third Wisconsin Infantry, on June 29, 1861, and was discharged July 20, 1864, having served three years and twenty-two days. The record shows that he was mustered out by reason of expiration of term of service. Nothing derogatory appears against the soldier, his service being in all respects faithful and honorable.

It also appears that he was engaged in the battles of Cedar Mountain, Antietam, Chancellorsville, Beverly Ford, Gettysburg, and many minor engagements. He was wounded in the groin at Antietam on September 27, 1862. On January 15, 1877, he applied for pension on the grounds of "gunshot wound in left hip, causing permanent weakness, pain, and lameness of the same; also, at Nashville, Tenn., in July, 1864, from hardship and exposure, he contracted disease of lungs."

From the commencement the soldier insisted that he was lame and that he suffered from limitation of motion, due to his wound at Antietam. His claim for pension was, however, rejected April 24, 1879, for the reason "no degree of disability for cause alleged entitling to a rating." Several medical examinations were had, with varying results. A careful review of these, however, discloses a general and increasing tendency to confirm, to a greater or less degree, the contentions of the soldier. He was an unusually strong, robust man, and a rugged constitution enabled him to arrest for years the full development of his disabilities. The medical board examining him on December 12, 1888, report well-marked paralysis agitans of left arm and left limb. On November 4, 1890, the medical board at Aurora, Nebr., report the same disability to an increased extent. This board reports him as utterly unable to perform any manual labor, and that he is compelled to have assistance to dress himself. Subsequent examinations by medical boards in 1890, 1892, and 1894 show him to be almost entirely helpless.

On November 9, 1891, the soldier was pensioned on his application of January 15, 1877, at $2 per month under the general law from July 21, 1864, the date of his discharge, and $4 per month from December 12, 1888, ending July 20, 1890, by reason of allowance under act of June 27, 1890, for the disability as stated, "disease of chest and gunshot wound of left hip." This allowance definitely and conclusively fixes service origin of the soldier's disability. The one question thereafter was, Is the soldier entitled to an increase of his pension under the general law?

It is evident, from a consideration of the testimony, that the original lameness and limitation of motion of which the soldier complained increased and developed into paralysis, from which he now suffers. The soldier claimed it, the medical testimony on file supports his contention, and the Pension Bureau, by granting the pension under the general law, concedes it.

The affidavits of Dr. Gooden and Dr. Stanberry, filed in the case, both are to the effect that his disability and paralysis are due to the wound for which he was pensioned. His claim for increase was rejected August 1, 1894, on the alleged ground "that the disability is not due to service origin." The special examination in the case shows soldier to be in a pitiable condition. He can not feed himself; is unable to dress and undress or to attend to his daily and frequent wants; an attendant is constantly necessary.

February 2, 1889, the special examiner who investigated the case, says:

"Took him before board of examining surgeons, who find 'paralysis agitans' (see certificate)."

The certificate referred to shows a rating of eighteen-eighteenths for the disability mentioned. The examiner then goes on to say, after reciting the evidence:

"The above testimony, in connection with record, ought to settle case, which seems to be meritorious."

On October 20, 1890, another special examiner who took up the case, says:

"But in the interests of justice I will say that the longer I live the more I see of the fallibility of the diagnosis, the less I think my judgment, or the judgment of men educated to determine cause and effect, is worth. If cases did not constantly come before me that baffle every evidence of that which is termed 'medical science,' and every reasonable (supposed) conclusion from a law standpoint, I should feel it somewhat of a duty to reject. But I see no loophole from my standpoint. The injuries received, the wounds and injuries of record, the sickness and shock to the nervous system, which by reason of a strong constitution he has been able to put off until age deprived him of the vigor to resist, did, in my opinion, cause his present trouble. I therefore refer this case to admit."

Dr. Gooden, special medical examiner sent by the Bureau of Pensions to make a critical examination of the claimant, says:

"The soldier's affliction is due to gunshot wound in left hip. * * * The soldier is absolutely helpless. He can not sit down or rise without assistance. He is totally disabled. He has to have an assistant for nearly every movement of his body—has to be dressed and undressed and fed."

The same physician, on July 5, 1894, finds "very bad case of general paralysis."

On March 2, 1892, the board of surgeons recommended a third-grade rating—$24.

Under date of August 11, 1893, Dr. D. C. Stanberry, who treated the claimant, swears he is suffering from paralysis, "caused by gunshot wound of left hip; * * * has to be assisted in and out of chair, out of bed, and to dress himself at all times."

The soldier is without means and has no income except the pension of $12 which he is now drawing under the act of 1890. He has depending on him an aged wife, who is scarcely able to take care of herself. The merits of the case and the soldier are not only disclosed by the evidence on file, but are also vouched for by the member from the district in which he resides.

Your committee, therefore, in view of all the facts, respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr., late a member of Company B, Third Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this report is exactly the sort of report that we on this side of the House have been contending for. It goes into the merits of the case; it is carefully drawn; it states the evidence, and it raises such a strong presumption in my mind in favor of the claim that I for one will be glad to vote for the bill, and I do not think there will be any opposition to it on this side of the House. [Applause.]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JEFFERSON FUESTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3689) increasing the pension of Jefferson Fueston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll the name of Jefferson Fueston, late of Company M, Tenth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3689) granting an increase of pension to Jefferson Fueston, having carefully considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

Jefferson Fueston, the claimant, enlisted in Company M, Tenth Ohio Cavalry, on September 8, 1863, and was honorably discharged July 24, 1865.

On August 28, 1878, he filed a declaration in the Bureau of Pensions, alleging that at Aiken, S. C., February 10, 1865, during a brush with the enemy, his horse was shot and fell upon him, crushing his chest, tearing three of his ribs loose from the sternum on the left side, and otherwise injuring him, by reason of which he was disabled. This claim was rejected June 30, 1879, because of failure to show origin, but was reopened a year or so afterwards.

On June 10, 1882, John R. Berry, lieutenant in the same company, swears that the soldier received the injury as stated. He says he afterwards went to see the doctor in regard to Fueston, and was told that his ribs were broken and that he would not be fit for duty until about the time his term expired.

After a great deal of inquiry, Fueston at length succeeded in ascertaining the addresses of two comrades, and they, both under oath and in reply to the lettres de cachet of the Bureau of Pensions, unqualifiedly assert that the injury was incurred as stated by the claimant, and that they were present at the time and saw the horse and man go down together. These affidavits were executed February 1, 1890, and February 29, 1892.

The soldier says that he was attended by various ambulance surgeons, and that his feelings at the time were such as not to permit of his recollecting their names. From the records there appears to have been no hospital treatment.

The report of the Adjutant-General's Office shows that on or about February 10, 1865, this regiment lost 13 men killed, wounded, and missing at Aiken, S. C.

Two of the soldier's neighbors swear that they saw him shortly after he came out of the Army, and that he was then suffering from a swollen leg and hip, and complained of his breast.

There seems, then, to be ample evidence to show that the soldier was injured in the manner alleged, and it remains only to establish the fact that the claimant's present condition is the result of this injury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee, striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "twenty-four"; so as to make the pension $24 a month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, what I do not like in this report is that it attempts by innuendo to reflect upon the present administration of the Pension Bureau, when, in truth and in fact, this man made application as far back as 1878, and the Bureau from that time down to the present has uniformly rejected his claim. Now, I think that, in view of the discovery of the cathode ray, this man's physical condition can be absolutely demonstrated, and that he should again apply to the Pension Bureau and see whether he can not get his pension allowed there.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor of introducing the bill for this poor, disabled, suffering old soldier, and my regret to-night is, and a profound one, too, that the bill does not give him $72 instead of $24 a month, and I believe the House will agree with me in a few minutes that my regret is justified. As to the criticism made in the report upon the Pension Bureau, the evidence, I think, fully justifies the conclusion of the committee. This man, in resisting a charge of the enemy at Aiken, S. C., in 1865, received a very severe injury by his horse falling upon him. The horse was shot and fell upon the soldier, tore two or three ribs from the breast bone, and injured him so severely that the physician who attended him at the time informed his lieutenant that he would not be able to serve for the balance of his enlistment. For fourteen years he has been an invalid, the greater part of that time lying upon his bed, unable to move. He is to-day, and has been for many years, a subject of private and public charity, and the last attending physician certifies to his condition in these words:

These disabilities have long since rendered this man unable to perform any manual labor, and are so increasing that his life will unquestionably be destroyed in a few months.

He resides in my own county, and I am well acquainted with his neighbors. I am also acquainted with the county judge who has charge of the almshouse of the county, and he informs me that he has waited upon this poor man and extended to him the almshouse relief. As to the action of the Pension Bureau in this case, I regret to say that it fully justifies the criticism of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, because, in face of the evidence showing that this man was in this condition, showing how the injury was incurred, showing the testimony of the surgeon who attended him immediately after he received the injury—in the face of all this evidence set forth in the report, the Bureau has declined to grant him a pension. It occurs to me, in view of this man's situation, that this is a most distressing case. In view of his inability to perform any labor, it appears to me that he is entitled rather to $72 a month than to $24 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. HERMANN. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman seems to repeat the intimation that the present management of the Pension Bureau is chargeable with some dereliction of duty in regard to this soldier. I wish to ask whether the soldier has ever applied for a pension under the present management of the office. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this man had made application under the present management and been refused?

Mr. HERMANN. I did not particularly refer to the present management. My complaint was in regard to the pension management generally, whoever may have been in charge at the time, because the office ignored the testimony of these two comrades of the soldier, who saw the horse shot on which he was riding, who saw that horse fall upon him——

Mr. TALBERT. I have no doubt that is true.

Mr. HERMANN. It occurred to me that under the circumstances there was evidence enough to indicate the origin of this disability in the service and in the line of duty.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman misunderstands me. I have no doubt that every word he has said is true; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] said that his objection to the report was that it reflected upon the present management of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. HERMANN. I will pass that by.

Mr. TALBERT. I understood the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] to say that that criticism was just, and at the same time I understood him to say that this soldier never applied for a pension.

Mr. HERMANN. He has applied and has been rejected. His application was rejected upon the ground that he failed to show the origin of the disability. He waited year in and year out until after the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, then he came in and received the full benefit of that law—$12 a month, which he is now receiving.

Mr. TALBERT. Why was the pension denied under the former administration?

Mr. HERMANN. For the reason that, as the office claimed, the applicant failed to show the origin of the disability in the service. It was on that point that I criticised the Department, whoever may have been in charge of it, because a part of the evidence submitted to the Department was the testimony of two soldiers that they saw this man's horse shot under him, that they saw the horse fall upon him, and saw the man carried away under the care of a surgeon.

Mr. TALBERT. I was only asking for information. I have no doubt the gentleman's statement is true.

Mr. MILES. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is true that this man now requires the personal attention of an attendant?

Mr. HERMANN. For several years he has been carefully attended by nurses; among others, by his wife, who is partially an invalid, and he has received no other assistance from the Government except the pension of $12 a month under the act of June 27, 1890. Public and private charity has been extended to him by the county, by his neighbors, and by his comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. MILES. He requires a nurse?

Mr. HERMANN. He requires a nurse, and has required one for several years.

Mr. MILES. Now, if the gentleman is through I should like to make a few remarks about this case. I want to say that I shall cordially and cheerfully vote for this bill; but I wish to call the attention of the House in Committee of the Whole and the attention of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the fact that this is a case precisely parallel with the case in which a while ago we voted $50 a month, while in this case we propose to vote only $24 a month. Let us be consistent and fair and just in these matters. Sir, we did an injustice a while ago to this soldier when we voted $50 a month in the other case; and you gentlemen who were so ready then to cry "Vote!" "Vote!" when we insisted that the amount granted in that case was rank charity—nothing else—you gentlemen ought now to have the manliness, if you think your action in that case was right, to stand up here and move an amendment to this bill granting a pension at the rate of $50 a month, for this case is on all fours with the other as to physical conditions, both soldiers requiring the constant attention of nurses, while in the case now pending there is strong evidence that the injuries are of service origin and in the former case no such evidence. I do not think the action in the other case was right.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman whether he does not think that in this case the applicant, in view of the circumstances I have just stated, is entitled to $50 a month?

Mr. MILES. No, sir; I do not think so.

Mr. HERMANN. In what kind of a case, then, do you think a man should be granted a pension of more than $24 a month?

Mr. MILES. I do not think the allowance should be greater than is sufficient to keep him in a well-equipped hospital.

And I say to you, sir, that either one of these men can be carried to the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore as a pay patient and supported for $400 per year.

A MEMBER. This is an acquittance from the poorhouse, however.

Mr. MILES. We are paying entirely too high for these acquittances from the poorhouse. We are carrying this business at too high a hand, at too great a rate.

But, sir, I only rose to call the attention of the House to the inconsistency of the Invalid Pensions Committee, of which I am a member. I have protested inside of the committee meetings against the inconsistencies of these pensions, and I exercise my privilege as a member on this floor to protest against them here, and I shall continue to do so until we can adopt some rule or have some fixed system with regard to the matter.

Mr. COFFIN. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. MILES. I repeat that we ought to have some rule to determine these cases; we ought to have some consistency as a matter of fairness and justice to the taxpayers of this country, who are just as much entitled to our consideration as the claimants themselves in these cases.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question or submit a suggestion to him? If it were not for the position of gentlemen on the other side of the House all of these soldiers would have just as large pensions in these deserving cases and their widows would have as large pensions as we have provided in the cases of admirals and brigadiers.

Mr. ERDMAN. I deny that proposition. The gentleman should not make any such statement in reference to the position of members on this side.

Mr. MILES. I will answer the admiral question when it comes up, if the gentleman is addressing himself to me. There is no question of admirals and brigadiers here. This is a plain, common-sense, practical question of consistency. Now, let gentlemen show their consistency by their action with reference to this bill and other bills of a kindred nature.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "twenty-four" and inserting "thirty."

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the committee to insert $40 in this case, at least. If proper, I move that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment pending already, and it would not now be in order.

Mr. PICKLER. This man is certainly rightly entitled to $30 a month. That is the rate of pension when there is total incapacity to earn a living by manual labor.

Now, in order to make it $50 at the Pension Office, an assistant must be required part of the time at least from year to year. As to whether that condition exists in this case or not I do not know, but it is clearly a case where this man is entitled to $30 a month by reason of his incapacity to earn a living by manual labor.

The gentleman from Maryland has made quite a demonstration in reference to the matter; but let me say to him that the reason why the Committee on Invalid Pensions fixed the amount at $24 in the bill was simply because of the fact that the bill only asked for $25 per month, and that not being a pensionable rate we amended it so as to make it $24 a month, which is a pensionable rate. That is the only reason.

I ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MEREDITH. Do not cut the boys off. If this case is to be put up to the highest bidder, let them all have a chance.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, the gentleman from Virginia will not take any stock in that auction.

Mr. MILES. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota will be adopted, or that such an amendment will be adopted as will make the House at least consistent with itself and before the country.

Mr. KEM. Then make it $50 a month, if you want to do that.

Mr. COFFIN. I would like to offer as a substitute for the pending amendment that the bill be made $50 a month. I suggest that to the gentleman from Maryland who spoke in favor of increasing the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota, substituting $30 for the amount fixed in the bill.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to accept that amendment, and will say further to the gentleman from South Dakota that a nurse is constantly in attendance on this man, and I think he is entitled to $50 a month. But I will ask that increase if I am in the next Congress, and if the soldier lives to that time.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PICKLER, it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the substitute offered by Mr. COFFIN.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, we have no yea-and-nay vote in the committee, but on the question of increasing this pension to $30 a month I want to have it distinctly understood that I favored it and voted for it.

Mr. HERMANN. I acknowledge the assistance of the gentleman from Maryland in that regard.

The question being taken on the substitute proposed by Mr. COFFIN, it was rejected.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE D. MOWATT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline D. Mowatt, as widow of Alfred B. Soule, late major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt, having carefully considered all the facts, respectfully submit the following report:

Prior to 1850 the claimant was married to Alfred B. Soule, who served as major of the Twenty-third Regiment Maine Volunteers from September 10, 1862, to July 15, 1863, when he was discharged for disability contracted in the service and in line of duty. On February 7, 1864, the disabilities mentioned resulted in the death of the soldier. He left no property, and was buried by the Masonic order, to which he belonged. His widow, the claimant, was pensioned at $25 per month from the date of his death, and two minor children were pensioned at $2 each.

On June 17, 1869, the claimant married Henry T. Mowatt, who died in 1878. He left no property to the claimant and had no children by her.

Mrs. Mowatt is now between 71 and 72 years of age and is unable to perform manual labor to any extent. She is supported by her daughter (a child of the deceased soldier), who teaches in the public schools, and is obliged to labor night and day in a commercial house during her vacation in order to support her aged and dependent mother.

Your committee, after considering the case carefully, and in view of all the facts, respectfully report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the gentleman who introduced this bill make some explanation of it. This is a case of a remarried widow.

Mr. SULLOWAY. What explanation would the gentleman like?

Mr. TALBERT. I want some explanation from the gentleman in regard to the circumstances surrounding the case.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this report states briefly the facts. I have known this good lady since the day when, with three little ones at her feet, she followed the remains of this husband and father, the dead major, to the grave. I have lived within a few doors of her for years. In going to my business I pass their house daily. She is one of the best of mothers, one of the New England Christian mothers, the best that ever God made or the world produced. She gave all the strength and vigor of her womanhood to the rearing of these children made orphans by the death of this man who gave his life to his country. He left her no means. The Masonic order, to which he belonged, buried him.

After some years she remarried a gentleman somewhat older than herself, as I judged from their appearance. He brought nothing to her, lived a few years, and then died. For eighteen years she has been a widow, and for several years unable to earn a living upon which to subsist. So one of the orphans of that dead major, her daughter, toils in the public schools by day, whenever the schools keep, and when there is a holiday and a business house is open she labors there during the day, and every night save Sunday she toils there, and so keeps this poor mother from the poorhouse.

This woman is 72 years of age. The only question is whether you think it is the duty of this dead soldier's child to maintain the mother, made a widow and left destitute by the death of the man who gave his life for his country, or if the country should recognize the duty to restore her to the pension rolls and grant her what God and every honest man knows to be her right. [Applause.]

Mr. MILES. I should like to ask my friend and colleague what pension is proposed in this bill? I did not understand from the reading of it.

Mr. SULLOWAY. She is the widow of a major, and if she gets what belongs to her she will get $25 a month. There is no amount stated in the bill.

Mr. MILES. I supposed that some amount was stated in the bill.

Mr. SULLOWAY. No; it simply puts her on the pension roll as the widow of Major Soule, and as the widow of a major she would get $25 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that every word the gentleman has so eloquently said is true. I have very great respect for anything that the gentleman may say upon this floor; but that is not the point. This widow has remarried, and thereby relinquished voluntarily her claim to a pension. The question is whether it is right for this House to grant a pension to this widow under these circumstances. No doubt she is a lady who is deserving, poor, and needy; but I submit that we should take a view of the case not based upon sentiment, but based upon principle, based upon justice, based upon that which is right, and based upon the law. Viewing it in that light, we can not and ought not to grant a pension to this widow.

I want to appeal to the sense of justice and right of the members on the other side of this House to consider right here and now, before they go a step further, whether they are willing by their action to show that they have no regard for principle, or whether they are willing to stand by principle and by the law, in practice and in theory. It is useless for me to say again upon this floor that I am no there to make any factious objection to any pension, for I stand ready to vote, and have voted, for all I thought were meritorious. I shall stand here on every Friday night and vote for and advocate pensions for those who I think are justly entitled to them. That has been my record since I have been a member of this House, and it shall continue to be; but, Mr. Chairman, I claim the right as a member of this House—and I shall always exercise it without fear or favor—to enter my protest against any measure which, according to my humble judgment, I think is not right, which I think is not based upon principle, which I think is not based upon justice and the law. Men may think what they please, I expect to exercise that prerogative, regardless of the opinions of anyone.

I am satisfied in my own mind that this measure is wrong in theory, wrong in practice, and wrong in principle, and I believe honorable gentlemen on the other side of the House ought to think so, too. I do not blame them for pensioning old Union soldiers. They ought to do that. But when they stop and reflect soberly about such a measure as this, I believe they will say, "We will stop right here; this is not right, and we will not do it. We will abide by the law in the case and not be governed by sentiment."

With these remarks I shall enter my protest against this bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I will only say a few words in connection with this matter. You will all bear with me that several Friday nights I rose in my place and opposed the principle of pensioning soldiers' widows who had remarried. I then stated that the reason was that I believed that the pensions that the Government paid to soldiers or their widows or orphans were not paid to them as gratuities, but that they had a right to them, and to make demand by virtue of their right. I want to say now to my friends on the left that I do not think this comes clearly under that rule. It is true the widow herself has voluntarily relinquished that right to demand; but there is a soldier's child involved in this, and that child has not relinquished this relationship to that father; and where there is a relationship upon which the right might be demanded, I claim that it is our duty to grant that right.

Mr. MEREDITH. Will my friend allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. MEREDITH. If this child is entitled to a pension this does not cut the child off.

Mr. BRUMM. Unfortunately, the child can not get a pension under these circumstances, as the mother is living.

Mr. MEREDITH. If the child is pensionable she can.

Mr. BRUMM. Not under these circumstances. There is that relationship existing that places this case outside of the case we argued the other night, and I hope that our friends will not strain a point. They are going a step too far.

Mr. MEREDITH. Just one moment. I want to be fair in this matter. If that soldier left a child, certainly that child can not be cut out of a pension if it is entitled to one.

Mr. BRUMM. I am not speaking of the child being pensionable or the mother or child being pensionable under the law. The reason that we are granting these pensions is because the applicants are not entitled under the law.

Mr. MEREDITH. Then introduce a general bill that will reach the child.

Mr. BRUMM. I do not propose to do that. It reaches the child through the mother.

Mr. MEREDITH. I do not see how.

Mr. BRUMM. All this kind of legislation is simply because there is no general bill touching such children and widows. I say to our friends on my left that they ought not to make factious opposition against granting this pension, and I will stand with them, for my part, every time they have a point that comes under that same ruling and principle that they seem to think so much about.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to enter into the discussion of a case of this kind. I am satisfied that my friend who has just taken his seat, who has been twitting this side upon the pension question——

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, no.

Mr. MEREDITH. You did not mean it, but did so, and I am satisfied by the position he has taken before this committee——

Mr. BRUMM. You are certainly in error about my twitting that side.

Mr. MEREDITH. In good humor you did. I want to repeat to him what I said just now; and that is if there is a child of this soldier living, a pensionable child, that is, a child who has not arrived at the age of 16 years——

Mr. LITTLE. The man died in 1864.

Mr. MEREDITH. That settles the question, then. There can be no such pensionable child, and the theory on which this case rests is taken out of it. That disposes of the position the gentleman took, and the theory falls when the man himself died in 1864. Certainly there can be no pensionable child.

Mr. BRUMM. You are assuming that—that the child would not be pensionable under the law; but we are making pension laws every Friday night in special cases.

Mr. MEREDITH. If you want to pension these people who have remarried, I say introduce a general law, because there are hundreds and perhaps thousands who stand in the same category, if that is to be the policy of the Government. I believe it is pretty well understood by the country that the Republican side of the House will vote for any pension bill; and some of them have been pleased to twit this side of the House upon this question. I beg them to remember that although this pension money does not come to that section whence I come, that my side of the House at least has stood here and voted for $140,000,000 of pension money at one time, when a third of it is being paid from that section of our country which practically gets none of its benefits.

I believe that an honest soldier who would become entitled to a pension by reason of service to his country should have a pension; but when we come to pensioning widows who have remarried and who have forgotten their first love and their first husband, I believe that they are taken out of that category; and when they choose between the pension which they are receiving and the husband which they propose to take they are entitled to the choice and must stand by it. I say, Mr. Chairman, that it is unfair and unjust to thousands of ladies who occupy the same position, who have remarried; and if it is to be the policy of this Government to reinstate them on the pension rolls when they become widows again or when they are divorced, it should be done by a general law. A few nights ago we did pass a bill placing a woman who had been divorced from her husband upon the pension rolls, where she was before she married her second husband. If that is to be the policy of the Government let us say so in a general bill, and put all of these ladies upon the same footing. That would be equity, that would be justice, that would be fairness, and that would be according to principle, as my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has so aptly said.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentlemen yield to me for a motion?

Mr. MEREDITH. I always yield with pleasure to my friend from South Dakota, and I will yield to him in a moment. I want now to say in conclusion to my friends on the other side that when they claim that this side of the House has been inimical to the soldiers of the Union, they make an assertion which is not borne out by the record of vote after vote which has been taken in this Congress and in preceding Congresses. When this side of the House has always joined with them in voting whatever appropriations were necessary in accordance with the report of the Pension Bureau, it is unjust to us for them to make these charges, and while I think my friends, many of them, do not mean it earnestly, they do create an impression before the committee that this side of the House is hostile to pension legislation. We are not hostile, and I speak not only for myself, but for this side of the House, when I say that we are not hostile to pensioning a soldier who deserves a pension, but to the deserter, to the bummer, to the bounty-jumper, to the extension of this system of special bills, we are hostile. We are opposed to going any further in that direction than we have gone, and, in my judgment, the pending case is one in which a pension should not be granted.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, with the recommendation that the bills as amended——

Mr. McCLELLAN. What is the motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HOPKINS having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LACEY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration business upon the Private Calendar under the special order and had directed him to report with a favorable recommendation certain bills with amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, and also certain other bills without amendment.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the House proceeded to consider the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The first bill considered was the bill (H. R. 2224) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Schilling.

The question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for a division.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, if it is not too late, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to give us a little explanation. It is impossible for us to carry all these cases in our minds.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 6.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to move that the House do now adjourn; and I desire to say to the members of the House that I hope that during the coming week they will talk to their neighbors around them in the House and see if we can not—— [Cries of "Out of order!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, a motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. MILES. Unless the gentleman from South Dakota is going to give this side of the House an opportunity to reply, I object to his continuing.

Mr. PICKLER. I now move—I am compelled to move by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN], who raises the point of no quorum and keeps pensioners from having their rights in this House—that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, February 24, 1896, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Auditor of the Interior Department asking for an appropriation for increase of clerical force in his office—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relating to additional appropriation for the completion of the Washington City post-office—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of an appropriation for continuing the work of gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States by the Geological Survey—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WILSON of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3268) to facilitate the procurement of evidence and to compel the attendance of witnesses in matters before the registers and receivers of the local land offices of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 477); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1191) to ratify an act of the Oklahoma legislature approved February 27, 1895, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 478); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ODELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred House bill No. 4958, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 6407) for the incorporation of the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington, accompanied by a report (No. 480); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. TYLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs: The bill (H. R. 1936) to remove the charge of desertion standing against David Mosten. (Report No. 476.)

By Mr. BABCOCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia: A bill (H. R. 6408) in lieu of the bill (H. R. 5159) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott. (Report No. 481.)

By Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 140) for the relief of John Little and Hobart Williams, of Omaha, Nebr. (Report No. 482.)

By Mr. COLSON, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5175) granting a pension to Nancy Gentry. (Report No. 483.)

By Mr. STRODE of Nebraska, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 3033) to increase the pension of Elizabeth T. Beall, widow of Benjamin L. Beall, late colonel First United States Cavalry. (Report No. 484.)

By Mr. BLACK of Georgia, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill [H. R. 4355) to increase the pension of Theresa Peebles, of Jefferson County, Ga. (Report No. 485.)

By Mr. COLSON, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka. (Report No. 486.)

By Mr. TRACEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

The bill (H. R. 713) for the relief of Jacob Taylor. (Report No. 487.)

The bill (H. R. 3524) for the relief of James McGowan from the charge of desertion. (Report No. 488.)

The bill (H. R. 4199) to correct the military record of Edward H. Munson, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second New York Regiment Infantry. (Report No. 489.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROMWELL: A bill (H. R. 6396) to prevent the adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: A bill (H. R. 6397) to revise the wages of pressmen's helpers in the Government Printing Office—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BRODERICK: A bill (H. R. 6398) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. PAYNE (by request): A bill (H. R. 6399) to amend the laws relating to American seamen—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. MILLER of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 6400) fixing the time for holding the circuit and district courts in the district of West Virginia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHUFORD: A bill (H. R. 6401) to amend the national banking act—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PHILLIPS (by request): A bill (H. R. 6402) for the protection of trade-marks and labels—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 6403) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska"—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. BELL of Colorado (by request): A bill (H. R. 6404) for the issuance of postal tablets, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HUBBARD: A bill (H. R. 6405) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to grant temporary occupation of certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo., to the courts of Cole County, Mo.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California: A bill (H. R. 6406) providing for the disposal of lands lying within the military reservation near Independence, in Inyo County, Cal.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FARIS: A bill (H. R. 6439) to entitle all soldiers and sailors who are receiving a pension of more than $35 and less than $50 per month to come under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish an intermediate rate of pension between $30 and $72 per month," approved July 14, 1892—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAFT (by request): A bill (H. R. 6440) for the purchase of the statue of Salmon P. Chase, late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. COLSON: A resolution (House Res. No. 177) providing for an investigation of certain charges against the Secretary of the Treasury—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COUSINS: Memorial and joint resolution of the general assembly of Iowa, relative to improving the navigation of the Mississippi River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, joint resolution of the general assembly of Iowa, relative to the Transmississippi Exposition to be held at Omaha, Nebr., in 1898—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LACEY: Joint resolution of the general assembly of Iowa, recommending the repair of the Muscatine Island levee—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, joint resolution of the Iowa general assembly, favoring appropriation for the Transmississippi Exposition at Omaha, Nebr.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HULL: Joint resolution of the general assembly of Iowa, favoring the Transmississippi Exposition at Omaha—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, joint resolution of the general assembly of the State of Iowa, relative to improvements of Mississippi River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from consideration of the papers to accompany the bill for the relief of Garrett W. Wilber, and the same were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. ABBOTT: A bill (H. R. 6409) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Sarah C. Newport, and to remove the bar of the statute of limitations therefrom—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. AVERY: A bill (H. R. 6410) granting a pension to Livingston Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6411) granting a pension to David Morse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHICKERING: A bill (H. R. 6412) for the relief of Maitland Boon and the heirs of Robert Tillson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COFFIN: A bill (H. R. 6413) granting a pension to Mrs. Ellen H. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOVENER: A bill (H. R. 6414) for the relief of Nathaniel Bush, of Weston, Lewis County, W. Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FENTON: A bill (H. R. 6415) for the relief of Aaron F. Shriyer, late postmaster at Winchester, Ohio—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALL: A bill (H. R. 6416) for the relief of Harmon Coffman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALTERMAN: A bill (H. R. 6417) to complete the military record of Caleb L. Jackson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 6418) pensioning H. C. Bedell, Company A, One hundred and ninety-first New York Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWE: A bill (H. R. 6419) granting an increase of pension to Maj. Samuel P. Dill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6420) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles Buchling—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Br Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 6421) removing charge of desertion from the record of Jonathan Chaney—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEWIS: A bill (H. R. 6422) granting a pension to John Rogers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6423) to remove charge of desertion against Edward F. Gilkey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 6424) granting a pension to Mary E. Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 6425) for the relief of Clifton R. Anderson—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6426) for the relief of the Madison Female Institute, located at Richmond, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MEREDITH: A bill (H. R. 6427) for the relief of Capt. Charles G. Ayres, Tenth United States Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEARSON: A bill (H. R. 6428) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane L. Fagg—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PICKLER: A bill (H. R. 6429) for the relief of Samuel J. Coyne—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PITNEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 6430) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of David Miller—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765 and interest—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES W. STONE: A bill (H. R. 6432) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Andrew P. Jones—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TYLER: A bill (H. R. 6433) to remove the charge of desertion standing against David Mosten—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 6434) granting a pension to Phebe Clem, widow of David G. Clem, of Company D, Eleventh Indiana

Cavalry Volunteers, and to her children by David G. Clem, to wit: Anna May Clem, Lottie Jane Clem, George Ezary Clem, and Louisa Maud Clem, of Paris, Ill.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6435) for the relief of Dr. James Madison—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WOOMER: A bill (H. R. 6436) to remit the penalties incurred by Robert C. Mish and John W. Mish, jr., of Lebanon, Pa., late copartners under the firm of Mish Bros.—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6437) to remove the charge of desertion against John P. Leitzel—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 6438) to remove the sentence of court-martial from the military record of A. D. J. Heastings, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: A bill (H. R. 6441) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edward Allsworth—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTLETT of New York (by request): Memorial of Church E. Gates & Co. and 77 others, requesting that Congress will authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the entire work of constructing a canal through the Harlem Kills, New York, 15 feet deep and 300 feet wide, for a sum not exceeding $1,450,000—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of David Pritchard and 14 others, of Pottsville, Pa., in support of House bill No. 306—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURRELL: Petition of the Business Men's League of Elizabethtown, Ill., for the improvement of the Ohio River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. COOK of Wisconsin: Petition containing the names of 125 farmers, cheese makers, and dealers of Calumet County, Wis., favoring the passage of House bill No. 3010, regulating and controlling the manufacture and sale of filled cheese—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COLSON: Petition of Rufus K. Dick, of Clinton County, Ky., for pension by act of Congress—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS of Iowa: Petition of citizens of Iowa, for the enactment of a more stringent Sunday law in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of sundry persons, of New Texas, Pa., in favor of a bill for compensation of fourth-class postmasters—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., in favor of the enlargement and purchase of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal by the United States Government, and that the same be made a free national waterway—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. FARIS: Paper to accompany House bill No. 2379, for an increase of pension to John Campbell, Twenty-first Indiana Regiment—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER: Petition of A. J. Barrett and 200 others, relating to House bill No 4993, on the Mille Lacs Indian Reservation—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FOOTE: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance unions of Greenwich, Fort Edward, Moira, Stony Creek, Easton, West Chazy, Cambridge, Schuyler Falls, and county of Washington, all of the State of New York, against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Greenwich, Fort Edward, Moira, Stony Creek, Easton, West Chazy, Cambridge, Schuyler Falls, and county of Washington, State of New York, against the sale of beer to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Burke, N. Y., Mrs. E. F. Felton, president, favoring a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HAINER of Nebraska: Petition of Edward T. Riley and 105 other citizens and ex-Union soldiers, residents of Byron, Thayer County, Nebr., also petition of John S Ferguson, president of the Missouri Association of Union ex-Prisoners of War, on behalf of 350 members of said association, praying for the passage of House bill No. 306, granting a pension to Union soldiers and sailors confined in so-called Confederate prisons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of Wisconsin, favoring the establishment of a national military park at Vicksburg, Miss.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper from Charles Clonkey, of Greene, Iowa, urging favorable action upon the free-homes bill—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of John H. Robinson and others, of Westport, Conn., for the passage of House bill No. 306—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILBORN: Memorial of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California, urging Congress to create and appoint a commission to investigate the effects of Japanese competition upon the manufacturing industry of the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition from the board of supervisors of Sierra County, Cal., asking for relief for the farming industry—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brokenstraw, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brokenstraw, N. Y., against the sale of beer to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California: Petition of the California Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KENDALL: Petition and papers for the relief of Colby T. Parido—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LACEY: Petition of F. P. Whitten and 25 others; also, petition of J. M. Merrill and 15 others, all citizens of Oklahoma, asking for the passage of the free-homes bill—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 3772, evidence in support of bill for correcting muster rolls of Company I, Seventh Iowa Infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAYTON: Resolutions of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California and the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, adopted February 7, 1896, urging Congress to appoint a committee to investigate the question of Japanese manufactures, importations, and export trade, and the effect their future development will probably have upon the manufacturing field in the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORSE: Petition of N. S. Redison, of South Bethlehem, Pa., praying for the recognition of God in the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NOONAN: Petition of the citizens of Corpus Christi, Tex., for a deep-water channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi Bay—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ODELL: Petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Pine Bush, Pearl River, Rockland, Livingston Manor, Newburg, and Hurleyville, State of New York, against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Pine Bush, Pearl River, Rockland, Livingston Manor, Newburg, and Hurleyville, State of New York, against the sale of intoxicating liquors to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. OTEY (by request): Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce, Richmond, Va., advocating the passage of Senate bill No. 563, abolishing compulsory pilotage on coastwise vessels—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolutions of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, appealing to Congress to publish Revolutionary records—to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Slippery Rock, Pa., requesting a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PUGH: Petition of the officers and members of Croxton Post, No. 9, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kentucky, urging service-pension legislation and relief to ex-prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCRANTON: Resolutions of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, favoring the publication of records and papers of the Continental Congress—to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: Resolution of the Beelel Union ex-Prisoners of War Association, Concord, N. H., in favor of House bill No. 306—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAWNEY: Petition of Michael K. Campbell and 116 others, favoring the passage of House bill No. 4774—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. TAYLER: Memorial of Lodge No. 245, Order Sons of St. George, Youngstown, Ohio, in favor of the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. TRELOAR: Petition of H. A. Schoppenhorst and 333 other citizens and taxpayers of Warren County, Mo.; also, petition of 164 citizens and taxpayers of St. Charles County, Mo., and 117 citizens and taxpayers of Gasconade County, Mo., praying for the passage of House bill No. 3828, appropriating $4,000,000 to continue the improvement of the Missouri River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WATSON of Ohio: Memorial of members of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California and of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, asking Congress to appoint a committee to investigate the question of Japanese manufactures, importation, and export trade, and the effect their future development will have on the manufacturing field in the United States—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WOOMER: Petition of George H. Luft and 200 citizens of Middletown, Pa.; also, petition of J. G. Zeigler and 25 citizens of Benvenue, Pa., in favor of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Abraham Bower, Mrs. A. Bower, and 45 other ladies and gentlemen, in favor of House bill No. 2626, for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of a mass meeting held at Duncannon, Pa., December 25, 1895, in reference to the Armenian outrages—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 22, 1896.

Rev. WALLACE RADCLIFFE, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers, our Father which art in Heaven, Thou only art the Father of our country. From Thee cometh every good and perfect gift. Thou art Governor among the nations. Who shall not fear Thee, O King of Nations? We bless Thee for our land. Thou hast not made the wilderness our habitation, or the barren land our dwelling. Thou hast given us a pleasant land, a valley of visions, a land of brooks and waters, a land of all manner of fruits wherein we may eat bread without scarceness, whose stones are iron and from whose hills we dig brass.

Thou hast been to us in all our need and peril the pillar of the cloud and fire. Thou hast been mightier than the noise of many waters.

We bless Thee for the men Thou hast raised up and through whom Thou hast declared to us Thy wisdom and guidance, and by whose sacrifice Thou didst establish the nation, and especially for him whose name is in all hearts to-day. We thank Thee for the inheritance of his memory, the wisdom of his works, and the inspiration of his life and example. Make us faithful to the trust they have committed to us.

Continue our institutions of liberty and righteousness. Forgive wherein we have sinned or forgotten the God of the nation. Rebuke iniquity in high places. Give that which is good. Let peace be within our borders and prosperity within our palaces, that Zebulon may rejoice in his going out and Issachar in his tents. Abundantly bless our provision and satisfy our poor with food. Heal all divisions, that living in love and peace the God of peace may be with us.

Bless Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, and all with him that rule, that they may rule in the fear of God. Counsel our counselors and teach our Senators wisdom. Make it appear that Thou standest in the congregation of the mighty and judgest among the judges. Give grace to all the people. Let pure and undefiled religion prevail. Grant that our ways may so please Thee that even our enemies may be at peace with us. Let Thy gospel be our glory, that Thy righteousness may exalt the nation and Thy favor command the life of the Republic to the glory of the grace in Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on motion of Mr. BACON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the invocation of the acting Chaplain this morning be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day's proceedings.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE REVENUE BILL AND SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, being advised that the Committee on Public Lands will on Monday morning request the immediate consideration by the Senate of a measure of urgent importance, recently made the subject of a special message by the President, and desiring to facilitate the purpose of that committee, I wish to give notice that I shall on Wednesday morning, instead of Monday morning, submit some observations on the motion to recommit the revenue bill to the Committee on Finance.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 11th instant.

The SECRETARY. On February 11, Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That on the 22d day of February current, immediately after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address shall be read to the Senate by the President pro tempore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In pursuance of the resolution just read, the Farewell Address of President Washington will now be read by the President pro tempore, the Senator from Maine, Mr. FRYE.

Mr. FRYE advanced to the Secretary's desk, and read the address, as follows:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the Executive Government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint councils and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our Western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. The have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a Constitution of Government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the Government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burthen which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your Representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference for public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing, with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my Administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GO: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19, 1796.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I move that the thanks of the Senate be tendered to the President pro tempore for the admirable reading he has given us of Washington's Farewell Address.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware, that the thanks of the Senate be tendered to the Senator from Maine, the President pro tempore of the Senate, for the manner in which he has read the Farewell Address of President Washington.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, before the question is put, I should like to make an inquiry. Will the admirable address which has just been read be printed in the RECORD? If not, I move that it be printed in the RECORD as eminently appropriate to the existing condition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 24, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 24, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for the first time in my service in this body, I desire to rise to a matter of privilege, and call attention to a column article in the New York Sun under date of February 19. It relates to the passage of pension bills in the Senate on the preceding day. I desire to read briefly from this communication, and then to submit a very few observations on the matter.

The article is headed "Pension records broken—All smashed by the Senate pension mill yesterday"; and it goes on to say:

> The Senate to-day devoted the last half of the afternoon to the passage of private pension bills. It can not be said that these bills were really considered, because they were not. In the days when "Uncle Philetus" Sawyer of Wisconsin was chairman of the Pension Committee—

Senator Sawyer never was chairman of the committee—> the Senate made a record by passing pension bills at the rate of one a minute for several hours at a time. That record has been smashed by the present Senate, however, and Mr. Sawyer sat in the Chamber to-day, a casual visitor, and witnessed his successor, Senator GALLINGER of New Hampshire, passing bills at the rate of two a minute.

>
> When the hopper was in full motion this afternoon and 120 bills an hour were dropping on the Clerk's desk, the Senate was conspicuous for its almost absolute emptiness, while from the galleries a few American citizens looked down in wonderment. Mr. HARRIS of Tennessee, the would-be Czar of the Senate, was in the chair, and Dr. GALLINGER of New Hampshire, the chairman of the committee, sat in a borrowed seat on the front row of the Republican side, just where his predecessor, Mr. Sawyer, used to sit, and, with the clerk of the committee by his side, kept tab as the monotonous tones of Senator HARRIS indicated that the bills were passed. Mr. GALLINGER might have made the record a little more than 120 an hour but for his unfortunate habit of replying to interruptions and answering the questions of such inquisitive Senators as occasionally strayed into the Chamber. Mr. Sawyer never made mistakes of this kind. He never had any explanations to make, but if a Senator interrupted the working of the machine to seek information, Mr. Sawyer would merely look at him over his spectacles and ignore what he had to say.

Now, Mr. President, the allusions to me are of no consequence whatever, but this is a matter that has gone out to the country and has occasioned a good deal of comment, as is indicated by the letters that are coming to the Senate Committee on Pensions.

I wish to call attention to the fact (and it is well enough for the country and the Senate to know it) that 67 bills were passed in two and three-fourths hours instead of 120 bills within a single hour, as this veracious correspondent has it.

It should be remembered, too, that lengthy and very carefully written reports are made in every pension case that is reported from the Committee on Pensions. Those reports are printed, are laid upon the desks of Senators for a considerable time before the bills are called up for consideration, and every Senator has an opportunity to know all the facts connected with every pension case that is called up here for consideration.

The total increase in the 67 bills (I had a very accurate computation made of this matter) that were passed in the Senate the other day over what the beneficiaries are now drawing was $1,006 per month, or $12,072 per annum. It was exactly an expenditure of one fifty-eighth part of a cent for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

One bill that passed that day was in behalf of a widow whose husband, had he taken advantage of the pension law during his lifetime, could have drawn from the Treasury an amount almost equal to the aggregate annual appropriation made in the 67 bills, and there were many other somewhat similar cases in the list. Some of those for whom bills were passed will probably be dead before the bills become laws, and many of them will draw their pensions for less than one year.

It will thus be seen that the New York Sun, with its scare headlines and its misrepresentations, was indulging in rather small business for a great metropolitan newspaper.

But such articles do much mischief. The readers of such newspapers are led to believe that an improvident expenditure of public funds is being made, and the prejudices and passions of the people are aroused, to the detriment of the worthy and brave men who fought and suffered for the Government. It is a wicked and unjustifiable exercise of journalistic privileges, even when practiced by a newspaper which sails under the motto, "If you see it in the Sun it is so." Manifestly either the motto or the correspondent of the paper should be changed.

Mr. President, if a similar expenditure had been made for almost any other purpose under the heavens the newspapers of the country would have remained silent, but when it is made for blind and paralytic and dying soldiers, and the dependent and destitute widows of soldiers, a great hue and cry is raised in certain newspapers as though an offense bordering on a crime had been committed.

Mr. President, I do not expect that anything I can say on this subject will stop the misrepresentations concerning pension legislation, but nevertheless I have felt it to be due to the committee and to the Senate to make this explanation. The Committee on Pensions is a careful, conservative, hard-worked committee, determined to deal fairly with the bills that are referred to them, and there need be no fear that they will recommend for passage any bills not founded on equity and justice.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire before he sits down. What is the membership of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Thirteen.

Mr. HOAR. Does not each one of those bills have the careful examination of the full committee, so that the question whether it comes within any principles of legislation is ascertained in every individual case?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely so, Mr. President, and, so far as I can recall, no such bill has been reported to the Senate that has not had the unanimous assent of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. Then it is true that a body of gentlemen selected by the legislatures of their States for the office of Senator, consisting of 13 persons, of more than twice the ordinary number of the supreme court of a State, has sat on these questions and considered them before they were reported to the Senate. Then do they have likewise a similar examination in the other branch from a like committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. There are two committees on pensions in the other House, one on pensions and one on invalid pensions. Bills relating to wars prior to the war of the rebellion are referred to the Committee on Pensions; bills relating to the war of the rebellion are referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and those committees give careful examination to the bills severally referred to them.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make one observation. Every Senator will agree to the truth of it. It would be undoubtedly impossible for the Congress of the United States to do one year's public business in ten years unless we were to rely in matters of small expenditure of money like this upon the judgment of our committees.

I make these observations not alone because of the sportive article which has been read, but because some very worthy and estimable gentlemen are constantly attacking the character of our legislation in regard to the matter of pension appropriations. Here is the Pension Committee, in which pension bills have had an investigation as thorough and accurate from 13 Senators before the bills are brought in here as the cases in the supreme courts of the several States or in the courts of appeals of the several circuits get from a much smaller number of judges, and it is not improper to say, I suppose, from judges certainly not standing higher in reputation and capacity for public service than the gentlemen composing this committee.

A very eminent clergyman, a friend of mine, was moved in Massachusetts about a year ago, in the city of Cambridge, where the university teachers are largely members of his congregation, to preach a sermon on the corruption and wickedness and profuseness of the expenditures of this Government for pensions. He is a worthy man who would have no more made a misstatement than he would have cut off his hand; but he showed that the pension list for the year amounted to a certain sum, and then he cited the fact that there had been $25,000,000, I think it was, more expended in that year. "Now, my hearers," he said, "this $25,000,000 out of the public Treasury is what is got by the pension agents and claimants, the men who promote this profuse and extravagant pension legislation." In point of fact, the $25,000,000, if I have the sum right (at any rate, many millions was the sum), represented the arrears which were paid after the application and before the settlement of the cases, which in some cases will be five or six years, and is almost always one or two years, owing to the condition of business in the Pension Bureau. That $25,000,000 paid to these honest claimants, soldiers and widows and children and orphans, as the arrears for the time which has elapsed between their application and the beginning of the pension, this excellent gentleman thought was paid to pension agents and corrupt lobbyists and persons of that class out of the public Treasury.

That is a specimen of the kind of information that is going about through the country in regard to the purity and honesty of our national legislation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I entered the Chamber just as my colleague upon the Committee on Pensions had begun to read the extract from the New York Sun, or from the New York Sun's correspondent. I am a regular subscriber to and reader of that journal, and regard it as a very able and interesting exponent of sound Democratic doctrine; but it is impossible for any journalist to avoid occasional errors on the part of his correspondents.

There is no testimony needed, no backing of my colleague. What he says is the simple and absolute truth. I have the honor to be upon that committee, and I testify that it scans all these cases with exceeding care, that every one of the cases so easily disposed of here was clearly set forth in the committee and the bearing of the evidence considered carefully, with some consideration, it is true, for charity and loving kindness in many of the pitiful cases. I do not see how we could have done any less. I am sure no wise and equitable court could have done any less.

I have thought often that there ought to be some full and complete setting forth of this pension business to correct the errors that the Senator from Massachusetts has referred to. I received a letter not long ago from a very intelligent man, a plain citizen, who sent me a long and well-written letter, and among the causes of complaint that he had against my poor self and the Congress in general was the extravagant expenditure for pensions. And yet that man, if he would sit down fifteen minutes in the Pension Committee room and listen to the cases, would be perfectly satisfied that we had done just about right. He believes, undoubtedly, for so he told me, that a very large proportion of the pensions—do not remember exactly, a quarter or a third, or more—were altogether fraudulent and unnecessary. Many people say that. Some people believe it. And yet what I always challenge them to do is to report to me one case—I beg them to give me one case of obvious fraud in their own neighborhood, of their own knowledge, to prove it to be such by reputable witnesses, and I never have had the challenge accepted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4043) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 141) granting a pension to Julia A. Hill; and

A bill (S. 1740) to amend section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to remit or mitigate fines, penalties, and forfeitures, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 103) relating to final proof in timber-culture entries with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of Henry H. Schrawder;

A bill (H. R. 1499) to correct the muster of Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 1821) to reopen and adjust the account for service of Lieut. Col. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers;

A bill (H. R. 2797) granting a pension to Peter B. Palmenteer;

A bill (H. R. 3432) for the relief of John E. Evans;

A bill (H. R. 3596) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael McKenna;

A bill (H. R. 4220) granting a pension to Charles A. Foster, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army; and

A bill (H. R. 5672) to grant to railroad companies in Indian Territory additional powers to secure depot grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 359) granting to the Columbia and Red Mountain Railway Company a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 879) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant to the Gainesville, McAlester and St. Louis Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory."

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF ORLANDO, FLA.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I find by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 30th of December, 1895, that in introducing a resolution of inquiry in regard to the First National Bank of Orlando, Fla., I stated, or it is stated in the report in the RECORD, that I was requested to introduce the resolution by "the president and some of the officers of the First National Bank of Orlando, Fla." This was a misprint. I have had no communication with the presidents and directors of national banks. What I said was that the resolution was in relation to the president and directors of the First National Bank of Orlando, Fla.

I make this explanation in order that I may be correctly understood.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the New York Produce Exchange, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 561, authorizing the establishment of a free port at Fort Pond Bay or elsewhere in the waters of Long Island, in the State of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the faculty and students of the University of Washington, of Seattle, in the State of Washington, praying for the establishment of a permanent court of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented sundry petitions of the board of managers of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress, comprising the official documents relating to the Revolutionary period; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of the common council of the city of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for seacoast defenses for the harbor of New York, and also that sufficient provision be made for the protection thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. PEFFER presented the petition of J. W. Wilt and sundry other citizens of Cleo, Okla., praying for the enactment of legislation granting them free homes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of the select and common councils of McKeesport, Pa., remonstrating against the consolidation of the post-office at that city with the Pittsburg post-office; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of N. S. Rulison, of South Bethlehem, Pa., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lebanon, Pa., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the publication by the Government of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a memorial of the Peace Association of Friends of Philadelphia, Pa., to the President and Congress of the United States, on the attitude of Congress relative to the Monroe doctrine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Barr Grange, No. 1121, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania; a petition of Marion Grange, No. 223, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, and a petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of House bill No. 2626, providing for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty, in order to equalize the benefits and burdens of the protective system; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN presented sundry petitions of citizens of Washington, D. C., and a petition of sundry citizens of Anacostia, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1886, or some similar measure, requiring the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company to adopt rapid transit on its lines, and remonstrating against the extension of the tracks of that company until its existing lines are modernly equipped and operated; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the board of managers of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, indorsing the efforts that are being made to insure the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of the Baptist Young People's Union of the Baptist Association of Salem, Mass., representing 5,000 members, praying that Congress apply the principles of the entire separation of church and state as expressed in the matter of appropriations for the support of charities in the District of Columbia and for the education of the Indians; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the publication committee of the Rhode Island Historical Society, and a petition of the board of managers of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. GALLINGER presented sundry petitions of citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1886, or some similar measure, requiring the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company to adopt rapid transit on its lines, and remonstrating against the extension of the tracks of that company until its existing lines are modernly equipped and operated; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon presented sundry petitions of Salem Grange, No. 17, Patrons of Husbandry, of Marion County, Oreg., praying for the passage of House bill No. 2626, providing for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty, in order to equalize the benefits and burdens of the protective system; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baker City, Oreg., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Portland, Oreg., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the common council of Baker City, Oreg., and a petition of the board of trustees of Sodaville, Oreg., praying for the speedy construction of the Nicaragua Canal under the control of the Government; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of George May Powell, president of the Arbitration Council of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the immediate organization of a permanent international court of arbitration; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KYLE presented the petition of C. D. Mosher, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the establishment of a postal coupon savings bank in every post-office in the country; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Manufacturers and Producers' Association of California, praying for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of Japanese manufactures, importations, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, headquarters at Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the adoption of military instruction in the public schools of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of 43 citizens of Chattanooga, Tenn., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. ALLEN. I present a petition of sundry citizens and taxpayers of South Sioux City, Nebr., asking Congress for a special appropriation to protect the Nebraska side of the river front of the Missouri River opposite that city. The petition recites that as a great deal of work and material to protect the river front in the vicinity of and in front of Sioux City, Iowa, on the Iowa side of the Missouri River, is done under the direction of the General Government, it has changed the main channel of that river, and diverted the main channel to the Nebraska side so forcibly as to endanger a large amount of the properfy in South Sioux City, Nebr. The petition also recites that as a result of such change in the channel of the river it is evident that as soon as the ice goes out this spring the powerful current of the river will begin cutting on the Nebraska bank and thus cause a loss of a large amount of valuable property; that during the past year a large amount of property on the Nebraska bank of the river, amounting to many thousands of dollars, has been washed by the channel of the river; that the ground, in many places over 100 feet wide and hundreds of feet long, in South Sioux City, in Nebraska, has been washed away and destroyed by the river and the buildings thereon, in many cases, destroyed. The petitioners ask for immediate action on the part of Congress.

I might suggest in this connection that this petition recites literally the truth. The appropriations for the improvement of the Missouri River in the neighborhood of Sioux City, Iowa, have been used upon the Iowa side. That has forced the channel onto the Nebraska side, which is the lower side of the two, and great inroads have been made upon the Nebraska side, washing away hundreds of feet of valuable property and endangering the buildings, in some instances it being necessary to remove the buildings for safety.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ask the special attention of the committee to it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted by Dunlap Grange, No. 919, Patrons of Husbandry, of Dunlap, Ill., praying for the passage of House bill No. 2626, providing for the protection of agricultural staples by an export bounty, in order to equalize the benefits and burdens of the protective system; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a number of petitions, each being signed by a large number of citizens of Chicago, reciting the atrocities by the Turks and others in that dominion against the Armenians, of which we have frequently heard, and praying that this honorable body "proceed at once to call a conference of all the European powers interested, and that our representatives to that conference be authorized to pledge the influence and support of this Government to any nation or nations who will undertake to rescue the Armenians from their perilous and almost hopeless situation," etc.

I shall not attempt to read more from the petitions, but I move that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration in case it shall be deemed necessary to take any further action by this Government.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Committee on Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that an appropriation of $90,000 be made for the building and equipment of a fog-signal vessel, with auxiliary steam power, to be stationed outside the bar of San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Committee on Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that an appropriation of $20,000 be made for the establishment of a fog-signal station on the Northwest Farallones Islands, lying off the entrance to San Francisco Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Committee on Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that an appropriation of $35,000 be made for the laying of a submarine cable from the mainland at San Francisco to the Farallones Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the appointment of a commission to investigate the question of Japanese manufactures, importations, and the export trade; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the North Dakota Dairy Association, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the manufacture and sale of "filled cheese" on the same basis as oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of L. McL. Hamilton Post, No. 15, Department of North Dakota, Grand Army of the Republic, of Grafton, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation granting a pension to all honorably-discharged soldiers and sailors; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition and statement of Samuel Moore, of Lawrence County, Mo., together with the affidavits of George W. Jones and John Taylor, and also a letter from the Quartermaster-General, in regard to the compensation for stores taken during the war. I move that the petition and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1866) for the incorporation of associations for the improvement of the breed of horses, and to regulate the same, and to establish a racing commission, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1927) to increase the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. 84) to provide for the increase of the water supply of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2122) to provide for the completion of the Washington Aqueduct tunnel, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1568) to provide for the care and cure of inebriates in the District of Columbia, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1449) to provide a home and employment for reputable girls and young women of the District of Columbia who are without means of support and are unable to obtain work, to submit an adverse report thereon.

Mr. CALL. I ask that that bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. McBRIDE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1963) to provide an American register for the steam yacht Ellida, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 105) for the relief of ex-Naval Cadets John P. J. Ryan, John R. Morris, and Chester Wells reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 14) to compile and publish the laws relating to street-railway franchises in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4785) to incorporate the National University, and also the amendment submitted by Mr. CANNON on the 20th instant, intended to be proposed to that bill, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Select Committee to Establish the University of the United States; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted a report, to accompany the bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Fanny Moale Gibbon, heretofore reported by him; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1836) to provide for licenses to certain officers of seagoing passenger steam vessels, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1723) to approve and ratify the construction of a bridge over and across Caddo Lake, at Mooringsport, La., by the Kansas City, Shreveport and Gulf Railway Company, reported it with amendments.

PRINTING OF TREATIES.

Mr. HALE. I report favorably from the Committee on Printing a resolution referred to it on the 17th instant, submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], in relation to the printing of certain treaties, which I ask may be considered at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the treaty of 1850, known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and Articles XX to XXVIII, both inclusive, of the treaty of February 11, 1860, between Great Britain and Nicaragua, and the treaty of 1867 between the United States and Nicaragua, be printed together as a document for the use of the Senate.

LAWS RELATING TO NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

Mr. HALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably a resolution submitted by myself on the 20th instant, providing for the printing of the Compilation of Laws Relating to the Navy, Marine Corps, etc., which I ask may be considered at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing the Compilation of Laws Relating to the Navy, Marine Corps, etc., be brought up from March 3, 1883, to March 3, 1896, and indexed; and when completed the Joint Committee on Printing shall report what number of copies of the same shall be printed and bound, the form of the same, and the proper distribution thereof; the cost of said compilation to be covered by appropriations to be reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

UNITED STATES BUILDING AT JEFFERSON CITY, MO.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2170) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to grant temporary occupation of certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo., to the courts of Cole County, Mo., to report it back adversely, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed; and as a substitute to that bill I report a joint resolution, which I ask the Senate to consider at this time. It is a mere formal matter, as will be made known by the reading of it, and can give rise to no debate. The circumstances are such as to require immediate action of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. R. 85) granting to the county of Cole, Mo., permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo., was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That full permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the county of Cole, State of Missouri, to occupy the United States court room and two jury rooms connected therewith in the United States building at Jefferson City, Cole County, Mo., during the months of March, July, and November, 1896, and March, 1897, for the purpose of holding sessions of the circuit court of said Cole County therein, and that during said occupation concurrent jurisdiction, so far as it is necessary, over said building be, and is hereby, ceded to the State of Missouri and to said county of Cole, so that the sessions of said court in said building and rooms may be, during said period, fully legalized: Provided, That said rooms shall be kept in good repair at the expense of said county of Cole, and at the end of March, 1897, the use of said rooms shall be relinquished to the United States by said county, the premises to be in as good condition as before their occupancy by said circuit court of Cole County: Provided further, That the sessions of said circuit court of Cole County shall in no way interfere with the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized in his discretion at any time to terminate this permit and the possession hereby granted of said premises upon thirty days' notice to the judges of the county court of said county.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate bill 2170, relating to the same subject-matter, will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2226) to amend the laws relating to American seamen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2227) to amend section 4233 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for distinctive signals and lights for towing steamers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2228) granting a pension to Noah Pillsbury; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2229) granting a pension to Henry W. Schroder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2230) to remove the charge of desertion against John L. Richardson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2231) for the relief of D. J. Holmes, of Portland, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 2233) to increase the pension of John Gray; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2234) to increase the pension of Odilia Logan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2235) for the relief of the heirs of Asa Chilson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2236) to reorganize the personnel of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2237) providing for the appointment of a committee or guardian for pensioners in certain cases in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2238) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Stevens; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 2239) for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Paul, at Franklin, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2240) granting a pension to Mrs. Laura Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2241) granting a pension to Mary Yates; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2242) for the relief of James M. Foster, of Houston, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2243) for the relief of Rev. Robert Meacham; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CHILTON introduced a bill (S. 2244) granting to the Alabama tribe of Indians in the State of Texas 25,000 acres of land; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 2245) for the relief of L. H. Lyne & Co., late of Lynchburg, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 2246) for the relief of Mrs. William Loring Spencer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 86) directing the Secretary of War to furnish certain information with reference to the projects for the improvement of the harbor of Cumberland Sound, Georgia, and St. Johns River, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I submit a proposed amendment to the bill (H. R. 5819) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California that has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending before the Committee on Public Lands. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings in relation to matters pending before it, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF LIEUTENANT FOULKE.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate all information in his Department relating to the claim against the Government of the legal representatives of the late Lieutenant Foulke, sometime chargé d'affaires in Korea.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 2,000 additional copies of Report No. 290 be printed for the use of the Committee on Immigration.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Sarah A. Moore, now in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be withdrawn from the files of that office, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the papers in the claim of James G. Barker, now in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be withdrawn from the files of that office, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the claim of James K. Bowman, now in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, be withdrawn from the files of that office, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of Henry H. Schrawder;

A bill (H. R. 1499) to correct the muster of Lieut. Gilman L. Johnson.

A bill (H. R. 1821) to reopen and adjust the account for service of Lieut. Col. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers; and

A bill (H. R. 3596) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Michael McKenna.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 2797) granting a pension to Peter B. Palmenteer;

A bill (H. R. 3432) for the relief of John E. Evans; and

A bill (H. R. 4220) granting a pension to Charles A. Foster, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army.

The bill (H. R. 5672) to grant to railroad companies in Indian Territory additional powers to secure depot grounds was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

TIMBER-CULTURE ENTRIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 103) relating to final proof in timber-culture entries; which was, in line 3, to strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings in relation to matters pending before it, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VEST. Does that come from the Committee on Contingent Expenses?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is reported favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses, having been referred to that committee this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the committee have called before them the contestants for the building of a cable to China and Japan, and the committee were of the opinion that the examination ought to be made very carefully.

Mr. VEST. I do not desire to be hypercritical, of course, nor to interfere with the business of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I may have misapprehended the purport of the resolution. Does it propose to employ a stenographer permanently?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no. It may be confined to a single case, or for a single week. As a matter of course, the committee will not abuse a privilege of that kind.

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand that in all these cases the payment of the stenographer is so much a page. There can be no employment of a salaried stenographer under any such resolution. The employment is to do particular work; the compensation is so much per page, and if the reporting is not done no payment is made. That is the way I understand all resolutions which authorize a committee to employ a stenographer while taking reports of hearings which take place before it.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to the resolution. I misapprehended its purport. Some one told me it was for the permanent employment of a stenographer.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. In the Committee on Commerce, where we do a great deal of this kind of work, and have hearings almost from week to week, it is our habit to employ a stenographer for the time being, and he is paid by the page.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what is intended to be done under this resolution, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MATILDA GRESHAM.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when the pension bills were under consideration a few days ago, at my request the bill granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, was laid over at the request of the Senators from Indiana. I now ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken up to permit the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] to submit brief observations on the matter, and if there be no objection, I shall ask that the bill be acted upon at the close of his remarks.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $200 per month.

Mr. TURPIE. I move that the amendment to the bill reported by the Committee on Pensions be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "one"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Inierior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda Gresham, widow of Walter Q. Gresham, late a brigadier-general, at the rate of $100 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, Walter Q. Gresham, a native of Indiana, was at the beginning of the present Administration tendered the office of Secretary of State, and accepted the same.

This appointment took the country by surprise not greater than that which befell the recipient. He had never been known as a member of the Democratic party, and in respect of political precedents it was regarded as quite singular—as a broad departure from established usage—that he should have been selected for this high place.

The formation of the celebrated coalition ministry of England in 1783, in which Lord North and Mr. Fox, before that time most violent political adversaries, were commissioned as joint secretaries of state, does not afford a parallel. The famous coalition was, as is now well known, the result of careful conference and premeditated combination, elements wholly absent in the case of Gresham.

The taking of the same office by Mr. Clay, under the Presidency of the younger Adams, bore, perhaps, a stronger resemblance thereto than any other in our own history, yet there are in such a parallel some very sharp discrepancies.

Mr. Clay was a very eminent public character, the idolized leader of one great section of his party. He had been himself a candidate for the Chief Magistracy. He and his friends had not supported at first the candidacy of Mr. Adams, but they had opposed that of General Jackson with as much zeal and earnestness as any of the friends of the newly elected President. After the failure of choice in the electoral college, when the question had come to close quarters in the House of Representatives, the friends of Mr. Clay openly advocated the choice of Mr. Adams, and really brought about his election. Whatever may have been the purpose or action of the followers of Mr. Clay in the beginning of this historic contest, in the end he became a principal supporter of the President thus chosen, and it was not in contravention of usage, but in strict accordance therewith, that he should receive the place of premier in the Cabinet.

Mr. Clay, in the meridian of his career as a civilian and diplomatist, had, in both Houses of Congress, during the Administration of Adams, a primacy almost as great as in the Cabinet of which he became a member. His friends in the Senate and the House distinctly approved of his acceptance of the position of Secretary of State—proudly bore with him the obloquy which accompanied it, treated with disdain the aspersions incident to his action, and prepared to give to his policy in the conduct of foreign affairs the same unfaltering support which they had so often before granted to their chief.

No such welcome, no such troop of friends greeted Gresham when he entered upon the discharge of the duties of his high office. He had, indeed, with marked credit, formerly held important positions in official life; he had been Postmaster-General; he had for a time been Secretary of the Treasury in the Administration of Arthur, but this was while he stood in the alignment, very near the front of the alignment, of the Republican party.

He now reentered public life a stranger to those of his old political household, and his introduction to those of the new, though evidenced by the manifest sign of Executive favor, lacked much of amity or intimacy therein.

His original position was one of threatened isolation, yet not long; the man himself was never isolated. His bonhommie, his modesty, his genuine truth and honesty of character, his uniform courtesy, his swift and accurate apprehension of the subjects and policies within the province of his Department, dominated the difficulties which surrounded him, and rapidly established between himself and his colleagues in the Administration and the members of the National Legislature those intimate and direct relations so necessary to the successful administration of the functions entrusted to his charge. Only superior abilities, with the wisest tact and discretion, could have availed to overcome these initial embarrassments of his latest public service.

At the very threshold of his term he was confronted with the serious complications arising from the then recent revolution in Hawaii. These were followed by a series of tentative negotiations concerning the tripartite protectorate instituted by a former Government over the Islands of Samoa, while about the same time a new treaty was concluded under his auspices with the Emperor of China, almost tantamount to a renewal of diplomatic relations with that Government.

The international regulations between Great Britain and the United States concerning the seal fisheries of Alaska received his constant and careful consideration.

The war between China and Japan, now so happily ended, wherein both belligerents requested that the protection of the citizens of either residing in the country of the other should be placed under the care and jurisdiction of the consular authorities of the United States, required the framing and execution of new rules and regulations, the justice and the equity of which established his reputation as a statesman and diplomatist in those distant regions, added to the prestige of our country, and led at last to the truce, the suspension of armed conflict, and to the restoration of peace between those nations.

His negotiations with Great Britain on the subject of the occupancy of certain places on the Mosquito Coast resulted in an ultimate settlement—very quiet, even now not much known—by which that power conceded that its claims to exercise sovereignty in any part of the territory were not well founded and no longer to be enforced.

Several of these negotiations were conducted simultaneously and required the utmost versatility of address and management. The mass of correspondence passing under his supervison and prepared by his direction, the large number of rapid and sudden messages of communication with our diplomatic and consular representatives in those remote quarters of the world where these affairs were being dealt with, disclosed the fact that no term of the office of Secretary of State has been more deeply marked than this, with the labor and responsibility incident thereto, since the close of the civil war.

Gresham was, at the time of his appointment as Secretary of State, judge of the circuit court of the United States, holding its principal sessions in the metropolis of the Northwest, the city of Chicago. He had been also for many years judge of the circuit and district courts in the State of Indiana. It is by his long and distinguished service in these positions that he is best known to the people of that section of the country.

Very acceptable to the profession by reason of his complaisance, patience, and diligence, well versed in the Federal practice, thoroughly imbued with the fundamental principles of the common law, fully acquainted with the statutory modifications thereof by acts of Congress, still the prominent, distinctive trait of his judicial character was the love of justice for its own sake. All other things were subordinate to this controlling passion. Substitutes were set aside, all subterfuges were scorned that this love of justice might have its way. In his court there was not the least respect of persons. The poor, the humble, the unknown, were heard, heeded, never denied, often comforted.

The partisan, in personal or professional guise, had no standing there—was dismissed without day. As he cleared away from his own heart and mind all considerations of political differences in the discharge of his judicial functions, so he did not tolerate them in others.

He suffered not the laborer to be defrauded of his hire. Bondholders and mortgagees might gain their priority in decree, but the just claims of the workman were never forgotten—always privileged and preferred. No matter what might be the condition of business upon his docket, charity and mercy had, for every day of the term, their places on the calendar. Such were the arts and such the qualities that clothed the ermine he wore with dazzling splendor in the eyes of that vast constituency among whom he administered the laws of his country.

He received his first judicial appointment, without solicitation, from President Grant, under whom he had served as a soldier during the war for the Union. He had been very severely wounded in battle; he had never recovered from the effects of this; death was the only cure.

The labors of the Federal bench, mainly sedentary in their character, accorded somewhat with his physical disability, with the severe recurring attacks of his infirmity, and many of his friends thought that the performance of the duties of the new office which he had assumed, very laborious and exacting, had shortened his life.

It is certain that even before his mortal illness premonitory symptoms of failing physical power, had betimes shown themselves. But the cheerful words and manner of the Secretary, the almost smiling, playful unconcern with which he spoke of his malady, deceived his friends as to its dangerous extent, even in the last days of his survival.

Much worn by the work and manifold anxieties of his great office, enfeebled more and more by the wasting exhaustion of the wound unhealed, he met without fear the last enemy, whom he had, in the shock of arms, often met before. Like a stricken sentinel, still keeping his post, calmly awaiting the approach of the relief guard, he sank into the grave.

In the beautiful language of Holy Writ we are taught that the grave is a place where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. Not only the persecuted, the oppressed, the troubled have deliverance there; but the tired, those who have borne the burden and heat of the day—nobly, grandly borne it; needing release and quittance from their labor—these also, the weary, are at rest. All the children of Adam meet there together; none are shut out from that retreat. The rich and the penniless are there, the most eminent, the most obscure, the young and the aged, the small and the great are there, and the servant—even this great servant of the people—is free from his master.

Here, then, we may note the close of life of one who was no mere meddler among mediocrities, but a leader among chiefs, who strode, a youth, from the camp into the court, from the court into the Cabinet, and thence returned, and yet again stepped forward to the first place at the council table of the nation. Divorced, as he was, by the duties of his judicial station from active participation in the political contests of his time, with the keenest appreciation of those proprieties which he never overstepped, he received high honors from both the great parties of the country, as if nature had given him some strange right of primogeniture to survey the diversified fields of fame and action and to make his choice of them.

His promotion and advancement came to pass as of right—without self-seeking or reproach. Saying and doing in such a man had much of excellence, but being, more.

The strength which availed in him was that of being. It was that of the person, of tone, of touch, of presence—that which all men have noticed, which none have known; no, not at any time. That force which, like the X ray, eludes description and defies analysis.

The world allowed this claim of excellence, well pleased, without protest, without demand or notice on his part. It was accepted and honored at sight.

As a soldier he was approved by Grant—one whom the great captain delighted to honor.

As a jurist, the long record of equities enforced, of rights vindicated, of wrongs redressed, unreversed and irreversible, attests his blameless probity and spotless honor.

As a statesman and diplomatist, the history of this age will yet give him high rank. Even the dusky myriads of the nations of the far East have learned to revere his name and memory—have sent only yesterday, across the ocean intervening, after the manner of the Orient, gifts, mementos, to the inmate of that house, now left unto her desolate, in token of their grief and gratitude.

The Senators who have the honor to represent the State of Indiana in this body have deemed it not unfitting that one of them, in behalf of both, and of the people of their great constituencies, should make some mention of a career and character so notable; and we entreat the Senate to favorably consider the pending measure, wherein the beneficiary is the consort, sadly bereaved, of one who had in many spheres of service deserved well of the Republic.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month."

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE ST. FRANCIS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 3962) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. M. VANDLING.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 281) for the relief of F. M. Vandling.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to give credit to F. M. Vandling, postmaster at Scranton, Pa., in the sum of $8,300 for postage stamps stolen from that office on August 3, 1894, through no fault of the said F. M. Vandling.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE CUTTERS FOR THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1409) providing for the construction and equipment of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Great Lakes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to have constructed and equipped two steam revenue cutters of the first class for service on the Great Lakes at a cost of not exceeding $200,000 for each vessel.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. H. FERGUSON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1716) for the relief of W. H. Ferguson, administrator of the estate of Thomas H. Millsaps. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicates in the name of W. H. Ferguson, administrator of the estate of Thomas H. Millsaps, in lieu of certain United States 4 per cent registered bonds inscribed in the name of H. Webb, trustee, the bonds having been lost or stolen from W. H. Ferguson after assignment in blank and delivery by H. Webb, trustee, to Ferguson.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEGED ASSESSMENTS IN THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts calls for the regular order. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. PEFFER, instructing the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to make investigation as to the levying and collection of assessments for political purposes from employees of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the resolution may lie upon the table subject to be called up when I may choose to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1591) to extend the mineral-land laws of the United States to lands embraced in the north half of the Colville Indian Reservation; and

The joint resolution (S. R. 39) making an appropriation to defray the joint expense of locating the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British North American territory.

SALES AND PROCEEDS OF SALES OF BONDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. LODGE, directing the Committee on Finance to investigate and report all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894 to 1896, inclusive.

Mr. PEFFER. I heretofore offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending resolution. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the original resolution be read first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts will first be read, and then the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 19th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896, and how the proceeds of such bonds were disposed of, and to what purposes the said proceeds were devoted.

The SECRETARY. Amendment submitted by Mr. PEFFER on the 20th instant. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:

That a committee of five Senators shall be appointed by the Vice-President, whose duty it shall be—

First. To investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Second. To investigate and report specially what amount of available funds, classified, was in the United States Treasury and on deposit in other places, subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time the bonds were sold or offered for sale; whether there was or was not coin enough on hand to meet all coin obligations of the Government due at the time said bonds were sold or when they were offered for sale; what obligations were due at that time and the amount of each, stated separately; what was the reason for any unusual withdrawal of coin from the Treasury shortly before bonds were sold or offered for sale, if such unusual withdrawals were in fact made, and by what persons or classes of persons and for what purpose or on what account such withdrawals were made; who purchased the bonds, in what amounts, and where, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, and in what proportions, and from what persons or classes of persons the gold was procured with which to pay for the bonds, what the bonds sold for, and what was the market price of our Government bonds at the time, and what effect the bond sales had on the credit and business of the people of the United States.

Third. To investigate and report as to the manner of disposing of said bonds, by what authority, and what contracts, advertisements, or proposals were made by the Secretary of the Treasury in relation thereto; what agreements or contracts, and whether oral or in writing, and whether publicly or privately, were entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury and any other person or persons with respect to the sale and purchase of the bonds, and what profits were made by the purchasers; whether any officer of the Government, or any person or persons for such officer, and on his behalf, and in his personal interest, and with his knowledge or consent, entered into any contract, agreement, or arrangement, directly or indirectly, with any person or persons, partnership, corporation, company, or syndicate, for the purpose of affecting the price offered or to be offered for said bonds or any of them, with the intent and expectation to receive commission or personal reward by reason of such contract, agreement, or arrangement; whether such contract or agreement had any and what effect on the prices offered for the bonds, what the effect was, and who, if any person, profited by it, and to what extent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I believe the motion is not debatable, Mr. President.

Mr. HILL. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that this is the amendment or substitute——

Mr. LODGE. I ask if the motion is debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to speak merely for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

Mr. HILL. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is in effect a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts. It was offered the other day, and I spoke briefly upon it; I did not at that time complete my remarks. I understand the Senator from Kansas now desires to press the amendment, which brings up the whole question.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not desire to discuss the amendment at all. I simply wish to have a vote upon it.

Mr. HILL. I desire to discuss it.

Mr. LODGE. I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. HILL. I desire to discuss the matter.

Mr. LODGE. I have moved to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his objection to the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LODGE. I understood that the Senator from New York simply desired to make a suggestion. I did not understand that he was going to make a speech. I moved purposely to lay the amendment on the table in order to cut off debate on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to address the Senate upon the pending amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. I thought unanimous consent had been given to me to speak, but I will find some way to speak.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New York will have ample time to discuss my resolution if the motion to lay on the table is agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas demands the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. PASCO. I think it would be well for the Chair to state the question that is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to lay upon the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. I suggest that a transfer be made so that that Senator will stand paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is absent and has requested that he be paired. I do not know how either of them would vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I propose to exchange pairs with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], who is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and that transfer being made, I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. I am not aware how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote. If the junior Senator from Ohio were present and voting, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. I do not know how he would vote on this motion. I should vote "yea," but I will withhold my vote. I know that the junior Senator from Alabama is generally favorable to the matter of this investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to pair the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. MCBRIDE. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I do not know how he would vote if present. Therefore I withhold my vote. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Gray,	Palmer,
Allison,	Frye,	Hawley,	Quay,
Bacon,	Gear,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Wetmore.

NAYS—34.

Allen,	Cannon,	Jones, Nev.	Roach,
Baker,	Carter,	Lindsay,	Shoup,
Bate,	Chilton,	Mantle,	Teller,
Berry,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Turpie,
Brown,	Davis,	Morgan,	Vest,
Burrows,	Gordon,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	White.
Caffery,	Harris,	Perkins,
Cameron,	Hill,	Pritchard,

NOT VOTING—39.

Blackburn,	George,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Squire,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Brice,	Hale,	Murphy,	Thurston,
Call,	Hoar,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Clark,	Irby,	Pettigrew,	Vilas,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,	Voorhees,
Dubois,	Kyle,	Proctor,	Warren,
Elkins,	McBride,	Pugh,	Wilson,
Faulkner,	McMillan,	Sewell,	Wolcott.
Gallinger,	Mills,	Smith,

So the Senate refused to lay Mr. PEFFER'S amendment upon the table.

Mr. BACON. In order that my vote upon the motion to lay upon the table may not be misunderstood, I ask permission of the Senate to state that while I favor an investigation, I prefer the resolution as offered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. For that reason I voted to lay the amendment on the table with the intention and for the purpose of voting for the original resolution offered by him.

Mr. HARRIS. I voted against laying the amendment of the Senator from Kansas on the table for the reason that I am not inclined to object to any extent of investigation any Senator desires to have; but I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Kansas by striking out that part of the amendment which provides for the raising of a select committee and inserting "That the Committee on Finance be directed to investigate." I am opposed to raising a select committee for the purposes indicated. As I stated, I have no objection to any extent of investigation that any Senator may deem necessary or proper or desire to have, but the Finance Committee is a standing committee of the body and the proper committee to conduct such an investigation, in my opinion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I voted against the motion to lay on the table because I assumed that before this debate should go over the resolution, in substantially the same form, would be offered again by some Senator, and therefore we might as well discuss it at one time as another.

I am opposed to the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, as I stated the other day when it was proposed by him in an independent form. Subsequently the Senator from Massachusetts offered the resolution which is now before the Senate, to which the Senator from Kansas moved his resolution as an amendment. I am free to say, sir, that so far as the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts is concerned, it is not objectionable in form, that it treats the Secretary of the Treasury courteously, and that in other respects it is unobjectionable if any investigation whatever is to be had.

Mr. President, I do not assume that it is the province of the Senate to investigate any and every subject that may be presented for investigation by a Senator. I think, on the contrary, that we will best discharge our duties by exercising a wise discrimination in regard to these investigations, that we should scrutinize the resolutions as they are presented, that we should ascertain the motives behind them if we can, and the real object to be subserved by pressing them.

It is a strange doctrine, sir, that every act of a Department is to be investigated simply upon the bare suggestion of a Senator. Mr. President, we have a right to call for information. We have a right to direct Departments to respond at length in reference to particular inquiries which may be embraced in resolutions; and the various Departments of the Government very quickly respond. Requests for information are one thing, entirely unobjectionable; requests for investigations, formal investigations, solemn investigations, are an entirely different thing.

Mr. President, you can not change the public opinion in regard to investigations formally ordered by the Senate. There is always an implication in the public mind that there is something to be investigated, something that requires investigation, something demanding it, because something has been done out of the ordinary course of public affairs. I think I can lay down a better rule, which is, that before either a standing committee or a select committee shall be empowered to conduct a formal investigation of a public transaction there shall be something tangible presented, something definite, something specific, and that we should not rush over one another in our haste to investigate public affairs every time some Senator here suggests an inquiry.

Sir, I am opposed to the proposed investigation not merely because this resolution affects a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury. I would oppose it, sir, if my worst political opponent occupied that high chair. I oppose it because it is based upon nothing tangible. I oppose it because there are things recited in these resolutions which are mere idle rumor. I oppose it because the things to be investigated are mainly merely sensational newspaper gossip; nothing more nor less. I oppose it because the whole investigation seems to be based upon the wails and complaints of disappointed bidders. Therefore, sir, I start out with the proposition that resolutions of investigation should not be hastily passed; that they should not be lightly considered; that we should proceed cautiously and carefully before we delegate such a power, to make reports and to affect by written conclusions presented to this body the conduct of public officials.

As I said at the outset, requests for information are one thing, but in a proceeding to investigate something more is required. I say that the mere passage of a resolution of inquiry implies in the public estimation, if not in fact, the existence of a well-founded suspicion of some wrongdoing. I know it might be said that a suit for divorce by a man against his wife, or a wife against her husband, implies nothing; it is simply brought for the purpose of determining the guilt or the innocence of the party, that is all; it is a mere inquiry to see whether the alleged charges are true or false. Upon the same reasoning it might be said that an indictment for a crime is merely an ex parte proceeding; that it casts no reflection upon a man; that it is simply instituted for the purpose of determining the question whether or not the accused is guilty, that is all.

Mr. President, formal investigation by the Senate of the United States of an alleged official transaction should not be hastily passed, but should be most carefully considered.

The Senator from Kansas who instituted this investigation the other day, the first resolution on the subject, said that he wanted to gratify public curiosity. The ground of inquiry stated by a Senator of this body was to gratify public curiosity. I submit before we proceed to gratify public curiosity let there be presented some specific charges from some responsible source, charges not from Senators who do not themselves assume to have any personal knowledge of the transactions. Let the charges come from some person or persons who do claim to be possessed of some knowledge, or be championed by some one who stands here ready to say that he honestly believes them.

Mr. President, while now speaking on the subject of investigations generally, let me suggest that if this investigation shall be ordered it will be difficult to resist any investigation that may be demanded in the future—an investigation of any kind or character, no matter how trivial, no matter how unsatisfactory the facts may be upon which it is desired. Open up this practice, start out with it upon the broad ground that every time a transaction has taken place by any Department of this Government we must proceed upon the mere ipse dixit of a Senator to institute a formal investigation, and I say you let loose a flood which you can not stop. We set a precedent here which will surely return to plague us. Every investigation then requested by a Senator must be granted, if consistency is hereafter to be observed.

Mr. President, it strikes me that if there is anything in the recent bond sales which requires investigation there should be a resolution presented in a series of "whereases," that we may precisely know what is the charge presented, in order that we may know just what is claimed, in order that the result when reached may be compared with what was anticipated, predicted, and alleged.

In this case, on either resolution, if we proceed at all we must proceed in the dark, in order possibly better to stab in the dark. There is an attempt to insinuate what is hesitated to be boldly asserted. The author of the Peffer resolution, if I may so term it, stated his reasons in his speech and he is presumed to have stated them all. I suggest that he knows as well as anybody knows what he wants. He has introduced a great many resolutions of investigation in the Senate, and he is an adept and an expert in regard thereto. The other day in his speech he said that he was glad I had anticipated him in his resolution by asking that the Secretary furnish to the Senate a list of the bidders, the names and amounts paid, etc., and he recalls the fact that several years ago I stood by him in certain information that he was seeking in the Senate. It was during the panic of 1893. I recall the circumstance well. But, sir, I beg to remind him that that was not a resolution of investigation at all. It neither called for a special nor a regular committee to investigate. It was a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for what information he might have in his Department showing whether certain banks in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston were or were not violating the law in the issuing of clearing-house certificates. That was the resolution, and it was a very proper resolution of inquiry. It was a usual and ordinary resolution calling for information from that Department.

Sir, I have nothing to regret in the fact that I did support the Senator from Kansas in asking for that information. Subsequently, if I recollect aright, some two or three months afterwards, after the panic was somewhat over, the resolution was passed and the Secretary of the Treasury reported that he had no information in his possession in regard thereto. So much for that. That is an entirely different proceeding from the one now before the Senate which he has introduced.

Mr. President, let me reiterate what I said the other day. The Senator says, in the first place, he wants to investigate by what authority these bonds were issued. In the few moments given to me the other day I discussed that question. I said distinctly that the authority was given under the act of 1875. What do you want a special committee or a general committee to investigate that legal question again for? As I said then and repeat now, has it not been stated over and over again in official communications, in messages and reports? Yet one of the first points involved in this resolution is to investigate the question as to the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue these bonds.

I know it has been stated here by several of the farmers in the Senate that they doubted the authority. The Senator in front of me [Mr. ALLEN] says that the Treasury Department has no authority. I used to listen with great interest to what that Senator said upon judicial and legal questions, coming here as he did from a distant State, having served in that State in a high judicial capacity. I formerly listened and paid great attention to what he said upon legal questions. I must differ from him now, because the other day, you will recollect, he rose in the Senate and said that he was a farmer; and if that is so I am inclined not to follow his judicial opinions any longer.

Mr. ALLEN. I said I was a democrat.

Mr. HILL. One statement was perhaps about as true as the other. If he is no better farmer than he is a democrat, I pity the crops that are raised out in Nebraska. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

WAR IN CUBA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following concurrent resolution, reported on the 5th instant by the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States—

The pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. CAMERON to substitute for the concurrent resolution the following:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to interpose his friendly offices with the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on the 29th of January, by order of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I reported from that committee a concurrent resolution on the subject of the recognition of belligerency in Cuba. Afterwards the committee chose to change their ground, with my concurrence (I was pleased with the change), and they reported the resolution which is now before the Senate. That was on the 5th day of February. I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution reported on the 5th day of February shall be substituted for the resolution reported on the 29th of January from the same committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations on February 5 may be substituted for the one reported from that committee on the 29th of January. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on last Thursday, when I had the honor of occupying the floor upon the resolution which is now before the Senate, several questions of a very grave and important nature were asked me by Senators, which I said at the time I should endeavor to answer before I finally left the floor upon this resolution. Before doing so, however, I shall present in order, and as concisely as I can, a statement of our relations with Spain in connection with Cuba, based upon the utterances of our predecessors in the Senate and of some of the wisest statesmen who have filled the highest places in our Government. I shall be painstaking in this and other presentations of the facts and opinions of the various American statesmen, because the committee have not seen proper to present a formal report in which they have displayed the whole ground of their action upon this very important subject.

Mr. Adams, in April, 1823, while Secretary of State, in a letter to Mr. Nelson writes as follows:

In the war between France and Spain, now commencing, other interests, peculiarly ours, will in all probability be deeply involved. Whatever may be the issue of this war as between those two European powers, it may be taken for granted that the dominion of Spain upon the American continents, North and South, is irrevocably gone. But the islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico still remain nominally, and so far, really, dependent upon her, that she yet possesses the power of transferring her own dominion over them, together with the possession of them, to others. These islands, from their local position, are natural appendages to the North American continent, and one of them (Cuba) almost in sight of our shores, from a multitude of considerations, has become an object of transcendent importance to the commercial and political interests of our Union. Its commanding position, with reference to the Gulf of Mexico and the West India seas; the character of its population; its situation midway between our southern coast and the Island of Santo Domingo; its safe and capacious harbor of the Havana, fronting a long line of our shores destitute of the same advantage; the nature of its productions and of its wants, furnishing the supplies and needing the returns of a commerce immensely profitable and mutually beneficial, give it an importance in the sum of our national interests with which that of no other foreign territory can be compared, and little inferior to that which binds the different members of this Union together. Such, indeed, are, between the interests of that island and of this country, the geographical, commercial, moral, and political relations formed by nature, gathering, in the process of time, and even now verging to maturity, that, in looking forward to the probable course of events for the short period of half a century, it is scarcely possible to resist the conviction that the annexation of Cuba to our Federal Republic will be indispensable to the continuance and integrity of the Union itself.

The same great statesman from the Northeast, on the 28th of April, 1823, writing also to Mr. Nelson, says:

The transfer of Cuba to Great Britain would be an event unpropitious to the interests of this Union. The opinion is so generally entertained, that even the groundless rumors that it was about to be accomplished, which have spread abroad, and are still teeming, may be traced to the deep and almost universal feeling of aversion to it and to the alarm which the mere probability of its occurrence has stimulated. The question both of our right and of our power to prevent it, if necessary by force, already obtrudes itself upon our councils, and the Administration is called upon, in the performance of its duties to the nation, at least, to use all the means within its competency to guard against and forefend it.

On the 11th of June, 1823, Mr. Jefferson, in writing to President Monroe on this same subject, said:

I had supposed [when writing a former letter] an English interest there (in Cuba) quite as strong as that of the United States, and therefore that to avoid war and keep the island open to our own commerce it would be best to join that power in mutually guaranteeing its independence. But if there is no danger of its falling into the possession of England, I must retract an opinion founded on an error of fact. We are surely under no obligation to give her gratis an interest which she has not; and the whole inhabitants being averse to her, and the climate mortal to strangers, its continued military occupation by her would be impracticable. It is better, then, to lie still, in readiness to receive that interesting incorporation when solicited by herself, for certainly her addition to our confederacy is exactly what is wanted to round our power as a nation to the point of its utmost interest.

Mr. Clay takes up the subject in a letter to Mr. King, of October 17, 1825, and says:

Instructions were sent, under direction of the President (Mr. J. Q. Adams), by Mr. Clay, when Secretary of State, to the ministers to the leading European Governments to announce "that the United States, for themselves, desired no change in the political condition of Cuba; that they were satisfied that it should remain, open as it now is, to their commerce, and that they could not with indifference see it passing from Spain to any (other) European power."

In writing to Mr. Brown on the 25th of October, 1825, Mr. Clay said:

You will now add that we could not consent to the occupation of those islands (Cuba and Puerto Rico) by any other European power than Spain under any contingency whatever.

Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Campbell, on the 14th day of January, 1843, says:

The Spanish Government has long been in possession of the policy and wishes of this Government in regard to Cuba, which have never changed, and has repeatedly been told that the United States never would permit the occupation of that island by British agents or forces upon any pretext whatever; and that in the event of any attempt to wrest it from her, she might securely rely upon the whole naval and military resources of this country to aid her in preserving or recovering it.

On the 15th of July, 1840, Mr. Forsyth, Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Burwell, says:

The United States will resist at every hazard an attempt of any foreign power to wrest Cuba from Spain. "And you are authorized to assure the Spanish Government that in case of any attempt, from whatever quarter, to wrest from her this portion of her territory, she may securely depend upon the military and naval resources of the United States to aid her in preserving or recovering it."

While Secretary of State, Mr. Buchanan wrote to Mr. Saunders, on the 13th of June, 1847, as follows:

The United States will not tolerate any invasions of Cuba by citizens of neutral States.

Mr. Crittenden, of Kentucky, while Acting Secretary of State, in writing to Mr. Sartiges, on the 22d of October, 1851, says:

The geographical position of the Island of Cuba, in the Gulf of Mexico, lying at no great distance from the mouth of the river Mississippi, and in the line of the greatest current of the commerce of the United States, would become, in the hands of any powerful European nation, an object of just jealousy and apprehension to the people of this country. A due regard to their own safety and interest must therefore make it a matter of importance to them who shall possess and hold dominion over that island. The Government of France and those of other European nations were long since officially apprised by this Government that the United States could not see without concern that island transferred by Spain to any other European State.

Mr. Webster again, while Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Ballinger, on the 26th of November, 1851, says:

The colonies of Spain are near to our own shores. Our commerce with them is large and important, and the records of the diplomatic intercourse between the two ccuntries will manifest to Her Catholic Majesty's Government how sincerely and how steadily the United States has manifested the hope that no political changes might lead to a transfer of these colonies from Her Majesty's Crown. If there is one among the existing Governments of the civilized world which for a long course of years has diligently sought to maintain amicable relations with Spain it is the Government of the United States. Not only does the correspondence between the two Governments show this, but the same truth is established by the history of the legislation of this country and the general course of the executive government. In this recent invasion Lopez and his fellow-subjects in the United States succeeded in deluding a few hundred men by a long-continued and systematic misrepresentation of the political condition of the island and of the wishes of its inhabitants. And it is not for the purpose of reviewing unpleasant recollections that Her Majesty's Government is reminded that it is not many years since the commerce of the United States suffered severely from armed boats and vessels which found refuge and shelter in the ports of the Spanish islands. These violators of the law, these authors of gross violence toward the citizens of this Republic, were finally suppressed, not by any effort of the Spanish authorities, but by the activity and vigilance of our Navy. This, however, was not accomplished but by the efforts of several years, nor until many valuable lives, as well as a vast amount of property, had been lost. Among others, Lieutenant Allen, a very valuable and distinguished officer in the naval service of the United States, was killed in an action with these banditti.

I now read from the third annual message of President Fillmore in 1852:

The affairs of Cuba formed a prominent topic in my last annual message. They remain in an uneasy condition, and a feeling of alarm and irritation on the part of the Cuban authorities appears to exist. This feeling has interfered with the regular commercial intercourse between the United States and the island, and led to some acts of which we have a right to complain. But the captain-general of Cuba is clothed with no power to treat with foreign Governments, nor is he in any degree under the control of the Spanish minister at Washington. Any communication which he may hold with an agent of a foreign power is informal and a matter of courtesy.

Mr. Marcy, when Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Buchanan, on July 2, 1853, said:

Nothing will be done on our part to disturb its (Cuba's) present connection with Spain, unless the character of that connection should be so changed as to affect our present or prospective security. While the United States would resist at every hazard the transference of Cuba to any European nation, they would exceedingly regret to see Spain resorting to any power for assistance to uphold her rule over it. Such a dependence on foreign aid would in effect invest the auxiliary with the character of a protector and give it a pretext to interfere in our affairs, and also generally in those of the North American continent.

This review of the opinions and statements on these particular topics indicates a very firm and thoroughly understood attitude of the Government of the United States toward Spain in reference to the Island of Cuba. The subject of the acquisition of the Island of Cuba as one of our possessions, we see, was first brought in direct form to the attention of the people of the United States by President Adams, and he then took ground, which was stated as a prophecy, that in fifty years from the time he wrote he expected that Cuba would be in the possession of this country as one of our States or Territories. This subject gained such a hold upon public attention that our ministers at foreign courts in the year 1854, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Mason, and Mr. Soulé, were instructed by the President of the United States to meet at some place in Europe, and there confer upon the best method of acquiring Cuba as one of our possessions, and their meeting was called the Ostend Conference. They met at Ostend, and in Lawrence's Wheaton the result of their meeting is stated, which I will read:

In the summer of 1854 a conference was held by the ministers of the United States accredited at London, Paris, and Madrid, with a view to consult on the negotiations which it might be advisable to carry on simultaneously at these several courts for the satisfactory adjustment with Spain of the affairs connected with Cuba. The joint dispatch of Messrs. Buchanan, Mason, and Soulé to the Secretary of State, dated Aix-la-Chapelle, October 18, 1854, after remarking that the United States had never acquired a foot of territory, not even after a successful war with Mexico, except by purchase or by the voluntary application of the people, as in the case of Texas, thus proceeds: "Our past history forbids that we should acquire the Island of Cuba without the consent of Spain, unless justified by the great law of self-preservation. We must, in any event, preserve our own conscious rectitude and our self-respect. While pursuing this course, we can afford to disregard the censures of the world, to which we have been so often and so unjustly exposed. After we shall have offered Spain a price for Cuba far beyond its present value, and this shall have been refused, it will then be time to consider the question, Does Cuba, in the possession of Spain, seriously endanger our internal peace and the existence of our cherished Union? Should this question be answered in the affirmative, then by every law, human and divine, we shall be justified in wresting it from Spain, if we possess the power; and this upon the very same principle that would justify an individual in tearing down the burning house of his neighbor if there were no other means of preventing the flames from destroying his own home. Under such circumstances, we ought neither to count the cost nor regard the odds which Spain might enlist against us. We forbear to enter into the question whether the present condition of the island would justify such a measure."

President Buchanan, in his second annual message, speaking on the subject of the Island of Cuba, says:

The Island of Cuba, from its geographical position, commands the mouth of the Mississippi and the immense and annually increasing trade, foreign and coastwise, from the valley of that noble river, now embracing half the sovereign States of the Union. With that island under the dominion of a distant foreign power, this trade, of vital importance to these States, is exposed to the danger of being destroyed in time of war, and it has hitherto been subjected to perpetual injury and annoyance in time of peace. Our relations with Spain, which ought to be of the most friendly character, must always be placed in jeopardy whilst the existing colonial government over the island shall remain in its present condition.

And in his third annual message Mr. Buchanan said:

I need not repeat the arguments which I urged in my last annual message in favor of the acquisition of Cuba by fair purchase. My opinions on that measure remain unchanged. I, therefore, again invite the serious attention of Congress to this important subject. Without a recognition of this policy on their part it will be almost impossible to institute negotiations with any reasonable prospect of success.

General Grant, in his special message of June 13, 1870, to the Congress of the United States, seems to have encountered a development of feeling of hostility and jealousy on the part of Spain on account of our relations to Cuba, and possibly on account of all these utterances of our great and leading men, which gave him very deep concern and caused him to send a special message to the Congress of the United States, from which I will make a liberal extract, for the purpose of showing the progress of opinion and of sentiment in the United States, and in Spain also, upon subjects which seem now to have driven us very wide apart. He said:

In my annual message to Congress, at the beginning of its present session, I referred to the contest which had then for more than a year existed in the Island of Cuba between a portion of its inhabitants and the Government of Spain, and the feelings and sympathies of the people and Government of the United States for the people of Cuba, as for all peoples struggling for liberty and self-government, and said that "the contest has at no time assumed the conditions which amount to war, in the sense of international law, or which would show the existence of a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient to justify a recognition of belligerency."

During the six months which have passed since the date of that message the condition of the insurgents has not improved; and the insurrection itself, although not subdued, exhibits no signs of advance, but seems to be confined to an irregular system of hostilities, carried on by small and illy-armed bands of men roaming, without concentration, through the woods and the sparsely populated regions of the island, attacking from ambush convoys and small bands of troops, burning plantations and the estates of those not sympathizing with their cause.

But if the insurrection has not gained ground, it is equally true that Spain has not suppressed it. Climate, disease, and the occasional bullet have worked destruction among the soldiers of Spain; and, although the Spanish authorities have possession of every seaport and every town on the island, they have not been able to subdue the hostile feeling which has driven a considerable number of the native inhabitants of the island to armed resistance against Spain, and still leads them to endure the dangers and the privations of a roaming life of guerrilla warfare.

On either side the contest has been conducted, and is still carried on, with a lamentable disregard of human life and of the rules and practices which modern civilization has prescribed in mitigation of the necessary horrors of war. The torch of Spaniard and of Cuban is alike busy in carrying devastation over fertile regions; murderous and revengeful decrees are issued and executed by both parties. Count Valmaseda and Colonel Boet, on the part of Spain, have each startled humanity and aroused the indignation of the civilized world by the execution, each, of a score of prisoners at a time, while General Quesada, the Cuban chief, coolly, and with apparent unconsciousness of aught else than a proper act, has admitted the slaughter, by his own deliberate order, in one day, of upward of 650 prisoners of war.

A summary trial, with few, if any, escapes from conviction, followed by immediate execution, is the fate of those arrested on either side on suspicion of infidelity to the cause of the party making the arrest.

Whatever may be the sympathies of the people or of the Government of the United States for the cause or objects for which a part of the people of Cuba are understood to have put themselves in armed resistance to the Government of Spain, there can be no just sympathy in a conflict carried on by both parties alike in such barbarous violation of the rules of civilized nations, and with such continued outrage upon the plainest principles of humanity.

We can not discriminate in our censure of their mode of conducting their contest between the Spaniards and the Cubans; each commits the same atrocities and outrages alike the established rules of war.

The properties of many of our citizens have been destroyed or embargoed—

That means confiscated—

the lives of several have been sacrificed, and the liberty of others has been restrained. In every case that has come to the knowledge of the Government, an early and earnest demand for reparation and indemnity has been made, and most emphatic remonstrance has been presented against the manner in which the strife is conducted, and against the reckless disregard of human life, the wanton destruction of material wealth, and the cruel disregard of the established rules of civilized warfare.

That was in the message of June 13, 1870. Even at the end of the brief period which has passed since the delivery of that message by General Grant, one of the most heroic men who ever lived, inured to warfare, and understanding all about its effects and dire results, the people of the United States read this message now again, and reflect upon it, and they wonder how it ever happened that the Government of the United States could stand idly and indifferently by and permit such outrages to go on in the Island of Cuba as those perpetrated there. It was done, Mr. President, in the hope and in the expectation that the Crown of Spain would be enabled to subjugate what was then considered to be a riotous mob, not amounting to a great army in the field, and would by reconciliation bring the people who were natives of this island back to the love of their flag and country, and would cause them to embrace the Monarchy of Spain when it held out to them the gentle hand of promise and made the faithful pledge that in the future their political and personal situation should be better than it had ever been.

I will take occasion here to remark that those pledges were given by the Government of Spain to the people of Cuba, and in consequence of the fact that the Government of the United States at that time turned its back upon the slaughter of more than 600 prisoners by a general who ordered them to be shot down like cattle in a slaughter pen, those people, seeing that the circumstances of their situation were such that they could have no sympathy and comfort from the outside world, turned again to Spain and yielded to her their submission. What has been the result of it? The fruit of it, Mr. President, is now too obvious and distinct to admit of question. The persecutions were renewed because we did not force upon Spain a more humane policy. The promises thus made by Spain to procure the submission of the people of Cuba under the circumstances recited in the message of General Grant have been broken in every possible form, as the Cubans assert, and it has renewed the spirit of revolution, the desire for emancipation, and the love of liberty more potently than it has ever existed heretofore in the Island of Cuba. It may be very well said that our forbearance toward Spain and our omission to do a duty which even then turned our nerves almost into steel with anxiety to perform it have been one more inciting cause of the present lamentable condition of affairs in that island.

This war kept on during President Grant's two terms in office and then during the term of Mr. Hayes in office, and during a part of the term of Mr. Arthur in office, before it could be ended, and it was not until his Administration had proceeded for more than a year, I believe, that Mr. Arthur congratulated the Congress of the United States and the people of the United States on the termination of hostilities in Cuba, under circumstances which promised relief to those people from the oppressions which they had theretofore endured, through the firm, distinct promises of the Government of Spain, all of which Cubans insist have been broken and about which I think there can not be any possible doubt.

The Cubans allege that Spain has broken faith with her own people—that breach of faith which is treason to honor and cruelty added to deliberate deception. Vattel describes civil war and its incidents and results on pages 424 and 425, which I will not now stop to read, and on page 423 of his wonderful book he treats of the obligations of the sovereign to keep faith with the subjects whose submission he has obtained through promises. I refer to these pages for the purpose of getting the attention of Senators to the fundamental law which is laid down by that great writer on the subject of the duty of a government to keep faith with its own citizens when they have once risen in rebellion against that government and at the end of strife or war have yielded their submission to the government upon certain published and agreed conditions. When the submission of the people is obtained by promises of reform, or the conception of new guaranties of liberties to them, there can be no dispute about the justice of their resistance.

If the people of Cuba had been at war with the United States and had surrendered to us, if you please, on a pledge given by treaty that we would grant to them certain rights and privileges, and afterwards we had wickedly and unjustly refused to comply with our promise, that would be a cause of complaint as between two nations which would be classed among that great, almost innumerable, category of causes of complaint which have so frequently brought the nations of the earth into antagonism on battlefields. But in a case of that kind there would be no breach of moral faith toward men of your own blood and your own kindred who had a quarrel, admitted to be righteous and just, to a large extent, because of the reformation which was promised, which quarrel was settled by a submission on the grounds that they would return to all their duties to that Government if the Government would promise to secure them certain rights and privileges which were thereupon agreed to.

Such agreements between the subject and the Crown, between the party who must submit to the superior force of his own Government and the ruling authorities, are attended with a sanction that does not belong to any of the ordinary agreements between nation and nation. They are rested upon the supposition that the monarch has a friendship, a regard, and even a love for his subjects; that he is not their natural enemy; that he is not in office for the purpose of breaking faith with them and robbing them of privileges and rights which he has solemnly granted to them.

But, Mr. President, the history of Cuba from 1717 to the present time is almost a continuous record of complaints, riots, attempted revolutions by the natives on account of alleged oppressions of Spanish rulers and the breach of the promises with which they were compelled to buy their peace from time to time. The measures of repression by which those complaints were stifled and the insurrections were suppressed were extremely cruel and destructive. President Grant has recited some of those things in his message to the Congress of the United States, which I have just read, to which no tongue and no pen could add anything by way of emphasis or to darken the picture.

Twelve men were hanged by Captain-General Guazo in 1723, nearly two centuries ago, and a state of siege was then authorized to be declared throughout the island whenever the captain-general wished it as a precautionary measure. The Island of Cuba from 1723 down to the present time has been left in an attitude where a captain-general at his will and pleasure at any moment of time can declare a state of siege and the existence of martial law. Now, it is impossible to conceive that any people in the world can be under a more strenuous, disagreeable, and dangerous restraint and threat than that which results from the power of their ruler without consulting anybody else at all, at any moment of time to declare a state of war.

Mr. FRYE. Has the captain-general ever been a Cuban?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no. That was never within the contemplation of the Government of Spain so far as I have ever heard.

In 1851 50 men of the Lopez expedition were shot in Havana. These are not referred to by General Grant except in general terms. In 1854 Pinto and his associates to the number of 100 men were shot or deported. Then followed the ten years' war from 1867 to 1878, during the progress of which these enormities occurred to which General Grant refers. Spain had more than 90,000 troops in the field in that war. In 1869 the Spanish troops committed atrocities that shocked the civilized world in the wholesale slaughter of men, women, and children in Havana at the Villa Nueva Theater, at the Louvre, and in the sacking of the house of Aldama.

The number of these cruelties is almost beyond comprehension, and the loss of life is appalling. Spain marched into the war 80,000 troops and brought out 12,000. It is stated on high authority that "according to official reports forwarded from Madrid, by the United States minister, 13,600 Cubans had been killed in battle up to August, 1872, besides 43,500 prisoners whom the Spanish minister admitted to have been put to death."

We, Mr. President, have been so blessed with the kindly fruits of liberty in this country, we have had so much of national enjoyment, we have had so much of pleasant occupation in taking care of the affairs of our own great Government and our wonderfully increasing population and our developing wealth and our glorious prestige among the nations of the earth and in illustrating by our conservative and industrious and virtuous example the blessings to mankind of this wonderful form of Government which has been established and conducted here, that it seems we have forgotten the sufferings of those so close to ourselves. Now, can it be possible that a mistake is made by an accurate and able historian when he says to us that the Spanish minister admitted that in that war in addition to 13,600 Cubans who had been killed in battle, 43,500 prisoners had been put to death?

I confess that when I came across that statement in an authentic history to which we give credit, I read it over and over to ascertain whether it could have been possible that such a multitude of humanity had been slaughtered within 90 miles of the coast of the United States during that ten years' war; and I inquired of myself, What has Christianity been doing in the world if in this age, the nineteenth century, it has been possible that such things could be done in an island like Cuba, and that this great and free Republic could stand indifferently by, knowing the facts, and not unsheath its sword and strike the brutal monarch to death who inflicted them?

The cost of that war was all shouldered upon Cuba. It must have been $500,000,000.

The close of such a war was surely a sufficient consideration for the promises made to Gomez and Cisneros and their compatriots, upon faith of which they again submitted their fate into the hands of the Spanish monarchy.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I failed to catch the name of the authority for the wonderful, the horrible statement which the Senator from Alabama has just made in relation to the slaughter of prisoners to the number of over 40,000.

Mr. MORGAN. I am sorry that for the moment I can not recall his name. I will hand it to the Senator.

Mr. FRYE. It is from history?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; deliberately written, and written by a Spaniard.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator credit it?

Mr. MORGAN. For a long time I hesitated to credit it, but I had to credit it or else deny the evidence of a deliberate statement made by a historian in a book of universal acceptance, one of reliable authority.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Alabama state the name of the historian or the book?

Mr. MORGAN. It is in the American Encyclopedia, under the title of Cuba.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I will read a very short extract from a publication by Mr. Clarence King.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall be very glad to have it read.

Mr. CALL. Jesus Rivocoba, one of the officers on duty in the service of Spain in the Island of Cuba, under date of September 4, 1869, writes this letter:

We captured 17, 13 of whom were shot outright. On dying they shouted, "Hurrah for free Cuba!" "Hurrah for independence!" A mulatto said, "Hurrah for Cespedes!" On the following day we killed a Cuban officer and another man. Among the 13 that we shot the first day were found three sons and their father; the father witnessed the execution of his sons without even changing color; and when his turn came he said he died for the independence of his country. On coming back we brought along with us three carts filled with women and children, the families of those we had shot; and they asked us to shoot them, because they would rather die than live among Spaniards.

Pedro Fardon, another officer, who entered perfectly into the spirit of the service, writes on September 22, 1869, as follows:

Not a single Cuban will remain in this island, because we shoot all those we find in the fields, on the farms, and in every hovel.

On the same day the same officer sends the following:

We do not leave a creature alive where we pass, be it man or animal. If we find cows, we kill them; if horses, ditto; if hogs, ditto; men, women, or children, ditto; as to the houses, we burn them. So everyone receives his due—the men in balls, the animals in bayonet thrusts. The island will remain a desert.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida from what he has read? What is the paper he has in his hand?

Mr. CALL. I read from a pamphlet published by Clarence King. The article appeared in The Forum for September, 1895, and purports to contain a literal copy of the letters of those officers themselves.

Mr. MORGAN. The President of the United States at the close of the war to which I have been referring, the war which preceded the one in which the incidents occurred to which the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] now alludes, sent to the Senate the papers which relate to the submission of the Cuban insurgents in 1878. I find in that paper, which I have not had the opportunity of examining with care, a statement of the terms and conditions upon which the surrender took place.

Mr. Antonio Mantilla, who, I think, was then the representative at this legation of the Government of Spain, writes as follows to the Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts:

In the decree in question the phrase is to be noted with which its preamble begins: "The war being now near its end" (not a regular war in the sense in which it is defined by international law, but an intestine struggle, civil contest, or armed rebellion, which, in the military parlance of the Spanish language is commonly called war); which phrase shows that said military authorities do not consider the contest to be entirely at an end, although its termination is very near. The first sentence in the second paragraph of the same preamble is also noteworthy, in which it is declared that, had it not been for this contest, "Cuba would long since have enjoyed, according to the constitution of the State, the advantages which must necessarily accrue to her from a possible assimilation to the peninsula," which shows that the prevailing sentiment in Spain is in favor of treating Cuba as Porto Rico has been treated; that is to say, like a Spanish province, although she could not grant to rebellious subjects what they demand with arms in their hands, namely, absolute independence, during a time of trial for the mother country, nor even what she was always ready to grant them voluntarily, and what she has now granted, at a time of greater prosperity for herself, to them, now that they have repented and sued for peace, which is an act of generosity and a guaranty of reconciliation.

A decree of the general in chief of the army of operations in the Island of Cuba was also inserted in the Havana Gazette of the 3d.

This was issued at Puerto Principe on the 10th of March, and will be found in Appendix F. It guarantees the freedom which was offered in article 3, of the capitulation of all slaves who were in the ranks of the insurgents on the 10th day of February, and who have surrendered or who shall surrender before the 31st day of the current month of March.

Articles 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the capitulation have been fulfilled already, or are now in course of fulfillment, toward all who are willing to take advantage of their benefits. Article 4 requires no immediate action, and article 2 has always constituted the distinguishing trait of the Spanish policy in Cuba. Forgetfulness of the past, pardon of political crimes, release of property embargoed for the same cause, mitigation of the effects of these embargoes as regards the innocent members of the families of those whose property has been embargoed, and even the furnishing of means of subsistence to repentant rebels—all this has been frequently offered or granted by the Government and authorities of Spain from the time of the decree of amnesty, issued on the 12th of January, 1869, by the governor, captain-general of the island, Don Domingo Dulce, who was sent by the revolutionary government of 1868 to establish in Cuba the same liberties and franchises that were enjoyed by the peninsula, until the royal decree of October 27, 1877, by which the unimproved public lands, certain forests belonging to the State, and town lands not used, are ordered to be divided among various classes, viz:

1. Licentiates and volunteers, who have been mobilized or who have taken part in a battle.

2. Inhabitants of the towns of the island, who have remained loyal to the government and who have suffered considerable losses of property in consequence of the war.

3. Persons who have voluntarily surrendered to the authorities and forces of the Government.

The reproduction and analysis of all these general acts, and many other private ones, of pardon, clemency, and generosity, would render this note interminable, which had no other object, as remarked at the beginning, than to satisfy the desire of the honorable Secretary of State to become accurately acquainted with the present situation of Cuba, but which the undersigned, in his wish to correct false impressions which have been circulated by the conspirators against Spain in this country, has thought proper to extend sufficiently to indicate succinctly the policy of Spain in Cuba and the causes that have given rise to the recent events. Although the Government of Spain does not recognize the right of any foreign power to interfere in the internal affairs of that country, it values too highly the opinion of the sensible people of the United States and the friendship of its Government for its representative at Washington to neglect an opportunity like the one now offered to present in their true aspect the acts, intentions, and constant policy of Spain in her relations with the Island of Cuba.

He then proceeds:

If it were necessary, or the honorable Secretary of State should desire it, the undersigned would amplify and prove by means of trustworthy documents the assertions which he has just made, and he proposes shortly to show that the only obstacle that can now retard, not absolutely prevent, the complete pacification of Cuba, is the war cry and the false promises of immediate aid which are once more sent from New York by the Cuban conspirators, who urge in public meetings the continuation of the struggle which is now so near its end. And it is a remarkable fact that in this struggle, by a sad fatality for the liberators of Cuba, a fatality which would not escape, and which has not escaped, the observation of the American people and the perspicacity of its enlightened press, foreigners have been its principal leaders—those who have most zealously maintained it, and who have most distinguished themselves in it. Jordan and Reeve, Americans; Maximo Gomez and Modesto Diaz, Dominicans; Roloff, a Pole; Caoba and Maceo, the one an African and the other a semi-African; Prado, the captor of the Moctezuma, a Peruvian; and finally, not to mention any more names, Gonzales, a Mexican, who was deputed by the revolutionary committee of Camaguey to announce the dissolution of the legislative chamber and of the government of the republic to its representatives in the United States.

Even the diplomatic commissioner of Cuba abroad, Echerarria, who less than a month ago proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of this great country, by a circular telegram from the Washington agency of the Associated Press, that the news of the submission of the greater part of the insurgent leaders was false, and that they would accept no terms not based upon the recognition of Cuban independence—even that diplomatic agent, whom the honorable Committee on Foreign Relations of the House of Representatives of the United States, having charge of Cuban affairs, received and listened to with interest in the belief that he was a son of Cuba, is no Cuban at all, but a Venezuelan.

If an insurrection composed of such antagonistic elements as the Latin, African, Mongolian, and Anglo-Saxon races, led on by officers of all known nationalities, could have triumphed, the confusion of tongues at the Tower of Babel, and the memorable catastrophe which took place in the formerly French portion of the island of Santo Domingo, would have been cast into the shade by the spectacle which victorious, free, and Africanized Cuba would have presented to the civilized world.

* * * * * * *

ANTONIO MANTILLA.

Now, there is the Spanish side of that statement. The Cuban side of the statement comes later. It comes out now in the declarations which have been read in the newspapers, in declarations which I will place in the RECORD without reading, because it is not necessary to take the time of the Senate in reading them, which show that the terms and conditions which were agreed upon in that submission of the Cubans to the Spanish Government at that time have been flagrantly violated, and that the people of Cuba have received from it not only none of the advantages promised, but the very machinery which was set on foot by that submission and the articles which followed it have been employed by the Spanish Monarchy for the purpose of continuing to rob them more flagrantly than ever.

These articles of submission, so far as I can gather from this paper, seem to have been drawn up at several places and at several times, and after a portion of the people of Cuba through their representatives had signed these articles or assented to them new adhesions to this capitulation were obtained from others. I will hereafter put in the RECORD enough of this paper to show the exact nature, as far as it can be found from this document, of the capitulation that was made, the promises which have been broken, as the Cubans allege.

They and their associates, then and now, assert that Spain has broken these promises in all respects, and has greatly aggravated her persecutions of the people of Cuba since these promises were entered into. That was one of the grounds upon which their present revolution is predicated—a breach of national promise.

It is not ours to decide such controversies, since the action we propose to take on this occasion is not dependent in the least degree on the facts that led to the revolt, but upon its existence and progress to the state of open, public war.

If the United States should be forced into the espousal of the cause of the Republic of Cuba as an ally, the facts are not wanting to justify our people in fighting, if need be, for the principles of our own Government against a despotic monarchy and for the sacred rights of man that are being destroyed and exterminated in sight of our coasts.

But this is not our purpose. We do not intend to interfere in that matter unless we are forced to do so from supreme necessity. The present proposed action of the Congress of the United States has not the slightest bearing one way or the other upon that question. We are for peace, security, and good neighborship with Cuba if we have to fight for it.

No Cuban army has fought as yet for a single leader who was ambitious for place or honors under the Spanish Monarchy, or for the spoils of war, or the liberty of pillage, or even for revenge. Their leaders are patriots and men of great abilities. Gomez is an old man, said to be fatally stricken with consumption. No earthly station could induce him to endure the labor and suffering to which he is subjected. His ambition is only that he may live to see Cuba free, or, dying, that he may bequeath its liberty to the people.

In all these belligerent movements, extending through two centuries, the Cubans have not fought merely for redress of grievances, though these were a just cause of war; they have at all times resisted and resented the despotism of the Spanish Monarchy, and their battle cry has always been "God and liberty."

The freedom of Cuba has been always the undying aspiration of the native people.

One of these struggles is but the renewal of those that preceded it. Either from workings of military power, or under the inducement of false promises, a truce has been, from time to time, on frequent occasions adopted. But when the oppression has been renewed, and strength to resist it has been regained, these people have come forth in that native strength which belongs to a liberty-loving people and have renewed the battle for independence. And now Gomez returns to his command, and Cisneros, who was president at the time that the surrender took place of which I have been reading, comes back to his presidency, and the Cubans fall into the ranks and take up their arms to renew the war of 1867 to 1878.

The civil government then disbanded upon false assurances and the military power and organization that then laid aside its arms are again renewed upon a basis that is good in law throughout all Christendom, that a right surrendered to fraud upheld by force may be justly reasserted whenever the power exists to reclaim it.

In these battles fought in this protracted war of independence the blood of patriots that Cuban soil has drunk has not been shed in vain.

> For freedom's battle, once begun,
> Bequeath'd by bleeding sire to son,
> Though baffled oft, is ever won.

That we have witnessed this struggle for so many years, during which our ears have not been deaf to the appeal for liberty and independence and our hearts have not refused their sympathy to the suffering Cubans, is enough for us to have done in order to prove our faithful adhesion to our national duty.

We can go no further in our forbearance without a stain upon our national honor and without doing injustice to our Government and our people.

If the war in Cuba should end in disaster to the republic they have organized there, even within a week, our duty would be ill performed if we did not declare that this war is and has been a public war for independence, and has been so admitted by Spain in declaring that war exists in four Cuban departments.

This declaration should be made promptly on our part, for it will stand us in hand when we are again forced to call Spain in question for her treatment of our citizens captured during this struggle. It should be made also to warn Spain that she can not impose the Weyler code, following the Valmaseda code, upon our people or their property, and that when the war for independence again breaks out, its character and purposes will not be misunderstood by the United States. The future wars in Cuba will not be mere civil insurrections when it requires 150,000 men and the navy of Spain to hold the people in check.

Our rights and duties in regard to this war in some sense depend upon its purposes and its magnitude, but not upon its ultimate success or failure. The purposes commend this war to our respect at least. Its magnitude is equal to the territorial control of more than half the area of Cuba and more than half the people of the island.

In this war, unlike that of the war of 1867 to 1878, few native troops have fought in the field under the Spanish flag. Some of them have been enlisted as volunteers, quite a number of them probably under duress, but they have put a condition in the enlistment that they were to be home guards; that they were not to enter the field; that they were to guard the plantations and the railway stations and towns, villages, and cities.

The great body of the native people are in sympathy with the republic, though the repression of any such avowal, in act or word, is the relentless purpose of Weyler's cruel code. This code may again smother the fires of liberty, of which Gomez speaks in his letter of November 13, 1895, in which he says:

> We can truthfully say that, even if Spain sends thousands of her children to their death, we have already established the basis of the Cuban Republic, and that Republic will be a fact, no matter how many of us may fall.

There are few Americans who do not accept that result as inevitable, and the Weyler code will serve only to remind him hereafter that no grasp of tyranny can be strong enough to repress the fires of liberty, though it may silence the tongues of its votaries for the time.

The victories won over the Spaniards by the Cubans at Lôs Negros, at Iobito, at Bayamo, where Campos and his staff sought safety in flight, on foot and in the nighttime, at Cascorra, at Sao Del Indio, and in many minor engagements, and the splendid march through Cuba from east to west and from north to south are lessons of skill and evidences of military power, and proofs of valor and endurance that do not presage the ultimate defeat of the Cuban army. Spain has sent to this conflict up to this time 61 vessels of war, all heavily armed, but in the 2,200 miles of Cuban coast there are 200 harbors and sheltered places of landing, and in all the guns sent there by Cuban agents not one rifle has yet been lost. Spain has sent to Cuba 110,000 men, and has 80,000 volunteers for garrison duty, yet with this enormous force she has not been able to keep Gomez out of hearing of the morning and evening guns that are fired at Habana. Their armies grow while the armies of Spain perish and decrease from losses in the field and hospital.

The organization of the Cuban army was conducted in eastern Cuba, and the first and hardest battles were fought there. Then Gomez and Maceo invaded western Cuba to burn cane fields and to recruit their forces.

A comparison of the statements of our consuls, made from time to time, shows a tremendous rapidity of increase of the forces and war material of their commands.

It is through the reports of the consuls of the United States sent in by the President to Congress that we derive that better statement of facts to which Gomez refers and which will be referred to in a paper that I will presently have read at the desk, in which it is said that doubtless the Government of the United States knows more of the actual facts of the progress and development of the war than the captain-general of Cuba or the Government of Spain. These consuls, situated in Cuba at three of the most important points, all of them being men of intelligence, ability, and faithful public service, have from time to time sent the best information available to them in respect to the condition of the country surrounding them and the progress of the armies in that country.

I therefore read extracts from these reports to the Senate with a view of getting what I conceive to be an authentic statement upon this subject of the magnitude of the war, the character of the war, the progress of the war, the character of the army that conducts the war, and the policy of the men in rule and authority there who manage and control the army. It is from these facts that we are to derive a sound and solid judgment upon which we will feel authorized to act.

I have mentioned already in the speech I made last Thursday the reluctance with which I proceeded to investigate this question, because of the uncertainty of the evidence upon which we had to rely. I was not aware how very certain, how very strong it was, until I took up these consular reports and was able to compare them also with the reports in newspapers and reports from private sources; and I find that we are in possession of an authentic history of the rise and progress of the present revolution.

On the 23d of February, 1895, just a year ago, Mr. Pulaski F. Hyatt, writing to Mr. Uhl, says:

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Santiago de Cuba, February 23, 1895.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you that grave apprehensions are felt of a revolution breaking out here. Rumors are rife, and it is difficult to get at exact facts.

The people are very much frightened, and those of the country are moving to the city in large numbers for safety. The banditti element in the mountains is being augmented by certain parties hostile to the Spanish Government.

Information has come to the consulate that the Government has notified certain Cubans, known to have been prominently in favor of the island's freedom, that if there is trouble they will be held responsible and shot, and a number, said to be 27, of the members of leading families who were spotted have left for parts unknown.

The military governor, Lachambre, has had his home in the country guarded by 250 soldiers, and he gave notice to a number of American engineers and workingmen, living in a house close by, and here for the purpose of constructing railroad bridges, that if they had cause to go to their yard in the night, to carry a lantern as a preventive against being shot.

That is the outbreak of it a year ago; that is the form in which it presented itself to Mr. Hyatt, who was living in the country where the first organization took place and where the feeling of the Cubans was most intense. On the 26th day of the same month he says:

The insurrectional movements that have given rise to the measures of the governor-general seem to be limited to a very small number of persons, as shown by the prompt action of the three political parties above mentioned engrossing the major part of the population, and which really represent the entire planting, industrial, and commercial interests, as well as the professional classes of the island, though it can not be denied that poverty, induced by the cumulative effects of the erroneous economic system long established here, has brought about discontent among the working classes since the principal exportable products of the island, sugar and tobacco, are very depressed in their exchangeable values. This has brought on low and precarious wages, while at the same time imported provisions and clothing are very high and in unfavorable disproportion to the earnings of the workmen.

Those workmen, starving men, got to thinking and feeling, and they bared their shoulders to the burdens of the revolution; really they started it.

Now, writing again on March 1, he says:

On the 27th ultimo the governor-general of the island issued a decree, copy inclosed being extract from official bulletin, declaring this province in a state of war, giving the military authorities control of all matters appertaining to public order, and giving insurgents eight days to present themselves and be exempt from punishment.

Now, I wish to connect that statement with one that I made in the opening of my remarks when I called attention to the fact, which nobody has denied or can deny, that for more than two centuries the captain-general of Cuba has had the power to put any province in that whole island into a state of siege, to declare military law as prevailing, and to declare a state of war as existing. In this province our consul affirms that the governor of this particular province has declared that a state of war exists. What kind of a war is that? An insurrection? An émeute? A mere rebellion? A mob? A sedition? No; he declared that war existed; and he put the laws and powers of war at work there by changing the whole legal situation from one of peace to that of war. I should like to know, after that declaration on his part, followed up, as it has been, by declarations of a like kind by the captain-general in three of the provinces of eastern Cuba, more recently made, how they can hold up their heads and look the world in the face and say to us that we have no right to recognize that a war exists when they proclaim it and enforce it? Our consul says, further on in the same article:

There have been a number of scrimmages with troops in the province, and several on both sides killed and wounded. The insurgent element so far is confined mostly to the negro population, which predominates. The whites and property owners hope that the reforms promised by the Government will be put into effect and that the movement will be suppressed before much property is destroyed and lives lost.

A strong reenforcement of Spanish troops is daily expected.

The last letter was on the 1st of March. Thirty days later, on the 30th of March, he says:

I have the honor to report further on the situation in the province of Santiago as follows: On Monday, March 24, 900 troops were landed from Spain, which, with the 2,437 recruits which landed last week, make a total of 3,337 additional Spanish forces, landed at this port. After arrival these troops were newly uniformed in linen suits and straw hats.

A battle occurred near Manzanillo on Sunday between 300 Government troops and 500 Cubans. The Government claims 50 of the enemy killed, while the Cubans claim a victory.

* * * * * * *

That same evening—

That was on Thursday, the 28th—

(a dark night) about 9 o'clock sharp musketry firing was distinctly heard from this consulate, which lasted 45 minutes, when a heavy rain set in. I afterwards learned that a body of insurgents were waiting in ambush for the outgoing troops and fired on them from behind rocks and trees, causing a loss of 50 killed on the Spanish side, including one captain.

* * * * * * *

Men are constantly leaving the large centers of population to join the insurgents, and public opinion is rapidly in their direction.

Then again he writes on April 4:

With starvation facing them on one side; with relations, friends, and companions on the other, fighting for the independence of their country, it will readily be seen how the present uprising may become one that will defy the efforts of Spain to subdue.

It is safe to say that there are at present large bodies of insurgents under arms in the jurisdiction of Santiago de Cuba. Spain must have to meet these twice their number, as the country is an ideal one in which to harass regular troops who are not familiar with the country.

Another important factor to be considered is the ravages that will be made among the Spanish soldiers during the summer months by yellow fever, which will far exceed their losses in action.

To check and end the present uprising it will be necessary for Spain to concentrate all her forces at Santiago de Cuba, Puerto Principe, and to act promptly and decisively, for as each day the rebellion continues lessens her chances for subduing the same, and, as before stated, she must accomplish the subjugation of those in revolt before the present crop is finished, or their accessions will be so great that her dominion over this island will be in great jeopardy, if not lost.

Then, on the 5th of April, he writes again:

On April 2 the insurgents entered the town of Carney, about 6 miles from here, where they captured about 50 guns, some horses, and, it is said, about 2,500 cartridges.

On April 3 the Government forces met the insurgents at Socorro, about 18 miles from here. The insurgents are said to have been defeated with 10 lost and many wounded.

The Spanish Government is now employing Cubans at $30 per month to join the guerrilla forces against the insurgents, and naturally these accessions against the cause of the revolutionists are looked upon with great hatred by the other Cubans.

Private advices from parties capable of speaking are to the effect that the territory between here and Manzanillo and along the Canto River is alive with insurgents. Their cavalry are said to be in a very excellent condition, well armed, and well mounted. Pending the arrival of Martinez Campos, the war seems to be in a quiescent state.

Campos had not yet landed. Then again he writes on the 13th of April:

On Thursday a battle was fought near Bayamo. The number of troops and results are not definitely known. The work of the insurgents seems to be more along the line of gathering arms and ammunition rather than seeking conflict, while the Government troops do not seem desirous of forcing a fight, but rather to guard important points from attacks while they await the arrival of Martinez Campos, who is expected to land at this port on the 16th instant. Preparations are in progress to give him a big reception.

The sugar planters complain that whenever they pay off their hands large numbers leave to join the insurgents, thus crippling work. It is estimated that the population of Santiago has been increased by 15,000 people, mostly old men, women, and children who have left the country, and are quartered on anybody that will keep them. Beggars are very numerous. The death statistics for the first fifteen days of March was 32, and jumped to 62 for the last half of the month, there being 8 deaths from yellow fever, 5 deaths from paludal fever, and 1 from diphtheria. I am informed by a physician that smallpox in a mild form has also appeared.

Now, on the 28th of April he writes:

SIR: I have the honor to report that on Sunday, the 21st instant, a fight took place near Songo, this province, between about 500 Cubans and 800 Spanish troops, which resulted eventually in the Cubans retiring from the field. A major and chaplain of the Spanish forces were killed. Other losses unknown.

Two thousand and fourteen new Spanish recruits arrived at this port from Spain on the 22d instant, and it is reported that 20,000 more will arrive during the next six weeks.

Rebels burned the town of Ramon de Yaguas on Monday last, killed Captain Miranda of the Spanish forces, took 16,000 rounds of ammunition and a quantity of arms from the fort.

Lieutenant Gallego, on the part of the Spanish troops, surrendered the fort, for which he was court-martialed and ordered to be shot. The sentence was commuted to life imprisonment by cablegram from the Queen.

Then he adds as a postscript:

Lieutenant Gallego was shot at Habana on May 1, after having attempted suicide on the passage from Manzanillo to Habana.

This consul goes on to speak of other battles from time to time. May 11 he says:

Monday night the rebels attacked Cristo, a town 10 miles distant, on the Sabanilla and Maroto Railroad, derailed an engine, and burned two bridges. The road is operated and owned mostly by American citizens. Martinez Campos has recommended Government aid to this road for the purpose of extending the same and furnishing employment to the many men who will soon be thrown out of employment by the shutting down of sugar mills, and it is feared that without work the men will drift into the rebel army. * * * Friends of the insurrection claim that they are as far advanced now at the end of three months as they were at the end of three years in the former rebellion. They claim now to have 10,000 men under arms in the province of Santiago, and to have 4,000 more doing effective work.

That is from the time of this first dispatch, which was February 23, 1895, down to the date of this letter, which is May 11, 1895, a rise in their power from nothing to 14,000 troops in the field. In my observation, few countries have ever been able to recruit an army as rapidly out of their own legitimate resources, arm them and equip them, and put them in the field as these Cuban rebels have done during that period from the 23d day of February down to the 18th day of May—three months! Again, he says on the 18th of May:

On Monday, the 13th, 400 men are said to have left Holquin in a body to take up arms against the Government.

Four hundred leaving one place.

Perhaps the most sanguinary battle that has taken place up to the present time occurred on the 13th and 14th instant, near Guantanamo. The Spanish authorities claim that with 400 men they put to rout the enemy, 3,400 strong, inflicting severe loss on the rebels.

The rebels claim that there were over 2,000 Spaniards engaged in the first day's battle, and that they punished them severely, driving them into the town and inflicting a loss of over 200 in killed and wounded, including among the killed the commander, Colonel Bosch, and several other officers, while their own loss was insignificant; but finding that on the second day the Government forces had been strengthened, they thought it prudent to retire.

* * * * * * *

It is reported—

He says in the same letter, in fact it turned out to be true—

That 400 convicts are enlisted in the next shipment of soldiers to arrive at this place from Spain.

These convicts and others from Africa have been pardoned for the worst of crimes committed in Cuba and armed as bands of guerrillas to destroy the people they had formerly assailed with brigandage, robbery, and murder. Yet it is not more surprising that convicted robbers should be turned loose to war against Cuba than that unconvicted and titled robbers should use them for like purposes.

I will omit to read quite a number of these reports, although they all contain very strong corroborative testimony to the continual and steady progress of this revolution. On July 13 Mr. Hyatt says:

I have the honor very respectfully to report in reference to the further uprising in the eastern end of Cuba that Saturday, July 6, a battle of considerable importance occurred near Manzanillo, in which it appears that the Government forces, made up mostly of "guerrillas" (home guards), were, to the number of 100 or more, cut to death with machetes.

Continuous fighting between Manzanillo and this place has been kept up all of the week, with uncertain results.

The case of Dr. Joaquin Castillo, reported in my dispatch of July 6 (No. 149), is a peculiar case, and is, perhaps, worthy of further mention. The Doctor, a man of commanding appearance, is one of a numerous and highly respectable family, born on this island, but who have sought and obtained naturalization in the United States, and by marriage related to Spanish officers of high rank. The Doctor served as surgeon to our Jeannette polar expedition.

It appears that some five years ago Gen. Antonio Maceo (who was famous in the previous insurrection) came to Santiago, and was quietly feasted and toasted by a number of prominent people, among them Dr. Castillo. In the hilarity of the occasion they promised Maceo that when he came to Cuba again on business they would be with him. On Maceo's return to the present conflict he notified these gentlemen that he was here, and expected them to remember and keep their promise. Some of them were slow to respond, and the Doctor among the number, because a lucrative practice and the large possessions of his wife made it inconvenient to respond. A second notice is said to have been sent, which contained no threats, but interpreted by those capable of reading between Cuban lines that it would not be well for the Doctor to delay his coming, and he went.

Numerous young men have left lucrative positions and cast their lots with the insurgents.

It is estimated by men of judgment that the revolution is now three times as strong as it was at its height during the previous insurrection.

Any insurgent force that now attempts to enter Santiago will have to jump over, climb through, or cut down a three stranded barbed wire fence which now surrounds the city.

For a fortification, I suppose.

Yellow fever, though still bad among Spanish soldiers, has not seemed quite so virulent during the past week. Deaths for week, 106. Yellow fever, 41; smallpox, 1.

Mr. GRAY. From whom is that?

Mr. MORGAN. That is from our consul at Santiago. I pass over a number of places which I had marked for the purpose of calling attention to them, but it would protract the story too much for me to undertake to give all these incidents as the narrative proceeds. On the 21st of August he writes to Mr. Adee:

SIR: I have the honor to report the situation in Cuba to be deeply interesting.

With perhaps the exception of Santa Cruz, the Government forces hold every important seaport town and a few large towns in the interior, while from Cienfuegos east, which constitutes three-fourths of the island, the insurgents hold the balance of the territory and some territory farther west.

Cuban leaders claim 25,000 men mostly under arms in the province of Santiago and 10,000 farther west. I think the number overstated by at least eight or ten thousand men, but I am inclined to the opinion that there are many more ready to join them when assured that they will be supplied with arms and ammunition.

That arms and ammunition are now coming quite freely to Cuba seems little room for doubt. A paper published here called The Public Opinion has recently declared that if the Government would look more carefully after the large carrying companies and less for filibustering expeditions they would find the source of trouble.

Those who desire to see the island restored to peace are much depressed, as there is at present three times as large a force of insurgents as at any time in the previous insurrection.

Then he gives an account of more battles which occurred in his vicinity. Then, under date of October 10, writing to Mr. Uhl, he says:

SIR: Judging by results that tend to terminate a war, the situation in Cuba, from an American standpoint, might aptly be termed one of "masterly inactivity." But few engagements have occurred up to the present time that should be dignified by a higher title than a skirmish.

Cuban tactics are to fight only when they have the Spaniards at a disadvantage, and at other times small attacking parties will fire from ambush on the Government forces for the purpose of demoralization, or to induce the troops to follow them to a more advantageous place for battle; but the Spaniards seem to understand this, and thus far have declined to accept battle on such terms.

The Cubans assert that they can not afford to make a stand in an open field, or even behind ordinary breastworks, with their present quota of arms and ammunition, as every shot must count; while being themselves acclimated and thoroughly inured to Cuban climate, diet, and modes of living and traveling, they can kill more Spaniards by fatigue, exposure, and disease, and at less sacrifice to themselves, than by hand-to-hand battles, and by such tactics can continue the war indefinitely.

* * * * * * *

The Spanish forces can not long remain away from their base of supplies, as their quartermaster, commissary, ordnance, and hospital supplies are all carried on the backs of pack mules. No tents or shelter of any kind are provided for soldiers on the march, nor any ambulance service for the sick and exhausted.

The Red Cross tendered their services to go in there, but they have never heard from the Spanish Government upon the subject.

Up to the present time Spain has put into the field about 80,000 soldiers, probably a little more than one-half of which are now available for active operations. The best informed persons here estimate the active Cuban force at 25,000 or 28,000,

* * * * * * *

Spanish agents, Spanish newspapers, as well as American newspapers, have for months openly declared that certain vessels carrying the British flag and conveying iron ore from Cuba to the United States have on their return trips carried articles contraband of war, which they have disposed of through persons connected with the mines and landed at certain points along the coasts.

And thereupon the Government of Spain, through the captain-general, established fortifications at those American iron mines upon the avowed pretense of prohibiting or preventing those men from receiving what they called "contraband of war." They were obliged to receive powder in large quantities for the purpose of conducting their iron works and their regular business; but inasmuch as the captain-general said there was a possibility of such things falling into the hands of the insurrectionists, they forbid their importation, under the doctrine of their being contraband. There is something which needs inquiry. I do not mean the special instance, for perhaps not much loss has occurred on that account, but as to a Government with which we are at peace, and that peace secured by treaty guaranteeing to us wide commercial privileges and providing rules and regulations by which contraband of war in time of war may be excluded from the island, how can that Government, while saying that peace prevails, contend that there is contraband of war when a merchant in the United States ships a keg of powder to his consignee in Cuba?

What right have they in a time of peace to interpose and examine the cargoes of our ships upon principles of war and declare these things contraband? They can not do it except when they make a declaration of war against the ports or places at which these articles are to be landed, establish a blockade, and interpose that declaration as creating the rights which are given by war of inspecting a vessel to see whether its cargo is contraband. But here, while they declare that a state of war exists in four provinces of Cuba, and put out their proclamation to that effect, and in virtue of that fact insist upon the existence there of war—while they are in that condition in regard to their own people, for the purpose of putting down a rebellion that they can not subdue, they hold out to us the relations of peace and amity and friendship, and say, "You must not import into Cuba powder or shot or any munitions of war, because they have become contraband."

That is a position which can not possibly be submitted to by the Government of the United States, and when they insist, as they do insist, that war obtains in their own provinces in Cuba, and so proclaim to the world, and follow it up by seizures of the cargoes of vessels because they are contraband, then of course what we have got to do, and all we can do, is to declare, along with them, that a state of public war exists in that country, and that these things are contraband; but that if our people can get through their blockaders it is all right and no longer illegal to sell them to the recognized belligerents. Spain can not declare that one of our merchants shall have his property, his ship and his cargo, confiscated in time of peace by imposing upon that vessel a hostile characteristic because it has on board articles contraband. Spain must say that she is at war with another power, which is a part of her own provinces, and being at war, she has a right to declare those imports contraband which would assist the enemy in waging war.

Mr. Hyatt proceeds again on the 16th of October to say:

SIR: The Cubans assert that they could quickly double or treble their forces in the field if they could only equip them for service, in which case they would take the aggressive; but as it is they are obliged to husband their resources to the fullest extent to meet the Government forces that are armed with Mauser rifles and well supplied with ammunition, while they, the insurgents, are confined largely to such resources as "by hook or crook" they can obtain from the Spaniards.

On the 11th instant the insurgents captured between Santiago and Manzanillo 17 soldiers with personal arms and 4,000 cartridges, which were being conveyed to a fort 2 leagues from the coast. The Spanish soldiers were set free, but I learn that the lieutenant in command has been court-martialed and will be shot for surrendering.

Then he speaks of the coming in of certain cargoes on board of ships that were landed surreptitiously on the coast.

Then Mr. Casanova writes that the war had included his consulate at Cienfuegos, and speaks of it as follows:

The destruction of sugar estates has been principally directed against buildings of strategic value to the Government troops or that might serve them as shelter; generally buildings of abandoned sugar estates, though occasionally of late the dwellings and labor quarters on "colonias," or cane farms, have been destroyed. Some of these cases are due to political rancor toward the proprietors who have made themselves conspicuously hostile to the insurgents.

As the most important measure proclaimed by the revolutionary government (leaders?) is the prevention of sugar making, with a view to crippling the resources of the Spanish Government, it is likely that more extensive destruction will follow, as threatened by the insurgents, in the approaching crop season unless this Government is able to afford needed protection by garrisoning the plantations with sufficient forces to enable planters to work in safety. As the insurgents up to the present time to so great extent control the surrounding country, the prospect for preventing the consummation of their plans is not very reassuring, and in consequence great despondency prevails in all classes of the community, so largely interested and dependent on the sugar crop. In fact, on this vital question is involved the gravest problem to the life of this district, and the same applies to the rest of the island.

On the 16th of November, Mr. Hyatt, writing from Santiago de Cuba, says:

SIR: I have the honor to very respectfully offer a brief résumé of the situation in Cuba as it appears to one who has watched it carefully from its inception to the present, a period of nearly eight months.

The total strength of the insurgents at present is between thirty-five and forty thousand men, 10,000 of which are not well armed, but are useful in other directions, which number would be quickly increased if arms and ammunition were available.

Their generalship has been neither brilliant nor dashing, and it has indeed been questionable whether they have not allowed important advantages to get away from them for want of well-directed heroism, yet, on the whole, well calculated to conserve their cause.

Their settled purpose is to fight only when they have advantage in position and numbers; but to harass the Government troops, mostly with small detachments, and depend upon their better knowledge of the country and greater powers of endurance to avoid punishment, and by the aid of yellow fever, dysentery, etc., to finally wear out the Government forces.

Discipline is maintained better than might be expected, and desertions are infrequent, owing to the great difficulty in escaping from the island, so the deserter must either go to the enemy or go home and face Cuban scorn.

As a rule the Cuban army is healthy, their powers of endurance are great, and they show not the slightest disposition to give up the fight.

When prisoners are taken, if they can not be induced to change their allegiance, they are disarmed and released.

They have levied and collected heavy assessments on every industry possible, and seem to have plenty of money.

I am unable to say how much success has attended their attempts to establish a local and permanent government. I think, however, it is of a movable nature.

They respect American property and rights much more than those of other nations.

On the part of Spain there is no lack of disposition to supply all the men and means necessary to subdue the rebellion; but the first 30,000 troops sent to the island were largely boys, too young and inexperienced to take proper care of themselves, and many of them have succumbed to exposure and disease. The later arrivals were more mature men and are able-bodied soldiers. They have also several thousand volunteer natives and acclimated Spaniards, making the number placed in the field up to the present time nearly 100,000, 30,000 of which are dead or unavailable, leaving for service about twice as many as the Cubans have, and are better armed and equipped. About one-third of this number are kept on guard duty, a portion of which may be called off in emergencies, so that fifty-five or sixty thousand are available for field service.

Up to the present writing most of the Spanish forces continue to occupy mostly the cities and large towns near the seacoast, or about the mines, railroads, and large plantations. Transportation of troops and supplies is by steamships along the coast.

In the person of her captain and governor-general, Martinez Campos, Spain possesses a soldier and statesman of marked ability, who tempers justice with mercy to a large extent.

With the exception of iron mining, nearly every industry on the island is going rapidly to destruction, and nothing but a sudden termination of the war can prevent the island from becoming a waste that will require many years to repair.

Native-born Americans have but little cause to complain in regard to their treatment by Spanish officials, and even our naturalized Cubans are treated with far more consideration than those of other nationalities. So apparent is this distinction that it has become a subject of complaint on the part of citizens and consuls of other nations, and has been met by the reply that their treaty with the United States differed with that of other nations, and a counter reply has been made that they were entitled to the "most-favored-nation clause."

On the 2d of December Mr. Casanova says:

The prevention of sugar making is the most settled and determined policy of the insurgents. There have been already cases of partial burning of plantations in this consular district, some of them owned by Americans.

In this connection I deem it proper to submit to the Department the following data of the property represented by Americans in the sugar industry in this consular district alone, either residents here or owned by corporate companies in the United States. These plantations are of the most valuable here, yielding an aggregate yearly production of over 600,000 bags, or 86,000 tons of sugar, at an estimated value of over $4,600,000, at present low prices. There are, besides, large American interests invested in cultivation of cane for supplying the sugar factories.

The effect of the present business depression and the impoverishment of the country that is becoming evident, all largely attributable to the crop difficulties, manifests itself in the lessened importation of goods, the shrinkage of consumption already affecting trade very seriously.

Mr. Casanova writes, under date of December 12, an interesting statement, as follows:

The larger part of the effective insurgent forces that heretofore operated in the eastern department of the island have gradually invaded the department of Las Villas and are now operating in this and the neighboring districts. These forces comprise some 16,000 to 20,000 men, both cavalry and infantry, fairly well armed, under command of Maximo Gomez, as general in chief of all the insurgent forces, and Antonio Maceo, his second in command, with other less noted leaders. This army, the largest that has so for in this war been gathered together in a body, has maneuvered to evade any pitched battle with the various large columns of Government troops acting in combination against them. Several partial engagements have taken place, but without any important results.

The evident purpose of the insurgents is to penetrate further into the heart of this section with large forces and carry the war eastward into the richest and most productive districts. At last accounts the main insurgent army above referred to was in the vicinity of Santa Clara, the capital of the department of Las Villas, one detachment being sent to the vicinity of Trinidad, under command of a colored leader, to destroy the few sugar estates that remain there, the largest of which belongs to an American company. Aside from the above-mentioned forces there are the numerous bands in larger or smaller numbers that continue to infest every part of the country, harassing the troops and carrying on the usual guerrilla warfare.

The laying waste of all the country and prohibition to the farmers to market their produce or move cattle is causing great hardship and privation. But chief in gravity, in its fearful import to the community, is the impending failure of the sugar crop. This is being effectually prevented by the insurgents in this district, and no attempts are being made by planters to manufacture sugar. Even this passive acceptance of ruin by the planters does not obtain for them immunity from the destruction of their property. The firing of cane fields is assuming alarming proportions, thousands of acres of valuable cane fields are daily being burned, and, notably, on three of the largest sugar estates in this consular district, owned by Americans, the cane fields have been devastated. The machinery and buildings on sugar estates are of great value, costing from half a million to more than one million dollars. The Government, on application, grants a squad of soldiers to guard those buildings, but not in sufficient force to be entirely effective. Many planters prefer to take the chances of mercy from the insurgents by being ungarrisoned rather than draw on themselves their certain hostility and revenge unless effectively protected.

The recent reinforcements of 25,000 men from Spain will be mostly required for active field service, and not available for the defense of the sugar estates. Thus the existence and future of this valuable industry is threatened with complete annihilation.

I must not detain the Senate by matters which can possibly be omitted from this statement and yet give to the country a fair and just statement of the actual situation in Cuba. Writing on the 7th of January, 1896, Mr. Raymond O. Williams, our consul-general at Havana, says:

With reference to the proclamation of the captain-general of the 2d instant declariug a state of war to exist in the provinces of Havana and Pinar del Rio, copy and translation of which accompanied my dispatch No. 2695, of the 4th instant, I have to inform you that the newspapers, now under military censorship, report the burning of the sugar-cane fields throughout a large portion of this province by the insurgents who entered it, as variously estimated by popular rumor, numbering all the way from 4,000 to 12,000 men, on foot and horse.

Besides the burning of the cane fields, the newspapers report cases of damage to railroads by the displacing of rails, the cutting of telegraph and telephone lines, the blowing up of culverts, burning of bridges and stations; also, the pillaging of country stores, the carrying off of horses, saddles, and bridles from farms on their line of march for the mounting of their men, and the slaughter of cattle for food. Among the railroad stations destroyed are those of Ginviean and Guira de Melena, distant from here, respectively, about 28 and 40 miles on the line from Habana to Güines, and that of Gabriel, about 25 miles on the railroad from Habana to Pinar del Rio; the villages also were burned.

The trains on the first-named road only ran yesterday as far as Bejucal; on the Western Road from Habana to Pinar del Rio, only about 30 miles out, and on the Habana Bay and Matanzas no train goes beyond the latter city. All the railroads have handed in their rolling stock as much as possible to prevent its destruction.

Mr. WHITE. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. MORGAN. Page 52, January 7, 1896.

On the 15th the same officer gives an account of the capture of a village on the Bay of Habana. Then, on the 15th of January, he writes:

In continuation of my dispatch No. 2707, of the 11th instant, reporting the doings of the insurgents in the Provinces of Habana and Pinar del Rio, I have now to say that, according to the newspapers and private accounts, the only sources of information at the disposal of this office, the insurgents have still continued in their marches and countermarches to leave havoc throughout their train.

They have wrought so much destruction on the Western Railroad, an English company, that the directors have resolved to stop their running. They also burned a large part of the important town of Bejucal, on the Habana and Güines Railroad, because of the resistance made there by the local authorities and volunteers. At the present writing there is no immediate prospect of their being driven out of the two mentioned provinces.

He then gives an order of Maximo Gomez dated January 10, in which he says:

Considering that the operations of the sugar crop have become suspended in the western districts, and it being no longer necessary to burn the cane fields, I therefore issue the following order:

ARTICLE 1. The burning of the sugar-cane fields is hereby absolutely prohibited.

ART. 2. The severest penalties of the military and civil jurisdictions of the revolution will be visited, regardless of rank and station in the army, upon each and all who contravene this order.

ART. 3. The buildings and machinery will be destroyed of all plantations that, despite this humane order, resume work.

ART. 4. All the inhabitants of the Island of Cuba, of whatever nationality, will be respected in their persons and agricultural occupations.

MAXIMO GOMEZ, General in Chief.

Mr. President, I have now laid before the Senate only a part of the testimony found in these consular reports which bears upon this question, but nobody can take up these official reports, sent in by our consuls, and, unless they impeach the consuls themselves, deny this consecutive array of facts, which proves absolutely the proposition that this rising of the Cuban people has reached the extent of a great public war, and that the likelihood is very strong that in the end the Cubans will achieve their liberty. I wish to make no prediction about it, because our action does not depend in the slightest degree upon our ability to forecast the result or upon the probability of it; but, at the same time, from the facts which are given by our own consuls to our own Government, it is impossible to believe but that the whole body of the Cuban people, the native population of Cuba, are in thorough sympathy with Cisneros, the President of the Republic, with Gomez and Maceo and their other leaders.

After a little while, in the course of my argument, I shall come to the attitude of President Cisneros, and I shall show, not by reading the constitution, but by bringing it into an appendix which I will hereafter lay before the Senate, that he has formed a government upon excellent principles and after due deliberation, and as well calculated to carry on civil administration in time of war in a country like Cuba, it seems to me, as any constitutional arrangement could do.

A letter from a gentleman whose character for veracity and good sense can be most thoroughly avouched by members of this body, was written from Cuba on the 14th of February, 1896. It incloses a copy of an article written by another gentleman in Cuba, which was published in a New Orleans paper on February 8, 1896. The writer of the letter says that the author of the article is an American citizen "and is probably the best posted man in the island on Cuba and its affairs. This article, which I will have read at the desk, accounts for the military situation in Cuba, and shows how Gomez and Maceo have been able to make their splendid campaign to the west, and how it is impossible to hold Cuba much longer in chains.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

REVIEW OF THE SITUATION IN CUBA.

EDITOR LOUISIANA PLANTER: Recent events here have clearly proven that the estimate of the situation in the Island of Cuba made in my last letter was in nowise exaggerated. The possibilities and probabilities indicated have all been as fully realized as the short time elapsed could permit. Spain has failed in obtaining another loan abroad, and has been obliged to take from one of her own banks the insufficient sum of $10,000,000 to begin the new campaign. Instead of the 50,000 new troops, evidently required to enable planters to harvest the present sugar crop, but 25,000 have been sent. These two facts, whatever may be said to the contrary with the intent of disguising the truth, would seem to indicate the weakening and proximate exhaustion of the resources of the Government, both military and pecuniary.

As I anticipated, the reenforcements arrived too late to enable the sugar factories to begin work in due season, and the detachments of troops protecting their buildings have, as was to be expected, been of no avail to save their cane fields from destruction when attacked. The anticipated inefficency of the raw levees composing the new regiments seems to have been made quite as evident. Not only one line of troops has been broken through, as I suggested might happen, but, judging by the official reports, three in succession hastily formed, and the insurgents have invaded the provinces that have heretofore been comparatively safe, leaving behind them a broad path filled with smoking ruins and burnt cane fields, where local bands are completing more at leisure the hasty work of the invaders. Before this reaches you Gomez will in all likelihood have reached the other end of the island, devastating the district of Pinar del Rio, hitherto wholly exempt from the scourge of civil war and always considered perfectly secure.

Although this raid was announced months ago in the New York papers, Maximo Gomez, who during the last war always advocated this plan, has either completely outgeneraled Martinez Campos, or this general's orders have not, as I believe sometimes happens, been strictly obeyed by his subordinates. He does not seem to realize the radical differences there are between this and the former rebellion. Since the last war the Cubans have learned much—the Spaniards almost nothing.

I suppose that the reenforcements would have been used to form a cordon across the island to prevent the projected raid, gradually advancing and clearing the richest districts of the smaller bands, strengthening the line as it progressed by the detachments which would become unnecessary in the rear, a plan difficult in execution, but decisive if successful. The old system adopted during the last war, which lasted for ten years, has been preferred, and the dry season, so anxiously awaited to begin the sugar crop, upon which the fate of the island depends, after a victorious campaign, has principally served not to ripen the cane fields for the expectant planter, but to prepare them for the firebrand of the incendiary, quite as impatiently lying in wait to burn them. In answer to Martinez Campos's promise to enable the estates to grind early in the season, the rebels have obliged those that had commenced to suspend, and deprived a very large number of all means for future work.

He has evidently been led into two grave mistakes for a commander of his rank, by the exaggerated or false reports, perhaps, of his subordinates, against which he was obliged, some months ago, to issue a general order, which is discreditable to the army and his patriotic desire to economize Spain's limited resources. He has also overrated the efficiency of his own troops and underestimated the capabilities of his adversaries. It is quite likely that the President of the United States is better informed through the consular reports of what is really passing here than the governor-general of Cuba is by those upon whom he is obliged to depend. The vandalic raid of the insurgents was evidently planned with a full appreciation of the defects of the Spanish army, and to all appearances thoroughly carried out by their principal chief, born and brought up in the guerilla warfare of the island of St. Domingo, of which the army officers know little or nothing.

At the start he collected all the best of the insurgent bands and leaders, to the number of from 5,000 to 8,000, a body strong enough to cope with any two divisions of troops he might meet, trusting to rapidity of movement to outmaneuver the Government forces, destroying communication by wire and rail as he progressed to prevent those left in the rear from being brought again to the front. To do this he avoided his usual forest refuges and struck boldly down upon the open country, along the railways, through an almost continuous plain covered with canefields. With no infantry nor impedimenta but ammunition to delay his movements, he advanced night and day at a trot, taking but few hours' rest, and keeping scouring parties in front and upon his flanks, collecting fresh horses to replace those that gave out, together with arms of all kinds for those who might rise to join him. When the supply of horses proved insufficient the men mounted as "voltigeurs," the fresh horses carrying double. It is said, and it is quite probable, that he was accompanied by a full band of musicians of 22 pieces, who deserted in a body some time ago from one of the Spanish volunteer regiments.

He appears to have kept a strong vanguard under one of his best leaders to engage the bodies of troops as he met them (these are seldom of more than 1,200 men, with one field piece), while his main body passed in two columns, and then to retreat rapidly and fall into the rear. His force was estimated by one of the Spanish generals at 12,000 when he reached Matanzas, and is, probably, with those who have joined him, now about 17,000.

Gomez's success is not surprising when, in an army of 120,000 troops, there are here but 13,000 troopers, either because cavalry is considered too expensive, or because no amount of experience in Cuba will convince the Government that Spaniards afoot can not overtake Cubans horseback—one of the old persistent errors. Even the Cuban rural "gensdarmes," or police, are mostly infantry, although the robbers they are expected to pursue are always mounted, and a force of cavalry half as large as that employed would be more efficient for the purpose.

Orders have now been given to remedy this glaring defect by bringing cavalry from Spain and by a general requisition for horses throughout the island to mount infantry, giving in return promises to pay at low prices. Like all Government measures in Cuba, this comes too late for its purpose and will probably be converted into an abuse, as it was during the last war. There are already reports that the troops oblige all the poor country people they meet upon the highway, bringing their produce to the towns, to unload at the wayside and give up their horses to the soldiers. This course will probably, by depriving this class of their means of support, do more to swell the rebel ranks than to serve the Government. The infantry make very poor riders, and the few men who have been mounted heretofore upon horses taken from the insurgents look as though they would topple off at the slightest provocation and are unfit to fight in the saddle against Cubans, who have ridden since they were 6 years old.

Even the dearly bought experience of the last month (among the dearest that Cuba has had to pay) will not teach the Government that America is not Europe. The insurgents have already appropriated nearly all the best animals in the island, and the infantry, officers as well as men, seem to have no knowledge whatever of the care of horses, consequently they soon become unfit for service in their hands. In any case the insurgents can take horses quicker than the army can buy (even without paying for them), and this tardy measure seems likely to add little to the efficiency of the troops in this campaign. With the insurgents riding them to death upon the one hand, and the Spanish infantry killing them by ignorance and neglect upon the other, there is a very strong probability that the island will soon become quite as horseless as it was when unhappy Columbus discovered it, and if the rebels live upon other people's cattle much longer, quite as beefless.

Success in the field for either side seems now to depend upon celerity of movement, to which the army is little adapted, so far as can be judged from what is to be seen in the garrison town where this is written, one that has been in the midst of the war for over a year, and where bodies of troops from 200 to 1,500 are almost daily arriving and departing. The slothfulness with which the detachments are formed to go in search of the enemy is simply unaccountable to an American, and in a measure justifies the supposition of nonsympathizers that they are gaining time for the rebels to get away before they do. The looker-on becomes worn out waiting to see them start, and finally gives it up in despair. The dilatoriness of all the movements, the easy leisure of the officers, the stolid, apathetic indifference with which the men loll upon their rifles in carelessly formed ranks, apparently waiting first for one thing and then for another hour after hour, no one seeming to know why, offer little hope for the conversion of such material into that kind of "light horse infantry" the tactics of the Cubans so eminently demand.

The men, as a rule, are of low stature, a square, thick-set, stooping, short-legged, stiff-jointed race, evidently taken from a class of stolid, illiterate carriers of wood and drawers of water, to whom an adverse fate has denied all those boyhood pastimes which give agility and suppleness of limb. Their wabbling attempts at running and clumsy ascent of the ladders to the small forts which surround the town are often ludicrous in the extreme. The bayonet exercise, so indispensable against the Cuban attack with the sword, seems entirely unknown to these poor victims of misrule, and, contemplating their awkwardness, one is filled with pity imagining what the futility of their defense must be with a lithe and wiry Cuban hanging over them from his saddle, slashing the deadly "machete" with nothing between its sharp edge and their devoted heads but the sultry atmosphere of Cuba and her cheapest straw hats. Ignorant all their lives of the use of arms until recruited, and without target practice, they fire in platoons at the word of command, taking little aim, if any at all, and the amount of ammunition wasted is something beyond belief.

I have myself heard almost continuous discharges of small arms, with 22 shots of a fieldpiece, lasting from noon until after dark, and by a force said to number 700 troops, and the official report claimed only eight or ten of the enemy killed and as many wounded, ascertained solely by observing at long range the movements in the Cuban ranks. If such wild work is as general as the published accounts of engagements would indicate it will do infinitely more to exhaust the financial resources of the Government than to deplete the ranks of its adversaries. There are more good marksmen among the insurgents, but fewer cartridges to waste, and casualties are on both sides generally few and far between. When any considerable execution is accomplished it is at close quarters with cold steel—the bayonet and "machete."

There are undoubtedly good men among the Spanish officers, who fulfill their duties so far as they know them and the customs of the army permit, but a large proportion have, apart from their uniforms, nothing apparently that would commend them as soldiers, and the general standard seems very far below that of England and the United States. They appear to pay no attention to the health, food, comfort, or cleanliness of their men.

All but the most unavoidable duties seem to be left to the sergeants, and to bring the army to greater efficiency these would need the knowledge and capacity of general officers. If such defects are as common throughout the island, the recent successes point to a long war, and there is as yet no certainty that the crop of sugar will reach even 200,000 tons. The home Government has already called for volunteers, which in Spain shows a scarcity of troops, while as yet there is no evidence of weakening on the part of the insurgents, and if they have by their recent raid succeeded in effecting the rebellion of as large a proportion of the inhabitants of the heretofore undisturbed half of the island, which is much the more populous, very heavy reenforcements will be required, and there is little prospect of peace this year.

The Government allows little or no news about Gomez's movements, but rumor says that he has evaded the line formed across the island where it is but 21 miles, with 40,000 troops, in the hope of intercepting him upon his return. This concentration has left unprotected important districts, and the small bands of insurgents free to continue burning, collecting arms, and raising more men. There is no promise at present that any estate that did not pay subvention to the revolutionist last year will dare grind for a long time. In the solution of all-important political or race questions the unexpected is what generally happens, a change may nevertheless take place either way. It is also reported that Martinez Campos is going home, and the fear among Cubans that his withdrawal will give room for the repetition of the excesses of the last rebellion is having a deleterious effect.

Scant love of exactitude makes all statistics uncertain, and it is impossible to form any exact calculation of the real damage so far done. Maximo Gomez has shown much "method in his madness," and some generosity. Estates have been spared upon promising not to grind, one owner in Havana having been asked and given it by telephone. Others have been respected because the proprietors are more popular or had given money to the "cause." The cane fields of Spaniards have had a very decided preference, including those of a recent member of the present ministry. This is not surprising when it is remembered that many Spaniards are still in favor of summarily shooting all nonsympathizers at sight, and have been deadly enemies of the more civilized policy of Martinez Campos, to whom Cuba and humanity owe so much. Some still living went so far during the last war as to claim that all Cubans of the male gender over 10 years of age should be treated with the same tender mercy. Though not so drastic a remedy as that humorously proposed for the solution of the Irish question—by putting the sister island under water for fifteen minutes—it was fortunately not found admissible in the nineteenth century.

Among the estates of Spaniards there is one remarkable exception, the proprietor being famous for his unscrupulous dealings. Although the neighboring ones were burned, nothing upon his was harmed. This wily owner is supposed to have patriotically put up last year a golden lightning rod, which prevented his plantation from being struck. It is said that one American who had begun his crops was twice ordered to stop, and finally, seeing consequences more clearly under the lurid light of Gomez's firebrands, he accepted the inevitable and obeyed the revolutionary mandate. The insurgents, of course, excuse depredations which are beyond the pale of civilized warfare and at the same time a confession of impotence for better, though less effective, means, upon the ground that Spain with money can get men, and that they are not going to allow Cuba to give her, as she did during the last war, the means for cutting their own throats. The fact that rich Cubans who then gave money for the rebels have during this struggle refused all aid has also influenced feeling against the native planters. And incendiarism, besides depriving the Government of taxes, also obliges further outlay to save the homeless victims from starvation by supplying them with army rations. Meanwhile, the misery it is spreading will probably soon begin to have its effect in strengthening the ranks of the perpetrators.

Where all this will end there is no foretelling. Nevertheless, considering that most of the insurgents and many of the most prominent leaders are of the African race, the state of demoralization to which the country has been brought, the dense ignorance of the lower classes, and the long provocation, we have so far to be thankful that results are no worse, and however much the system of warfare is to be condemned, justice should be done to the rebels by a fair statement, in spite of all the calamities their deeds entail.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, from the commencement women have been respected, and this, under the circumstances and in a country where the passions are strong and so frequently unbridled, says a great deal in favor of the sense of right in the chiefs, and shows a better control of their men than could have been hoped for or expected. The soldiers who have fallen prisoners have been well treated and released after depriving them only of their arms, ammunition, and accouterments. The rebels have respected towns where they were not fired upon after a call to surrender, and pillage has generally been limited to the grocers' or bodegueros' shops, and this exception is due partly to the necessity of supplying their most pressing wants and partly to the fact that men of this class—almost exclusively Spaniards—have generally made themselves so obnoxious to the poor, and even to the troops, by their extortions, that their very names in Cuba have become a byword and term of opprobrium. Estates have been spared where there was no attempt to grind, and one petty leader, at least, has been sentenced to death for extorting $6,000 from a planter.

Not the least beneficent of their good acts is that of hanging by the wayside, whenever caught, the "Plateados" or "silver-plated" insurgents, criminals who, under the garb of patriotism, have committed thefts and murders. That this conflict has not degenerated into a war of pitiless extermination upon both sides is, in truth, due to the sterling common sense and humanity of Martinez Campos and the better instincts of the Cuban chiefs. They have committed none of those indiscriminate butcheries which characterized the other side during the last rebellion, though in some few cases they have killed defenseless men. They appear to have been provoked to it by some act on the part of the unfortunate victims, or these were volunteer officers and killed in reprisal because their own are shot when caught. If reports be true, many defenseless prisoners and unarmed peasants have been put to death secretly and against orders by the troops, and as this is generally believed in the rebel ranks, there is less of such work to lament than could be expected. If the small garrisons of the towns had delivered up their arms, it is to be supposed that no towns would have burned. They probably obeyed orders, whether rightly or wrongly given I leave others to decide. No right-minded person can sympathize with or approve atrocities by either side, but strict justice should be done to both in the opinion of the world, and to this end extenuating circumstances should not be hidden.

Those who are unacquainted with Cuban history may well ask, Who are responsible for all this havoc and bloodshed? There is no room left for doubt or discussion upon this point. Liberal Spaniards themselves admit the truth; centuries of error and misrule and the influence of the old local Spanish party opposing those indispensable reforms which would put an end to the spoliation to which its wealth is due. England by the independence of her best colonies learnt a great lesson which has been often worth to her all its cost. Spain, on the contrary, has been taught nothing by the loss of hers: and Cuba is simply going the way of all the rest. Her inadequate rulers have nothing now to complain of but their own folly—the Cubans in revolt are what they themselves have made them, and innocent and guilty alike are now reaping the well-known fruit of the seed that political turpitude has so long been sowing.

The bane, the blight, the curse, and the scourge of Cuba from the days of her discovery to the present time have been blind, unbridled egotism and insatiable greed. We find the pages of her history soiled by injustice, extortion, and fraud, or crimsoned by man's inhumanity to man in an all-pervading and conscienceless haste to be rich. Many good men have come to her from Spain, contributing to her advancement and welfare, but unfortunately these were but a minority. The rest have been a band of spoilers who have hung their consciences when they had any upon the walls of the Morro upon entering Cuba's principal harbor, forgetting, so far as her interests were concerned, to take them down again when they left. If Spain had always been represented here by a majority of the better elements of her different classes, Cuba would have been one of the most tranquil, prosperous, and happy countries in the world.

Unfortunately for both, much immigration has come from Spain's very dregs. Priests and prelates have come, not to preach charity and practice morality, but to extort fortunes from the gross superstitions of rich and poor, living openly with their concubines, surrounded by their ill-begotten children, and have passed away without leaving a single good work to perpetuate their names. Judges have been sent with their scales, not to weigh out even-handed justice, but gold received for iniquitous decisions, bartering with wealth upon the one hand and selling freedom and immunity to the thief and life to the assassin upon the other. Thousands of avaricious shopkeepers have come to fill their coffers by smuggling, extortion, and robbery of the poor, going back in peace with their ill-gotten gains, or to sheol without them, leaving demoralized descendants, often as illegitimate as the fortunes they made, to squander them. Thousands upon thousands of corrupt officials have come to pervert the laws and customs, returning laden with bribes. A badly paid and illy organized police have encouraged vice to live upon subornation. Every function of government has been perverted by greed for wealth, and not one single element in the whole body politic has been used to elevate the moral standard of the people or to induce respect for law.

With such antecedents it is not surprising that one looks in vain about this island for endowed schools, hospitals, asylums, or other charitable mementoes of the vast fortunes that generation after generation have been made and spent or preserved in miserly egotism; that the rich have felt that they owed nothing to the country which gave them their wealth, and have often shifted the burdens of taxation to the shoulders of the poor; that the poor feel neither respect for nor gratitude to the rich, to whom they owe nothing; that the laborer has been considered unworthy of his hire and too often defrauded of his pittance without redress. Disregard of natural rights has never begotten a sense of justice, nor are extortion and the illicit distribution of wealth the best means for inculcating the sacredness of property rights or to prevent their possession being looked upon by the ignorant masses as being an injustice nearly allied to crime.

Among those who have joined this revolt there are few who had anything to lose but their lives, their liberty, or their good names; and, educated in such a school, it is not to be wondered at that they should think themselves justified by their aims in desolating their own country as though it were that of the enemy in a barbarous age, looking upon their fatal work as the well-merited spoliation of their despoilers. There are naturally in the dregs of this revolution anarchistic tendencies which, if it is unsuccessful, will become more apparent in the future. Meanwhile, with over 200,000 men (including the volunteers), the Government seems utterly unable, for the present, to put any check to this destruction.

Spain's rule is being weighed in its own unbalanced scales, measured with its own false, unequal measures, and found most lamentably wanting. Long-delayed retribution has come at last with red-handed avengers, Spain's own begetting, falling alike upon the just and the unjust and the innocent and the guilty—"Mene, tekel, upharsin," is being written in letters of fire from Cape San Antonio to Point Maisi, upon the black clouds of smoke from Cuba's blazing crops and villages, and the end is not. The fertile plains of the brightest jewel of the Spanish crown are once again being devastated by fire and sword; her rich soil is once again being fructified by human blood, while her verdant hills, silent witnesses of all the long, eventful story of sardonic nepotism, injustice, and misrule, seem to echo back the old war cry of the crusaders, "It is the will of God; it is the will of God."

Mr. MORGAN. If I had had this letter read in the beginning of my remarks I would not have needed to say much else; but it is due to the committee, whose action I am endeavoring to justify, that I should present to the Senate this and other authentic evidence upon which its action is based.

The committee have made no mistake in declaring that—

A condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed, and for some time maintained by force of arms, by the people of Cuba.

This Cuban government rests upon the civil power of the people who support it and recognizes, as we do, that the military power is subordinate to the civil power. The government of the Republic of Cuba, through its accredited agent, has sent to our Government a statement of their claims for recognition as belligerents, in which there is no apparent misrepresentation as to existing facts and conditions in Cuba.

I will hereafter lay before the Senate so much of that document as relates to the organization, constitution, and some general laws of the Republic of Cuba.

These papers are carefully prepared and bear witness to a remarkable aptitude and ability in the organization of a new republic, born in the throes and travail of internecine war.

We find, then, the actual existence of an open civil war for independence, waged by a great number of the people of Cuba who sanction it and give to it their support through the powers of civil government, and support it, also, with large, well-organized, and brave armies in the field, which have already overrun and are in control of more than half the territory of Cuba.

This situation fully justifies the United States in giving recognition to the Cuban Republic as a belligerent power and to the people of Cuba our recognition of their rights under the laws of civilized warfare.

If this resolution is adopted it will impose upon the United States certain duties to which we must give careful consideration.

1. What is the attitude of the United States toward Spain if the belligerent rights of Cuba are recognized?

It is an attitude of peace and friendship, without either the intent to give offense or to challenge or dispute the sovereignty of Spain over the Island of Cuba. Spain did not offend the United States when she recognized the Confederate States as belligerents, nor do we offend Spain by recognizing the Cuban republic or the Cuban people as belligerents in an open public war.

We do not conceal the earnest sympathy of our people with the people of Cuba in their struggle for independence, but until we are compelled we will not raise a hand to assist them.

General Grant in his special message to the Congress of the United States on the subject of recognizing the belligerency of Cuba in the then existing war with Spain, on the 13th of June, 1870, says as follows:

The question of belligerency is one of fact not to be decided by sympathies for or prejudices against either party. The relations between the parent state and the insurgents must amount, in fact, to war in the sense of international law. Fighting, though fierce and protracted, does not alone constitute war; there must be military forces acting in accordance with the rules and customs of war—flags of truce, cartels, exchange of prisoners, etc.—and to justify a recognition of belligerency there must be above all, a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient in character and resources to constitute it, if left to itself, a state among nations capable of discharging the duties of a state, and of meeting the just responsibilities it may incur as such toward other powers in the discharge of its national duties.

That was a statement made by General Grant in his message, upon which he predicated a refusal to recognize the belligerent rights of Cuba in the preceding war. The present situation in Cuba has brought those people entirely within the strictest construction of all the doctrines and principles stated in the message of General Grant. I deem it unnecessary to read any further from the great number of authorities, many of them American, in which this same doctrine is stated, oftentimes with greater liberality, in favor of according belligerent rights than it is here stated by General Grant.

If we act in good faith and from proper motives in recognizing the belligerent rights of the Cubans and of the government they set up, Spain has no claim upon us, by treaty or otherwise, that forbids us to give this recognition.

The question on which our rights hinge in this matter is a question of fact which we must decide for ourselves.

I quote from a statement of Mr. Webster, made on the 5th of April, 1842, in a paper which he addressed to Mr. Thompson:

If citizens of the United States, enlisted in the service of an insurgent power whom the United States acknowledges as belligerent, but which is not so acknowledged by the parent State, should be treated when captured by the parent State otherwise than as prisoners of war, and their release, when demanded by the United States, should be refused, "consequences of the most serious character would certainly ensue."

Mr. Cass says on the same subject:

I am not aware that in this country any solemn proceeding, either legislative or executive, has been adopted for the purpose of declaring the status of an insurrectionary movement abroad, and whether it is entitled to the attributes of civil war, unless, indeed, in the formal recognition of a portion of an empire seeking to establish its independence, which, in fact, does not so much admit its existence as it announces its result, at least so far as regards the nation thus proclaiming its decision. But that is the case of the admission of a new member into the family of nations.

Mr. Cass refers to "the case of the admission of a new member into the family of nations," as to which it must be observed that there is a very marked distinction. We have had three recent illustrations of the action of the Government of the United States in the admission of republican forms of government to succeed monarchies, one in France, one in Spain, and one in Brazil, in all of which, having ministers recognized by the Government which had previously existed, when the change took place from monarchy to republicanism, our Government was in haste to recognize the Republics and, in the case of France and of Spain also, authorized the recognition of the new Republics by cablegram.

When, however, a country is divided asunder, some of its provinces or parts falling off from the others and claiming independence, particularly when that country is one of contiguous territory, as in the case of Texas, the recognition must be made by some other power than the President of the United States, because that fact brings a new nation into the family of nations and the political existence of that nation as one of the family of nations must be established in this country by law. Thereafter, when it is thus established and thus recognized by law, the President of the United States, as the Chief Executive and as the constitutional conductor of our diplomatic relations, has the right to recognize the person who may preside in that Government as being entitled to exercise the functions of his office. General Cass draws, inferentially, the distinction between the two cases in the remarks that I have just read.

Mr. Fish, in a letter to Mr. Motley dated the 25th of September, 1869, says:

The President does not deny, on the contrary he maintains, that every sovereign power decides for itself, on its responsibility, the question whether or not it will, at a given time, accord the status of belligerency to the insurgent subjects of another power, as also the larger question of the independence of such subjects and their accession to the family of sovereign states.

Thus we see that the right to recognize a foreign government as being a belligerent power is one that the Government of the United States asserts upon its own responsibility, and, I will add, with reference only to the rights and sympathies of its own people. It does not stop to consider whether or not it has a justification in the eyes of the country within whose limits an insurrection has arisen which has grown into the proportions of public war and a declaration of independence. It does not stop to consider the merits or justice of the case as between the insurgents and the mother country.

It does not stop to weigh with fine nicety of distinction what may be the appropriate moral sentiment of the mother country in refusing to give up the portion of her territory thus claiming independence. What the United States Government does and must do in a case of that kind is to follow the line of the interests and rights of her own people and the duties and obligations she owes to them.

I will admit that in acting in this way she may have very slight justification or no justification, and the motives of her action may be attributed to some jealousy of the mother country, to some ancient pique, or grudge, or revenge. If this was true the Government of the United States could be held morally responsible in the sense of the laws of nations for having interfered without just cause or necessity in the affairs of another country. But when, as we have seen in the statements that I have brought to the attention of the Senate, commencing as far back as 1823, there is a continuous purpose on the part of the Government of the United States to see that no inhuman persecutions shall be visited upon the Cuban people because they felt the aspirations of liberty burning in their hearts, when we have pursued during all of this period of time the most guarded and conservative course toward Spain, when we have placed, as I remarked last Thursday, statutes upon our books of the severest character to prevent our people from availing themselves of the ordinary privileges of the laws of nations in cases like this, nothing can be imputed to us except that we are driven by the power of facts, for which we are not in the slightest degree responsible, to that serious attitude in which we are bound to acknowledge, in deference to the rights and feelings of our own people, that the people of Cuba are lawful belligerents under the laws of nations.

The reasons why the Government of the United States has this peculiar right under these peculiar circumstances are various and numerous. I will undertake to cite a very few of them. First, the nearness of the strife to our own borders. Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Motley, 25th of September, 1869, announces this doctrine:

Or actual hostility might have continued to rage in the theater of insurgent war, combat after combat might have been fought for such a period of time, a mass of men may have engaged in actual war until they should have acquired the consistency of military power, to repeat the idea of Mr. Canning, so as evidently to constitute the fact of belligerency, and to justify the recognition by the neutral. Or the nearness of the seat of hostilities to the neutral may compel the latter to act; it might be his sovereign duty to act, however inconvenient such action should be to the legitimate Government.

President Grant, in his annual message in 1875, says:

The question of according or withholding rights of belligerency must be judged in every case in view of the particular attending facts. * * * This conflict must be one which will be recognized in the sense of international law as war. Belligerency, too, is a fact. The mere existence of contending armed bodies and their occasional conflicts do not constitute war in the sense referred to.

A civil war—

said Judge Grier, giving the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Prize Cases, 2 Black, 667—is never solemnly declared; it becomes such by its accidents—the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on. When the party in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory; have declared their independence; have cast off their allegiance; have organized armies; have commenced hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents and the contest a war.

I now read from Woolsey on International Law, App. 111, note 19:

There may be a difficulty in ascertaining when the fact of war begins, and this difficulty is the greater in cases of insurrection or revolt, where many of the antecedents and premonitory tokens of war are wanting, where an insurrection may be of little account and easily suppressed, and where war bursts out full-blown, it may be, at once. Our Government has more than once professed to govern its action by the following criteria expressed in Mr. Monroe's words relating to the Spanish South American revolts: "As soon as the movement assumes such a steady and consistent form as to make the success of the provinces probable, the rights to which they were entitled by the law of nations, as equal parties to a civil war, have been extended to them."

But this rule breaks down in several places. The probability is a creature of the mind, something merely subjective, and ought not to enter into a definition of what a nation ought to do. Again, the success does not depend on steadiness and consistency of form only, but on relative strength of the parties. If you make probability of success the criterion of right in the case, you have to weigh other circumstances before being able to judge which is most probable, success or defeat. Would you, if you conceded belligerent rights, withdraw the concession whenever success ceased to be probable? And, still further, such provinces in revolt are not entitled by the law of nations to rights as equal parties to a civil war. They have properly no rights, and the concession of belligerency is not made on their account, but on account of considerations of policy on the part of the state itself which declares them such, or on grounds of humanity.

The writer then goes on to cite a number of instances which I will not undertake to detain the Senate by reading.

The time of this recognition is appropriate. I cite again, in support of this doctrine, Woolsey's International Law:

The true time for issuing such a declaration, if it is best to issue it at all, is when a revolt has its organized government prepared by law for war on either element or on both, and when some act, involving the open intention and the fact of war, has been performed by one or both of the parties. Here are two facts, the one political, the other pertaining to the acts of a political body. The fact of war is either a declaration of war or some other implying it, like a proclamation of blockade, or, it may be, actual armed contest.

In the wars that have occurred in Cuba many occasions have presented when our withholding a declaration of belligerency and neutrality has been unjust to our national character, until, indeed, our forbearance has been counted to us by other powers as proof of our weakness as a Government.

Our experiences in Cuba demand that no war shall exist there without our especial supervision as to the treatment of our people who are engaged in it, or are resident there, and if it is necessary for us to treat both parties as belligerents, we must do so in order to assert against them and impose upon each the duties and obligations of civilized warfare and of respect for the rights of our people.

With insurrections occurring in Cuba frequently and almost with a regularity proportioned to the time needed to recover from one war before another is begun and every struggle made disastrous to the property of our people in Cuba and horrible with the sacrifice of lives and other outrages on humanity, we have the right to interpose our recognition that a state of war exists and to maintain an armed neutrality, if need be, through which we shall separate between these warring parties, and hold the Government that is guilty of wrong to our citizens to its responsibility for such conduct.

If we consent to stand by and witness these Spanish methods of dealing with our people until these long struggles are ended, and then to seek the price of their blood through the protracted delays of Spanish diplomacy, the respect we shall thus exhibit for the sensibilities of a cruel monarchy will in the end destroy our self-respect.

I prefer now, in anticipation of what is about to occur, and we know will surely occur, as it has in each of these bloody wars, to act upon the declaration of our rights made in President Jackson's seventh annual message, in 1835, from which I will read.

Unfortunately, many of the nations of this hemisphere are still self-tortured by domestic dissensions. Revolution succeeds revolution; injuries are committed upon foreigners engaged in lawful pursuits. Much time elapses before a government sufficiently stable is erected to justify expectation of redress. Ministers are sent and received, and before the discussions of past injuries are fairly begun, fresh troubles arise; but too frequently new injuries are added to the old, to be discussed together with the existing government, after it has proved its ability to sustain the assaults made upon it, or with its successor, if overthrown. If this unhappy condition of things continue much longer, other nations will be under the painful necessity of deciding whether justice to their suffering citizens does not require a prompt redress of injuries by their own power, without waiting for the establishment of a government competent and enduring enough to discuss and make satisfaction for them.

That was a doctrine which was evoked by the fact of our being near to nations which were constantly afflicted with these spasms of turbulence and revolution. President Jackson, after his usual style, met it with a declaration that is American through and through, and just through and through, and it is upon that ground we stand to-day as firmly as we stand upon any other that affects our honor, or peace, or the safety of our people, when we demand that Spain, in the conduct of its war against Cuba, shall accord to her the attitude of a belligerent, so that if she achieves her independence we can hold her responsible for the wrongs done to our people. When Spain has succeeded in suppressing these revolts against her sovereignty in Cuba, her wars have left to us the legacy of devastated property to great amounts, for which no recompense has been made, and many lives of our people wasted without so much as an expression of regret.

It is asking too much of us, in the name of courtesy or friendship, that we should abstain from applying, in behalf of our people, the laws of civilized warfare, when the existence of public war is notorious and undeniable, because such a declaration may give countenance or encouragement to great bodies of people who are fighting for their liberty.

We have in many cases declared the rights, in favor of our own people, that are stated in the message of President Jackson from which I have quoted.

As to the occasions in the past when cruel barbarities have been perpetrated on our people in utter defiance of our treaty rights, applicable especially to Cuba, I will cite the comments of some of our eminent statesmen.

Speaking generally of the war in Cuba in 1875, Mr. Fish thus states the situation to Mr. Orth, November 15, 1875:

You will further state that the President is of opinion that should the Government to which you are accredited find it consistent with its views to urge upon Spain the importance and necessity of either terminating or abandoning this contest, which now after a continuance of seven years has not advanced toward a prospect of success on either side, but which is characterized by cruelties, by violations of the rules of civilized modern warfare, by pillage, desolation, and wanton incendiarism, threatening the industry, capacity, and production of an extended and fertile country, the friendly expression of such views to Spain might lead that Government to a dispassionate consideration of the hopelessness of the contest, and tend to the earlier restoration of peace and prosperity to Cuba, if not to the preservation of the peace of the world.

President Hayes takes up this subject in his first annual message in 1877, and says:

Another year has passed without bringing to a close the protracted contest between the Spanish Government and the insurrection in the Island of Cuba. While the United States have sedulously abstained from any intervention in this contest, it is impossible not to feel that it is attended with incidents affecting the rights and interests of American citizens. Apart from the effect of the hostilities upon trade between the United States and Cuba, their progress is inevitably accompanied by complaints, having more or less foundation, of searches, arrests, embargoes, and oppressive taxes upon the property of American residents, and of unprovoked interference with American vessels and commerce. It is due to the Government of Spain to say that during the past year it has promptly disavowed and offered reparation for any unauthorized acts of unduly zealous subordinates whenever such acts have been brought to its attention.

That is more than Spain has deigned to do in the present war, so far as I am informed.

Now, as to the administration of justice in Cuba in times when the civil wars were flagrant, I will read a few observations, because it is in that particular matter that our people have perhaps a deeper concern than almost any other. Mr. Fish, writing to Mr. Sickles, November 25, 1870, says:

I inclose a copy of a decree said to have been made by a military tribunal in Cuba, and published in the Diario de la Marina on the 9th of November, current.

This decree purports to condemn to death sundry persons named in it as the central republican junta of Cuba and Puerto Rico, established in New York, and to confiscate their property. It appears affirmatively in the decree that none of the condemned had appeared before the court.

Condemning men to death who were living at that time in New York and had never been before the court.

This revolutionary body, known as the Cuban junta, voluntarily disbanded itself about one month before this decree was made, and announced its intention to discontinue any hostile purpose it might have entertained against Spanish rule in Cuba. During its previous history its acts, so far as conflicting with the laws of the United States and the international duties of this Government, were repressed by the President. This Department has also been officially informed by Mr. Roberts that the state of affairs in Cuba is regarded as a favorable one by the Spanish Government, and that in consequence of that the extraordinary powers previously vested in him had been withdrawn. This Government has therefore seen with surprise and regret the announcement of a policy in Cuba which is apparently uncalled for by any present emergencies, which is not in harmony with the ideas now entertained by the most enlightened nations as to the treatment of political offenses, and which, as it appears to us, will tend to continue the unhappy disturbances which exist in Cuba.

Very numerous controversies—one we have recently settled in the Mora case—have arisen between Spain and the United States growing out of this insurrection, and have led to long diplomatic interchange of notes and a great deal of angry contention and disturbance between these two Governments.

In the present war we have an account from our consuls in Cuba of the arrest of 27 American citizens and the expulsion of others, and of the destruction of much valuable property of our citizens. I need not dwell on these incidents as showing, by object lessons, the renewal of the horrors of former wars for the independence of Cuba.

The present war, since the more humane plans of General Campos have caused his recall to Spain, to give place to Valerian Weyler, has received an impress of cruelty in the decrees he has promulgated as commander in chief and captain general for its further prosecution that is more ferocious than any that any ruler has dared to avow in modern times.

It proclaims a war against the people, against the poor and the helpless, against women and children, and all movable property, trade, food supplies, and every element of personal liberty, whether of speech or action, with a cruel cunning and atrocity that has no parallel in the history of modern civil wars.

This bloody code will as surely be enforced in its terrible and discretionary penalties against our people in Cuba as that any of them are found there suspected of sympathy with the Cuban people. It violates our commercial rights and annuls the treaty stipulations for the trial of our citizens who are accused of crime in Cuba.

Summary conviction and sudden death are imposed upon those who "insult their superiors." If a fancied or affected insult to the haughty pride of the Spanish hidalgo is made by some poor victim, under the goad of imperious persecution, the courts are dispensed with and the egotistic and lordly tyrant becomes at once the judge and executioner.

If any such wicked decree is made and executed under this Weyler code against any citizen of the United States, Spain had as well understand now as later that 70,000,000 freemen will visit upon her a punishment compared with which the loss of Cuba would be as a pleasing satisfaction.

As a warning of certain redress against this dictation of a ruthless tyrant, and as plain notice to the native Cubans who may be driven into retaliation by its murderous denunciations, the least we can do is to place both parties in the national attitude of belligerents, so that we can hold each of them responsible for their conduct in dealing with citizens of the United States.

The declaration of neutrality when made by us imposes on us the duties of neutrality, and this is all that it does. I will state them very briefly.

The duties imposed upon us are that we are bound to restrain enlistment by belligerents; we must restrain the forming of armed expeditions; we are bound to restrain the fitting out and selling of armed cruisers to the belligerents, or the passage of belligerent troops over our soil; we are bound not to permit our territory to be made the base of belligerent operations, nor to permit belligerent naval operations in our territorial waters, nor to permit the sale of prizes in our ports; we are bound to redress damages done to belligerents by our connivance or neglect.

Now, what are the rights of our people under this declaration of belligerency, which involves, of course, the declaration of neutrality? They may trade with either belligerent and may trade with the colonies of the belligerent which are not even open to trade in times of peace. We may permit free discussion as to foreign sovereigns. We may permit our people to furnish funds or supplies to the belligerents. Our people may furnish them with munitions of war. They may enlist in the service of the belligerents, provided they do not, in contravention of our own statutes, enlist in this country or enlist in bodies formed for the purpose or actually organized into military squads. We are permitted to sell them ships or to buy ships from them. We are permitted to give an asylum to the belligerent ships or troops in our ports or on land.

Mr. President, that exhausts the list of the duties, and obligations, and the rights of persons thus involved in belligerency. It is needless to state more fully what are the rights and duties of neutrals in time of war, because this resolution is not the least indication of hostility to either of the belligerent governments in Cuba, but imposes upon us the duty of preserving a relation of friendship to both.

Whether our statutes restrain our citizens within narrower limits in their intercourse with belligerents than the laws of nations prescribe is not a material inquiry at this time, for our proposed action is based upon our sense of right and duty, and is moved by our sense of justice and our sympathy with those who are harshly treated, and not by any advantages of trade that may come to our people in their intercourse with either of the belligerents.

With peace in Cuba we have very liberal rights of trade with those people.

Spain declares that Cuba is at peace and only a faction of the people there are engaged in sedition or insurrection. But with this declaration of peace she imposes upon our trade in contraband and in supplies to places in rebellion the laws of war.

We are thus forced to declare the existence of open war that our people may enjoy the rights of neutrals in war, at the risk of capture, that are denied to them as the friends of Spain because Cuba is in a state of insurrection.

Thus peace shuts us out from trade with Cuba, and we declare that war exists there, so that we may have as much freedom of trade as a state of war will give us. As it is, our trade is virtually abolished.

Along with open war we have the right to insist that it shall be civilized warfare.

Upon this subject I could read, if I felt disposed to detain the Senate, some statements from the Cuban agents who are here, which, I think, would be highly worthy of attention; and I hope other Senators who may be disposed to engage in this debate will look up that subject, and I will furnish them with the information, if they desire to have it.

But it is a canon of universal acceptance among all Christian nations that in modern times, at least, the laws of civilized modern warfare shall be observed by all belligerents.

The next question, Mr. President, upon which I propose to make some discussion is in answer to the question put to me, I think, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], or one of the Senators, as to who may declare the belligerent rights of a foreign people, whether the President or Congress, or both in conjunction. Upon this proposition, which does not really arise upon the resolution reported by the committee, I will take the opportunity of submitting some further considerations to-morrow, as it is entirely disconnected with the question of our right and our duty to recognize the belligerency of Cuba and the manner in which it shall be done, and whether this resolution, now offered in the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations, shall be effectual for that purpose is a question entirely aside from our right and duty to recognize the belligerency of Cuba.

I wish to say, then, Mr. President, that not one word that I have uttered on this floor, and not one word, I think, that has been or will be uttered by any other Senator arises from any jealousy of Spain or any disposition to do her any wrong, to subject her to any humiliation or any injustice. We are speaking now only in behalf of our own people, who, innocently on their part, have been drawn into a situation where a decision must be made in their behalf as to the fact whether a war exists in Cuba or does not exist there. I have already cited and read the authorities to prove that any American citizen found in the Island of Cuba has the private right to determine for himself whether war exists there or not, and to regulate his conduct according to his intelligent decision of that proposition.

If while he is in the interior of Cuba he makes a contribution to the Cuban army, whether he does it voluntarily or under a constraint imposed upon him, he has the right, as I have proved by the authorities I have cited, to decide for himself whether the party to which he makes that contribution is engaged in public war and is the representative of a political de facto government controlling in that immediate vicinity. That decision made by him protects him, and there is not a power which belongs to the Government of the United States which will not be exerted to protect that man in making his decision, as much as it would a soldier who might muster under our flag in virtue of a concurrent or joint resolution passed this day in the two Houses of Congress and signed by the President. The fact of belligerency is the thing which determines the right—not the justification of the belligerents, not the purposes of the war; but if a public, open war exists in Cuba to-day our own private citizens may determine it, and must determine it if they are found there, as we see they have been in many cases.

The case of Mr. Atkins, to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred, is a case directly in point. What must Mr. Atkins do? he inquires. Must he pay this tribute of $2 a ton, or whatever it is, which is levied upon him by the Gomez government or the Cisneros government, the civil government and the military government of the Republic of Cuba, or shall he refuse to pay it to them? If he pays it to them voluntarily, Spain holds him accountable, and his property is within her domain and is threatened with embargo. If he does not pay it to the Cuban republicans, his property will be destroyed, or perhaps a forced levy made upon him. That man has the right to decide the question, and if he makes a payment to the Cuban rebels under such conditions and circumstances, and Spain undertakes to embargo or confiscate his property because he is giving aid and comfort to the enemy, the Government of the United States would be bound to step in and say: "Mr. Atkins was compelled to make the decision and had the right to do it; you did not have the power to extend your Government protection over him at the time, and the only protection he could gain was by his intelligent decision as to whether this was in fact a mere mob or riot or insurrection, or whether it was a public war."

So we have got to trace such questions up, in such cases, beginning with our people whose persons and property are upon that island, and we have got to follow them through all of its stages, so as to see that men who have even gone contrary to our own laws and enlisted in the Cuban service, or, if you please, in the Spanish service, are protected by the laws of civilized warfare.

There is no public reason, there is no reason founded in justice, there is nothing which animates the heart of an honest American which furnishes to us, in my judgement, on this serious occasion the slightest justification for refusing to recognize a fact which the whole world is bound to acknowledge. If we make that recognition now, it may have some impression upon this war to carry it in favor of one party or the other. If it does, that is not our intention. What we intend to do is to declare a state of public war as existing there, because that is the fact, because that is the truth. It is our duty to our own people to recognize it, and only to them.

More than that. If we make this recognition now, and if this rebellion be put down, if this insurrection is quelled, the next one which comes, or the next—for come they will, come they must, and we know it—will come under the premonition of a decided policy of the United States of America. When these people in search of their liberties and in demand of their natural rights again flare out into open public war, though it may be done in an hour, though it may not be done in a month or a year, Spain will have notice that she can not consider them and our people who may be there and who may be obedient to the authority of the de facto government in the light of mere criminals and culprits, liable to be shot to death when she captures them with arms in their hands, or without; she must hereafter treat them according to the fact, and when the fact becomes obvious, and is known the world over and there is none who can honestly dispute it, she must recognize that fact and extend to the belligerents the rights of civilized warfare.

I desire to retain the floor for a few moments to-morrow on the pending resolution.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for the purpose of allowing me to offer a substitute for the pending resolution, simply that it may be printed before to-morrow, and for no other purpose? I do not wish now to offer any remarks about it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the proposed substitute be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We trust that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been committed, will, at as early a date as the facts will warrant, recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent government of her own choice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed.

ANNULMENT OF LAND PATENTS.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of the time within which suits may be brought to vacate and annul land patents, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments. I desire to make a brief statement regarding it.

Five years ago a bill was passed fixing the time within which the Government could bring suit against railroad companies to annul patents which had been issued fraudulently or erroneously. Unless the bill which I now report be passed by next Monday, all those fraudulent and erroneous patents will be validated. The bill has been amended in some respects by the Committee on Public Lands, and it must go to the House of Representatives, pass there, and be signed by the President by next Monday. The bill is of sufficient importance for the President to have sent a special message to Congress in regard to its subject-matter.

I will say that the Senate Committee on Public Lands, with a full attendance, every member being present save one, who is out of the city, have considered the bill carefully, and have come to a unanimous agreement. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands, and I ask unanimous consent, owing to the emergency, that the bill may now be taken up and put on its passage. I think there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. CALL. Temporarily laying aside the pending measure?

Mr. DUBOIS. Of course, temporarily laying aside the pending measure.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, line 7, before the word "years," strike out "ten" and insert "six"; so as to make the section read:

That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent to lands heretofore erroneously issued under a railroad or wagon-road grant shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within six years after the date the of issuance of such patents, and the limitation of section 8 of chapter 561 of the acts of the second session of the Fifty-first Congress and amendments thereto is extended accordingly as to the patents herein referred to. But no patent to any lands held by a bona fide purchaser shall be vacated or annulled, but the right and title of such purchaser is hereby confirmed: Provided, That no suit shall be brought or maintained, nor shall recovery be had for lands or the value thereof, that were certified or patented in lieu of other lands covered by a grant which were lost or relinquished by the grantee in consequence of the failure of the Government or its officers to withdraw the same from sale or entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 19, after the word "States," to insert "against the patentee, corporation, company, person, or association of persons for whose benefit the certification was made"; and in line 22, after the word "party," to strike out "of" and insert "to"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if any person claiming to be a bona fide purchaser of any lands erroneously patented or certified shall present his claim to the Secretary of the Interior prior to the institution of a suit to cancel a patent or certification, and if it shall appear that he is a bona fide purchaser, the Secretary of the Interior shall request that suit be brought in such case against the patentee, or the corporation, company, person, or association of persons for whose benefit the certification was made, for the value of said land, which in no case shall be more than the minimum Government price thereof, and the title of such claimant shall stand confirmed. An adverse decision by the Secretary of the Interior on the bona fides of such claimant shall not be conclusive of his rights, and if such claimant, or one claiming to be a bona fide purchaser, but who has not submitted his claim to the Secretary of the Interior, is made a party to such suit, and if found by the court to be a bona fide purchaser, the court shall decree a confirmation of the title, and shall render a decree in behalf of the United States against the patentee, corporation, company, person, or association of persons for whose benefit the certification was made, for the value of the land, as hereinbefore provided. Any bona fide purchaser of lands patented or certified to a railroad company, and who is not made a party to such suit, and who has not submitted his claim to the Secretary of the Interior, may establish his right as such bona fide purchaser in any United States court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, or at his option, as prescribed in sections 3 and 4 of chapter 376 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to the last amendment at the foot of page 2. Suppose the land has been conveyed to a bona fide purchaser; then I understand there is to be a judgment for the United States against the party who originally took the defective land grant, and has conveyed it to a bona fide purchaser; but the proposition is that there shall be a decree for the value of the land. Suppose some railroad company conveyed the land for $1.50 an acre at the time, or $2 an acre, or any other small sum, and this grant is held invalid by reason of some technical or other objection; the railroad company conveyed the land for that price, and now there is a city on it, and the land may have gone up twenty times in value; is it the purpose of the bill to hold the original patentee liable in that case for the present value of the land; and if so, is it not establishing a rule that exists nowhere else in regard to the liability of a grantor?

Mr. PASCO. The minimum Government price is the amount fixed in the bill, as the Senator will see by looking at the tenth line of section 2.

Mr. HOAR. In a previous section there is a limitation. That answers the question.

Mr. PEFFER. I have received a number of letters in opposition to the bill, but not having examined its provisions, I did not quite see the force of the objections that were made. It was my impulse when the bill was read to object to its consideration, but after having conferred with a number of the members of the Committee on Public Lands, in whose judgment I have very great confidence, I have concluded not to raise the objection. However, I wish to make this statement in order that the objectors may understand that I have given the matter some consideration before letting the bill come to a vote.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to hear a statement made by some member of the committee who is familiar with the bill, which is a very important one. If it merely extends the limitation of time within which suits may be brought where lands have been fraudulently, erroneously, and unlawfully conveyed to corporations, I have no objection to it. I shall vote for the bill, as I understand the matter, but reserving the right to move a reconsideration of the vote if I find that the sections are not of that character.

Mr. BERRY. I will state to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] that in 1891 Congress passed an act requiring that all suits brought by the Government to annul patents should be brought within five years. That time will expire on the 3d day of the coming month, March. While the Land Office has done all that it has been possible to do to bring those suits within that time, it has been unable to bring all the suits that the officials believe should be brought, and the President of the United States called the attention of Congress to the matter, recommending that the law be repealed or at least the limit extended.

The other House has passed the pending bill. It sought in it to protect all innocent purchasers, bona fide purchasers, so as not to subject them to suits by the Government. The bill extends for five years the time within which the Government may bring suit to set aside any of the grants to the various railroad corporations of the country where the lands are still under the control or in the possession of the railroad company. That is the object and the purpose of the bill. There are a number of details by which innocent purchasers may apply to the Secretary of the Interior and have their titles confirmed where there is shown to be any question.

Now, I will state frankly that I should have preferred to repeal the act of 1891 out and out, and leave no question whatever. But that is impossible. This is a House bill, and it is this or nothing. If the pending bill is not passed and signed by the President before next Monday the limitation enacted in 1891 will have attached and it will be claimed, at least, whether it is the law or not, that the title, however fraudulent it may be, to the railroads will be confirmed. I think it is absolutely important that the bill should be passed and passed this evening, and so think all the other members of the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 147) granting a pension to George W. Chase, late private Company B, Twenty-second New York Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 1605) granting a pension to Anna Kelley;

A bill (H. R. 1785) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the W. H. Wallace Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Eldorado, Kans., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane Dulany;

A bill (H. R. 4153) to grant the Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4321) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4960) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 121) calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information in relation to the harbor at Manitowoc, in the State of Wisconsin.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 25, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 24, 1896.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

Second Lieut. William Alexander Campbell, Ninth Infantry, to be first lieutenant, February 16, 1896, vice Wills, Twenty-second Infantry, deceased.

POSTMASTERS.

Anson E. Chamberlain, to be postmaster at Dalton, in the county of Berkshire and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Martin E. Stockbridge, whose commission expired February 9, 1896.

Charles Laurence, to be postmaster at Owosso, in the county of Shiawassee and State of Michigan, in the place of Newton McBain, whose commission expired February 8, 1896.

Edmund C. Burke, to be postmaster at Virginia, in the county of St. Louis and State of Minnesota, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after July 1, 1894.

Sloan E. Wible, to be postmaster at Hopkins, in the county of Nodaway and State of Missouri, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1896.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 24, 1896.

THIRD ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE.

William Woodward Baldwin, of New York, to be Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONERS.

John B. Harlow, of Missouri, to be Civil Service Commissioner.

William G. Rice, of New York, to be Civil Service Commissioner.

POSTMASTERS.

J. M. B. Petrikin, to be postmaster at Greeley, in the county of Weld and State of Colorado.

Irving McArthur, to be postmaster at Lapeer, in the county of Lapeer and State of Michigan.

J. M. Doolen, to be postmaster at Quanah, in the county of Hardeman and State of Texas.

John G. Hoffman, to be postmaster at Elizabethtown, in the county of Lancaster and State of Pennsylvania.

Edwin L. Coates, to be postmaster at Boulder, in the county of Boulder and State of Colorado.

F. P. Kanester, to be postmaster at Cleveland, in the county of Bradley and State of Tennessee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 24, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] claim the day?

Mr. BABCOCK. This being District of Columbia day——

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him? The Committee on Indian Affairs are anxious to have this day in order to complete, if possible, the consideration of their bill now pending in Committee of the Whole. I therefore ask unanimous consent that District of Columbia day follow immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of the Indian bill, and that we proceed now with the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. That will be agreeable to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of matters from the Committee on the District of Columbia which would be presented to-day shall follow the conclusion of the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. I call attention to the fact that an election case has been fixed for to-morrow, by the consent of the House, as I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. Notice was given; but no order was made, I believe.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not understand that there has been any order fixing that business for to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest that the election case, being privileged, could be called up at any time.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, notice only was given. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]? The Chair hears none.

REPRINT OF A BILL, ETC.

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 4566) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter, with the accompanying report thereon.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3962) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered on Friday last by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] reserved a point of order.

The amendment of Mr. HERMANN was as follows:

Add to the pending paragraph the following:

"Provided, That the lands now allotted to or which may be hereafter allotted to any Indians in severalty, under agreements already made, when such Indians, under the provisions of any existing law, have become or shall become entitled to the benefits of and subject to the laws of any State, and when such lands shall be embraced in and as a part of any county or town organization, so as to enjoy full and equal participation in the benefits of such local government, and when the Indians enjoy their equal privileges as citizens, shall be subject to State and local assessment and taxation, the same as any other lands similarly located in such State: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the sale or incumbrance of any such land on account of such assessment and taxation, or in any manner interfere with the trust in which such lands are held by the United States while such trust continues: And provided further, That during the continuance of said trust said taxes so assessed and levied shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to the county treasurer or other legally authorized officer of the county or municipality to which such taxes are payable, at such time as said taxes shall become due and payable: And also provided further, That said taxes shall only be paid on the receipt of the sworn statement of the county treasurer or other legally authorized officer of the county or municipality to which such taxes are payable, showing that such tax has been legally assessed and levied, and that said tax is then due and payable, accompanied by the certificate of the Secretary of the Interior that said lands are within the State and county described in said statement and that the lands therein described have been allotted in severalty or belong to Indian citizens of the United States, and that he is satisfied, after sufficient inquiry, that the assessment of the lands for taxation is a fair and reasonable one, and the taxes levied just and equitable, both independently and in proportion to the valuation and taxation of lands in the same county, town, or other municipal corporation: And provided further, That no moneys shall be so paid for road or highway taxes which by the laws of the State may be discharged by work, but the Indians owning such lands shall be required to so discharge such taxes: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied, and so certify, that the public expenditure of such taxes is fairly made to give the lands of such Indians their just share of benefit.

"SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act there shall be paid annually, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as shall be necessary to pay said taxes so certified under section 1 of this act."

Mr. SHERMAN. I am willing that the gentleman from Oregon should be heard on the question of order.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of the general allotment act, approved February 8, 1887, a major portion of all the lands in the Indian reservations have now been allotted in severalty among the Indians upon those reservations. In that act it is provided that all Indians accepting the benefits of the act shall be entitled to all rights and privileges of citizenship and shall be subject to all responsibilities as such. Under that act those Indians are entitled to the full benefits of the laws of the land, as much so as white citizens of the country.

It is also provided in that act that the title to the lands shall be held in trust by the United States for the period of twenty-five years after the approval of the selections in the allotment; that at the expiration of such period the lands shall be conveyed in fee by patent to the different Indians who are enjoying these allotments, and that the patents shall convey to the Indians a title discharged from the trust and free from all incumbrances. It is further provided that as to these Indians no State or Territory within which they may be situated shall deny to them the equal protection of the laws of such State or Territory.

The amendment I have offered provides that these lands, being now free from assessment and taxation, which can not be alienated or disposed of by the Indians separately, or by the tribes, or by the United States, shall be subject to assessment and taxation. At the present time, as I have stated, these Indians are entitled to all the rights and privileges of citizens. They have the full protection of the laws. In fact, the law of allotment, as I have stated, prohibits any State from passing any law which shall deny to these Indians the equal protection of the laws. They are therefore enjoying the privileges of citizens. Yet they are not subject to the responsibility of answering to the great law of assessment and taxation. It is proposed in this amendment that in the absence of any provision in the existing law, the United States shall answer to the State or Territory or to the local laws for the taxes which may become due under proper assessments upon these Indian lands. In other words, it is provided that the Government of the United States, standing in the relation of guardian of these Indians, holding their lands in trust for the period of twenty-five years, shall answer to the law in the matter of taxes upon the land in the same manner as if the Indians were paying this taxation to which all other citizens having the same property rights are subject.

It is deemed to be unjust to the State, as well as to the local bodies imposing taxation, that these Indians shall be entitled to the privilege of voting, that the State or the county shall be at the expense of establishing voting precincts, paying the cost of the canvassing boards, establishing justices' courts, compensating the justices, constables, etc., in execution of the law through the courts, and shall be put to the cost of establishing roadways under the laws of the Territory or State, appointing road supervisors, paying them for the duties performed; that schools shall be established, directors provided, that their compensation shall be paid from the Government Treasury out of funds derived from taxation on the property of the other citizens, while the property of the Indians shall escape entirely its just share of taxation although they are accorded all the privileges of the white people; that the criminal law shall be established and maintained throughout the State and all over this vast territory occupied by the Indians, and yet that they shall be exempt from the liabilities imposed on the other citizens while enjoying the complete protection of the law.

Mr. Chairman, it is certainly only just and proper to the taxpayers in those regions where these Indian allotments have been made that the Indians themselves, being the wards of the nation, shall bear their due share of the burdens which are imposed upon the other people of the country. For that reason I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order, but will allow the committee to act upon the amendment.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments in order to address myself to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

The question is one in which the people of my own State are greatly interested, and I do not want the amendment to be considered by the Committee of the Whole House with any prejudice against it for the reason that it has not been acted upon and reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. A bill was introduced by myself at the opening of this session of Congress, and the amendment offered is a copy of that bill. It was referred to a subcommittee, but the chairman of the subcommittee has necessarily been absent from the city, and we have been unable, therefore, to have the same considered and a report presented from the whole committee.

But, Mr. Chairman, the same bill embodied in this amendment was prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1892 and received the careful consideration of that officer as well as the then Secretary of the Interior. It was drawn by Commissioner Morgan and its passage recommended. It has received a favorable report from three different committees of the Senate, and we feel justified in urging its consideration on the part of the House at this time, though I feel like apologizing, as I have said, in bringing the question up without consideration first having been obtained of the subcommittee and the full Committee on Indian Affairs, with a recommendation for its passage. But for the reason I have stated, it was impossible. Nevertheless, I feel that this question should be considered on its merits. We recognize that it is subject to the objection which has been suggested that it is new legislation and not warranted by the rules. But if gentlemen of this committee are willing at this time to give careful and fair consideration to the merits of the amendment, we will be glad to be heard, and feel sure there will be no difficulty in satisfying the House of the importance and propriety of the legislation proposed. We feel, not only in justice to the Indians themselves but the white settlers among them, that the legislation should be promptly and favorably acted upon by the House.

At the same time I justify the offering of the amendment by the gentleman from Oregon at this time by the course the bill has heretofore taken, in that it has been reported favorably by three successive committees in the Senate, and has been pending for some time in that body on a favorable report from the Committee on Indian Affairs at the present session. I ask that the technical objections, therefore, be withdrawn and the bill considered on its merits; and I would be glad to submit to the Committee of the Whole a communication favorable to the passage of the bill in 1892 by the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Morgan. Although it is true the bill is objected to by the present Secretary of the Interior, yet he gives no reasons why it should not be passed, while on the other hand it meets the approval, and the hearty approval, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I take the liberty of reading an extract from his report upon House bill No. 285, of which this is a copy.

So far as the interests of the Indians are concerned, there can be no possible objection to the enactment of the proposed legislation. On the contrary, I believe it would result in more cordial relations between the Indians and their white neighbors.

The Commissioner in this report goes on to state that whether the burden that is now borne by the people of the State, in consequence of the allotment of these lands and the nonpayment of taxes by the Indians, should be shifted to the people of the United States is a question which seemed to him may be safely left to the discretion of Congress.

But I will not proceed to argue the bill on its merits, and content myself by hoping that the objection will be withdrawn and the amendment receive an honest and fair consideration as a part of this appropriation bill by the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to insist upon the point of order against my colleague and my friend from Oregon, but it seems to me that a law which is so radical ought not to be passed until it has been fully and fairly considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. Unfortunately it has not been brought to the attention of the full committee, sitting as such, and therefore with regret I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

CHIPPEWAS OF MINNESOTA, REIMBURSABLE.

Advance interest to the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota, as required by section 7 of "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the manner required by said act, reimbursable, $90,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and is in the interest of economy.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at the end of line 10, page 14, the following:

"And the duties imposed upon the three commissioners appointed under the provisions of the act of January 14, 1889, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be performed by one commissioner, to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

POTTAWATOMIES OF INDIANA AND MICHIGAN.

For this amount due certain Pottawatomie Indians of Indiana and Michigan, etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the second word in that paragraph should be "the" instead of "this." I refer to line 8, page 25. I ask the Clerk to make that correction.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made.
There was no objection.
The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEMINOLES.

For 5 per cent interest on $250,000, to be paid as annuity, per eighth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $12,500;
For 5 per cent interest on $250,000, to be paid as annuity (they having joined their brethren west), per eighth article of treaty of August 7, 1856, $12,500.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.
The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, in line 15, page 27, after the word "dollars," the following:
"Provided, That the sums of money mentioned in this and the preceding paragraph shall be paid to said Indians by an officer designated by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must reserve a point of order against that, that it changes existing law—the law as it exists in the treaty. Whatever money is paid must be paid only as the treaty provides, and I assume that this changes that, or my friend would not offer it.
Mr. FLYNN. I do not understand that it changes any treaty. In mentioning the Five Civilized Tribes the Seminoles are always included, although their treaties, their land tenure, and everything are different from the other four. The object of this amendment, briefly stated, is this: There are about 2,000 Seminole Indians. The chief is Governor Brown. The treasurer is Jackson Brown, his brother. There are but two stores in the Seminole Nation, both owned by the Browns. This money is paid to Jackson Brown, the treasurer, and the Indians never see a dollar of it, but the Browns issue to the Indians duebills, good for so much in goods at the Browns' stores. The Browns have absolute control not only over the property, but I may say over the lives of those Indians. The Indians must take Browns' duebills for the amount of money that the Government pays them in annuities. I think, in justice to the Indians, in fairness to them, this money should be paid by an officer designated by the Department, which will insure the Indians, instead of the storekeeper, getting all the money.
Mr. SHERMAN. Let me ask my friend, does not the treaty now provide how the money shall be paid?
Mr. FLYNN. No; it does not. The treaty provides that it shall be paid to the Indians. I want to provide how it shall be paid, by an officer of the Department, to insure the Indians obtaining the money, and not the storekeeper obtaining it.
Mr. SHERMAN. If that is all there is of it, I shall raise no point of order against it.
Mr. FLYNN. That is all there is of it.
Mr. LITTLE. I hope the chairman will withdraw the point of order. I think the amendment is in the proper direction.
Mr. SHERMAN. If that is all there is of it, I shall raise no point of order, Mr. Chairman.
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.
Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 22, where I desire to offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York desires unanimous consent to return to page 22 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, in line 9, page 22, after the word "Montana," the following:
"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to use the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes for the years 1895 and 1896 for the purchase of cattle for the Tongue River Agency."

Mr. CANNON. Let us have that amendment reported again.
Mr. SHERMAN. The matter has just this minute been called to my attention, that there is an unexpended balance. I regret to say that in the letter from the Department they do not say how much it is, but the Department asks authority to expend this unexpended balance in this way.
Mr. CANNON. Let us have the amendment read again.
Mr. SHERMAN. I can not give a satisfactory statement in regard to the matter, because I am not fully informed about it myself.
The amendment was again read.
Mr. CANNON. Then I will reserve the point of order, just far enough to find out what it is.
Mr. SHERMAN. This treaty provides nothing about furnishing so much money, but provides for furnishing flour, meat, clothing, and so forth, to those Indians; and, of course, in making the appropriation for that the sum is sometimes too much and sometimes too small, as it depends entirely upon the market value of the various articles which must be purchased. It seems that some amount is now on hand of this fund, and the Secretary asks permission, rather than return it to the Treasury, to expend it in this way. How much it is I do not know. I have not the figures before me. I have just this minute got the information.
Mr. CANNON. I will have to make the point of order. The gentleman himself does not fully understand it. I was at a loss to know whether this expenditure was to be made through an appropriation under the treaty, and especially I wanted to know if it was to be in so much money and so much subsistence. Now, then, if the subsistence was bought for less than the amount appropriated, why there is no reason on earth that I can see why the balance should not go into the Treasury. Otherwise, it is a mere gift to the Indians.
Mr. SHERMAN. Nothing but that, at all.
Mr. CANNON. And without law.
Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt it is subject to the point of order, if the gentleman insists on it.
Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order against the amendment, then.
Mr. SHERMAN. There is no doubt that it is subject to the point of order, and the point is well taken, if the gentleman insists upon it.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the consideration of the amendment I send up.

Amend by adding after the word "cents," in line 15, page 36, the following:
"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to retain and reserve a part of the interest money coming to the Indians on the Siletz Indian Reservation, in Oregon, not exceeding one-third of said interest for each year, and pay the same to the State and local authorities of the said State in lieu of taxation upon the lands allotted to said Indians, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, or as may be prescribed by law, to secure to the Indians the full enjoyment of the protection of the laws of said State and a just share of all benefits derived from said payment in lieu of taxes."

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to raise the point of order upon that, but will reserve it long enough to give my friend time to make a statement.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order on the amendment.
Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not new legislation, nor does it change existing law, nor does it provide for an appropriation. It is merely in aid of existing law. It is for the purpose of making clear by a legislative interpretation the meaning of the law which now prevails as to the enforcement of a treaty entered into between the Siletz Indians and the Government of the United States on October 31, 1892. This treaty provided that one-third of the interest due the Indians upon the deferred payments on the purchase of their lands shall be set apart each year by the Secretary of the Interior and shall be paid to the State and local authorities of the State of Oregon in lieu of taxation upon the lands allotted to said Indians. That is the situation. Now, when the treaty was entered into, the words—

As soon as the lands which have been allotted to the Indians on said Siletz Indian Reservation shall become subject and liable to taxation by the State of Oregon—

Were inserted in the treaty. Then the treaty proceeds:

The Secretary of the Interior may reserve a part of said interest money, etc.

The idea was on the part of the commissioners that when these lands were allotted to the Indians, and certificates of allotments were issued to them by the commissioners and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, that then the lands would become subject to taxation. Now, under that impression these words were inserted in the treaty, and to add further strength to that presumption the treaty proceeds to provide—

That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve a part of said interest money so coming to said Indians, not exceeding one-third thereof for each year.

Now, at the end of twenty-five years after the allotment, when the fee of these lands will pass by patent from the Government of the United States to these Indians, there would be no longer any interest paid to these Indians; all the deferred payments will have been paid to the Indians and there will be no further obligation on the part of the United States for the payment of interest or to pay the same to the local authorities in lieu of taxation upon lands allotted to such Indians. After the expiration of twenty-five years, when the fee would pass from the Government of the United States to the Indians, the lands would then under the general laws become subject to assessment and local taxation; so that the entire treaty shows upon its face the undoubted presumption that it was the intention of the parties who entered into it to provide that one-third of the interest due the Indians should be paid by the Secretary to the State and local authorities in lieu of taxes. But inasmuch as the words somehow or other were inserted in the treaty—

When the lands shall become subject and liable to taxation by the State of Oregon—

They are defined to mean that the lands are not subject to taxation until after the period of twenty-five years. In the meanwhile these Indians are subject to all the responsibilities imposed upon all citizens, because by the general terms of the law they are all made citizens of the United States; they are entitled to vote; they are entitled to all the usual privileges and immunities which all citizens of the country enjoy alike, and the local authorities respectfully certify to the Secretary of the Interior that they are no longer responsible for the care of those Indians under the law; that they can not extend to them the protection of the law, simply because the Indians themselves do not respond in proper taxation in return for the protection which is given them by the State and local authorities. Therefore, it is to cure that unfortunate condition of affairs that I now ask for the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must insist upon the point of order. It seems to me that there can be no question but that it should be sustained even upon the gentleman's own statement. He admits that what he proposes is a legislative interpretation of a treaty, and he desires by legislation to change the interpretation; which I imagine he can not do in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HERMANN. I suggest to my friend, as I know that he desires to treat this question fairly, that the treaty shows upon its face what the intention of the treaty-making parties was. Obviously it was the intention that one-third of this money should be held back by the Secretary and should be applied by the local authorities for the taxes due upon the land. Is there anything in the treaty which warrants the gentleman in disputing that interpretation?

Mr. SHERMAN. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that it is not our business to legislate in an appropriation bill as to what the provisions of a treaty mean. The treaty must speak for itself and the Secretary must interpret it, and we should not attempt to do so in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HERMANN. In answer to that I should say that the Secretary is in doubt with regard to his duty in the matter, because this particular clause of the treaty admits of two or three interpretations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish my friend to understand that I doubt the wisdom or propriety of what he suggests or anything of that kind. The point I make is that this is not a proper subject for legislation on an appropriation bill. The matter may be entirely proper, and it may be very desirable that there should be legislation such as he proposes, but it does seem to me that an appropriation bill is not the proper place for such legislation.

Mr. HERMANN. So long as the amendment is not obnoxious to the general rule against changing existing law on an appropriation bill, it occurs to me that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it did not change existing law perhaps it would not be; but I think it does change existing law. It attempts to change the interpretation of this treaty.

Mr. HERMANN. I think it is in aid of the existing law, but I submit the matter to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Sioux of Devils Lake, N. Dak., including pay of employees, and for the purchase of seeds, $10,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 40, strike out "$10,000," in line 11, and insert "$15,000; one-third of which shall be immediately available for the purchase of seed grain in the spring of 1896."

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. In connection with this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read by the Clerk a letter from the agent at the Devils Lake Agency, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEVILS LAKE AGENCY, Fort Totten, N. Dak., February 7, 1896.

Hon. N. M. JOHNSON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see by the papers that the Indian bill, as reported by the subcommittee, gives the Devils Lake Sioux Indians $10,000. I am very thankful for this, but I was very much in hopes that it would be made $15,000. If there is any band of Indians in the United States that need a large advance in their appropriation it is the Devils Lake Sioux.

I am very much pleased to report the success of these people during the past season, and which was only made possible by our efforts last winter, which resulted in the increase of their appropriation, a portion of which was made available for the purchase of seed during the spring of 1895, and from which they have raised upward of 65,000 bushels of wheat, 25,000 bushels of oats, and about as much barley.

This, of course, is a great help to them, but with the poor crops of the last few years they are in very poor circumstances still. Many of them who could had contracted debts in the past, thereby taking a good portion of their crops to pay them, and it is now a constant struggle with them to get along, even in a half-starved manner.

The subsistence we had to issue not being half enough for the old people, orphans, and those who have raised no crops, some ten or twelve farmers who had good prospects up to the middle of the season were entirely haled out, not having a vestige of anything left, having neither seed nor bread. These people can do nothing another year unless there is some way by which they can be furnished with seed the coming spring, and they must be assisted until they can raise something upon which to live. The harvesting machinery, plows, and harrows are nearly all worn out. It has taxed the farmers and other employees to the fullest extent the last season to keep them running and enable them to get along at all. Something must be done to alleviate these conditions or the Government can not expect much from them, and it can not be done on the small appropriations of the past.

It is a fact that since I have been in charge of this agency I have constantly been asking for means with which to assist these people, and then only partially to do what is desired of them by the Government, and while the Department has been as liberal as possible with the appropriations at its disposal, yet had it been a half or even a third more each year, the result would have been 100 per cent better. The paltry sum of two or three thousand dollars is too insignificant, when considered with the additional amount of good it would do, if judiciously expended, to be refused by the Committee on Appropriations or to be rejected on its passage.

It is an unwise economy that appropriates so insignificant a sum as to be nonproductive of a fair per cent in return, when but a small sum added would increase it a hundredfold.

It is human nature, where hunger and suffering exist, to make large sacrifices to allay it; much more so is it among the Indians, in spite of all the preventive safeguards that can be thrown around them.

If these people had the proportionate means at their disposal that many other bands of Indians have, or had they sufficient tools and implements to work to reasonable advantage, and sufficient stock that the yearly increase would furnish their meat supply, I would not hesitate to say that appeals for their support would have an end.

The facts I have set forth being so well known to all to whom this shall be addressed, I would earnestly ask and urge each to join hands with the other in the endeavor to have the appropriation for the Devils Lake Sioux raised to $15,000, and that $6,000 be made available in the coming spring, believing it to be for the best interests of the Government as well as for a poor and dependent people.

Very respectfully,

RALPH HALL,
United States Indian Agent.

To the Honorable SECRETARY OF INTERIOR, COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, UNITED STATES SENATORS, and MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I regret very much that I did not receive this letter in time to lay it before the Committee on Indian Affairs while the bill was under preparation, but I have done the best I could. I showed the letter to the chairman and he read it and received it very kindly, and I hope he will not object to this amendment, because he left on my mind the impression that he thought it was all right. I am sure that it is all right, and I believe this committee will take the same view. These Indians have within the last three years taken lands in severalty and have commenced farming, and they are doing very well considering all the circumstances. This is a matter that is easily understood. The amendment simply provides an additional $5,000 for the purchase of seed grain for this coming spring, and I hope the committee will grant it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota, I think, must have misunderstood the cause of my delight on seeing that letter. [Laughter.] It was probably due to the fact that this additional appropriation was asked for the purchase of seed. I was fearful that the people living at that delightful summer resort called Devil's Lake might be asking for an additional appropriation for fuel, but it seems not. [Laughter.] A year ago, Mr. Chairman, it was suggested that these Indians were in a deplorable condition, and the appropriation of $6,000 which had been made for the fiscal year 1895 was last year doubled, making it $12,000, several thousand dollars of which were made immediately available for the purchase of seed and, as my friend from North Dakota says, was used so successfully by the Indians that they raised over 100,000 bushels of grain.

Now, it does seem to me that we having assisted these Indians last year to an amount unusual in recent years, having furnished them with money to buy seed with which they raised over 100,000 bushels of grain, they ought not, in all fairness, to come back to Congress this year and ask an additional appropriation for this purpose. If the fact exists that they have disposed of their crop and have not any seed left, I shall not object to an amendment if the gentleman from North Dakota desires to offer it, providing that a portion of the $10,000 appropriated in this bill shall be made immediately available for the purchase of seed grain; but while I regret very much to oppose any amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota, because it would be a pleasure to be in favor of anything which he suggests, I can not in justice to the committee or to myself consent that this amendment be made increasing the appropriation $5,000. I will, as already suggested, accept an amendment providing that some portion of the $10,000 carried in the bill be made immediately available for this purpose, but I hope that the gentleman's proposition to increase the appropriation $5,000 will not prevail.

The question being taken the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 11, page 40, insert "of which sum $4,000 shall be immediately available."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Sioux, Medawakanton band, in Minnesota, $5,000.

Mr. KIEFER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, after "dollars," on page 40, line 13, by the following:

"Provided, That this sum of $5,000, so appropriated for support and civilization of Sioux, Medawakanton Band, in Minnesota, shall be divided and paid in a manner so that each member shall receive an equal and like amount as every other member, share and share alike per capita, and the amounts shall be paid in money and not in merchandise."

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that according to my information from that part of Minnesota where these Indians are, the merchandise distributed among them along the Minnesota and Mississippi rivers does not do them any good whatever. Instead of money with which they might meet their necessities, they receive, as I am informed, a few yards of calico, a few pounds of pork, some coffee and sugar, etc., nothing of a tangible character. All that they desire is that they shall receive their quota, share and share alike, in money, not in merchandise. They claim they can buy a great deal more of such articles as they, in their families, most need with their share when paid in money.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this amendment is subject to the point of order that it is new legislation. But apart from that, I doubt the propriety of the amendment. My understanding is that this band of Indians is a small band at any rate, and its members are somewhat scattered. It might not be possible for the Commissioner to carry out the provisions of the amendment. Hence, without regard to the point of order, I think the amendment ought not to prevail. But believing it to be liable to the point of order, that it is new legislation, I insist on that point.

Mr. KIEFER. One word more, Mr. Chairman, if you will allow me. When the officer of the Government passes along the line of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers, where most of these people reside, distributing this merchandise, it is not in many cases what the Indians want. They claim that if the money were given to them in place of the merchandise they could buy a great deal more than they receive from the Government agents. Many of these Indians follow the occupations of the whites, and when paid in cash can help themselves in a manner not otherwise possible. The man appointed to purchase the merchandise and make the distribution is generally a new man who does not understand properly the wants of the Indians, and therefore a great deal of dissatisfaction is caused.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington, including traveling expenses of agents at seven agencies, and support and civilization of Indians at Colville and Puyallup agencies, and for pay of employees, $14,000: Provided, That on and after the 1st day of December, 1896, next, the act or acts of the legislature of the State of Washington relative to the removal of the restrictions as to the sale of the allotted lands of the Puyallup Indians shall be, so far as the Congress and Government of the United States are concerned, in full force and effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending paragraph the following:

"For continuing the work of the Puyallup Indian commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1893 (26 Stat., 612), until said 1st day of December, 1896, to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands within the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees; and also that part of the agency tract exclusive of the burying ground not needed for school purposes, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said commission the sum of $4,000, to be available until expended, and to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract lands, as provided in said act."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in relation to this particular amendment that, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Interior, about $7,500 will, in his judgment, be required to continue the work of this commission. Three thousand five hundred dollars of this sum has been provided for in the urgent deficiency bill upon the report of the committee of conference on that bill; so that the $4,000 proposed to be appropriated by the amendment will make up the $7,500 required for this purpose. The statement which I made here the other day on this subject covered, I believe, the entire ground.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the proviso of the pending paragraph proposes to delegate to the State of Washington the power to change or supersede Federal statutes; and it proposes another innovation—that these Indians in the State of Washington shall be subject virtually to the laws of that State. This is an innovation upon the general policy with reference to the management of the Indians in the United States; and I think it improper. I therefore make the point of order upon this proviso on the ground that it is new legislation and not in order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes rather too late.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I insist that it comes too late.

Mr. KYLE. I was seeking the recognition of the Chair as soon as the paragraph was read.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman rose for that purpose——

Mr. KYLE. I did, sir. I was on the floor when the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] rose to offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in relation to the point of order I wish to say this: In the first place, a treaty was, of course, made with these Indians; and afterwards a commission was sent out to treat with them. This resulted in an allotment of the lands. There was, of course, the usual supervision provided for. These Indians were not permitted to sell their lands during a period of twenty years unless with the consent of Congress. By an appropriation act passed during the Fifty-third Congress that time was cut down to ten years, which term, of course, is now running.

The whole subject has been left as the Indian appropriation bill of the Fifty-third Congress left it. Under the provisions of that act the commissioners were appointed; they went out and obtained the consent of the Indians for the sale of these lands—the allotted lands and the agency tract, as provided for in that bill. They have been proceeding, doubtless, up to the present time.

Now, then, the conveyance to the Indians by the United States provides that they shall not have the right to sell the lands without first obtaining the consent of Congress—that is, independently and of their own action. The legislature of the State of Washington, in pursuance of that provision, has passed an act—the first session of the State Legislature—so far as they could removing the restrictions from the sale of the land, but the whole thing depends upon the consent of Congress, and, as I stated, the whole matter remains as it was left by the appropriation bill to which I have referred.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is well taken. I do not believe that the existing law is changed under the provision inserted here, and I certainly hope, in the interests of justice to these people, and in the interest of all concerned, that the point of order will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Washington if he has a copy of the act of 1893 to which he refers?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have the act and will furnish it to the Chair.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Chairman, I have the act before me, if the Chair desires to look at it.

In reference to the question now pending, I do not propose directly to discuss the point of order, but I do propose, with the consent of the Chair, to some extent to discuss the merits of the proposition as bearing upon the point of order.

Now, it seems that years and years ago the United States made a treaty with the Puyallup Indians and allotted their lands to them in severalty, and provided also that the lands should not be alienated for a period of twenty years. The Fifty-second Congress, by an act approved on March 3, 1893, provided for a commission to go out there and to sell what is known as the agency tract, by the consent of the Indians, which tract is now in the edge of the town of Tacoma, and also to sell such portions of each of the allotted tracts as they might obtain the consent of the Indians to sell. They assessed the agency tract, of 600 acres, at $212,000; and in addition to that the Indians have left 18,000 acres of land, worth probably from fifty to one hundred dollars an acre.

Now, this commission has gone ahead and sold some of the lands and it has valued all of the agency lands. It seems to be rather an expensive experiment and it is thought desirable not to continue the commission longer than the 1st of December of this year or the 1st of January of next year. The law says that no such land shall be alienated for a period of ten years; but the gentleman from Washington comes in with a proposition that they shall be placed under the laws of the State of Washington, which means that they may be permitted to alienate and sell the lands at once or at any time. In other words, that an Indian may sell his land just like a white man.

Well, if the Indians out there are like the Indians in other places, and the white people out there are like white people in other places, the whites will soon have all of the land and the Indians will have neither lands nor money.

In the first place, it seems to me to be subject to the rule of order, inasmuch as it is evidently new legislation. It repeals the clause which forbids the Indians to alienate the lands for ten years and allows it to be done at once, and then it places the Indians under the laws of the State of Washington.

Now, the Congress of the United States can declare an Indian to be a citizen; but neither Congress nor the Supreme Court can make him capable of exercising the rights and duties of citizenship, and if it is done it is contrary to our Indian policy, contrary to our theory in reference to them, and removes the protection of the Federal Government by allowing the Indians to sell their lands as they please, the final result of which, and the rapid result, will be that they will have no lands at all and no money and must be supported by the Government of the United States.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am exceedingly surprised at the remarks which have just been made by the gentleman from Texas, and especially by a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs who voted on this proposition in the committee when it was pending there and by which it was put into this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No; I must decline to be interrupted. I can not conceive of such a change of mind. This matter has been repeatedly considered in the Committee of the Whole and as frequently explained to the members of the House.

Mr. PENDLETON. I only desire to say this——

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I prefer to proceed without interruption.

Mr. PENDLETON. Only to say that I voted against it in committee.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And I did not expect a member of the committee to take that stand.

Now, the condition of these Indians has been stated over and over again in this House. They are citizens of the State of Washington; they are voters in that State, and are enjoying all the rights and privileges of citizens. It has been stated by the gentleman who just took his seat that if these lands were permitted to be sold the Indians would be deprived of the means of support and become a charge upon the Government of the United States. That statement, Mr. Chairman, is absolutely without foundation, and has no basis in fact. On the contrary, they are well able to care for themselves. They are thrifty citizens of my own State and my own Congressional district, and they are a portion of my constituents, and I am here to represent them on the floor of this House. They are educated and intelligent people, just as are the constituents who have supported my colleague on the committee who has just taken his seat, and are as capable of supporting themselves and transacting their own business in an intelligent manner as are his constituents.

So far as the point of order is concerned, the whole subject, as I stated at the outset, is left wholly under the provisions of the former appropriation bill, because that bill took the subject of that limitation out of the law (which provided for the limitation to which reference has been made) and cut it down to this length of time.

Now, the gentleman says that an unusual thing would be done here and in this instance if these Indians were left to the government of the State of Washington. Why, they enjoy their property rights, the right of liberty and the pursuit of happiness under the Constitution of the United States and that of the State of Washington. Every right they have is guaranteed to them under the laws of that State, and they are protected in the enjoyment of every privilege under the laws of that State. The law provides that these lands may be sold whenever the consent of the Congress of the United States is obtained. Congress has from time to time made these provisions, as I have stated, in appropriation bills.

Now, all I am asking here is that these people shall be treated as they are entitled to be treated in the legislation of this Congress. This matter has been up now three times, and I do not feel the subject has been treated as it should have been with relation to the Puyallups by this House in the former Congress. I came here with confidence this time, now that I have the support of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and without any protest, that the rights of these people would at last meet with just and proper recognition. There are only about 600 of them. Their reservation, as has been stated here, lies up against the limits of the city of Tacoma, and what I desire is that this commission business should at some time in the future be brought to a close. Why, there has been about $40,000 already appropriated for the carrying on of the work of this commission, which is a sum greater than the reservation lands proper would at this time bring if they were put upon sale, and this commission is going on from day to day and from week to week and, as I said before, eating the very heart out of the values of these lands, because the appropriation bill which provided for the appointment of this commission also provided that the pay of these commissioners should be taken out of the proceeds of the sale of the Indian lands proper and the allotted lands.

Mr. Holman in the last Congress stated to his associates here on the floor that that was unjust and wrong, and that these people should not forever go on eating out the substance of these values by the eternal carrying on of this commission. Now, the Secretary of the Interior, as I stated the other day, told me that he believed that between now and the 1st day of next December all the work would be done that the commission could be expected to transact in behalf of the sale of these lands. That is the attitude of the proposition as it is here before the House; and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that any gentleman who wants to see right and justice prevail, as between man and man, between this Government and these Indians, should at once and without hesitation withdraw the point of order that he has made. Suppose this matter was at the very door of the gentleman's home, situated the way these people are. I should appeal to him then with confidence for his most cheerful cooperation. It is unjust and wrong that the point of order should be made here, it seems to me, with all due respect to the gentleman who made the point. I do not believe that the point of order has any foundation to stand upon, and it seems to me I have every reason to expect under all the circumstances that the point of order will be overruled by the Chair.

Mr. KYLE and Mr. PENDLETON addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE] will certainly do me the justice to acknowledge that as a member of his committee I voted against that proposition.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Well, I do not know that. I supposed every member of the committee voted with me. There was no protest in the committee against the action of the committee.

Mr. PENDLETON. I certainly did not vote for it. Now, Mr. Chairman, this commission has been expensive, as the gentleman states. We all agree to that, and we are perfectly willing to terminate the commission and fix a date at which they shall cease to exercise their functions and when there shall be no further expense. But we can do that without placing these Indians and the Indian lands beyond the protection of the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the proviso in the bill clearly changes existing law, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to ask unanimous consent to recur to the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, at a later time during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unanimous consent will be asked to recur to this paragraph at a later period.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing to do that; but I want, in line 5 of page 43, to move to strike out the word "fourteen" and insert the word "five." I want to see if I understand about it. I will ask the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 43, strike out the word "fourteen" and insert the word "five."

Mr. CANNON. I am under the impression that this is a very valuable tract of land which these Indians have near the city of Tacoma. Am I correct about that?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, there are less than 500 of these Indians all told, I believe?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Something over 600, I suppose.

Mr. CANNON. So there are of them between 500 and 600 men, women, and children?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This embraces both the Colville and the Puyallup Indians. Those Colvilles are 500 miles away from the others.

Mr. CANNON. Those residing on the Colville Agency are on the other side of the mountains?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. How much of this $14,000 is for the Colvilles, and how much is for the Puyallups?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I will state about that in a moment.

Mr. HYDE. It is just a lump sum paid together.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Department divides it up in such a manner as it considers wise.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; there are 500 or 600 Puyallups; how many Colvilles?

Mr. HYDE. I think about 3,000.

Mr. CANNON. That is, men, women, and children?

Mr. HYDE. They are 500 miles away, I suppose, on the reservation.

Mr. CANNON. Is it a valuable reservation?

Mr. HYDE. It is rather valuable; a general law has been passed for opening the northern part and the allotment of the lands in severalty and to make provision for those Indians who do not desire to move to the southern part.

Mr. CANNON. Are they well off?

Mr. HYDE. They are wild Indians.

Mr. CANNON. Are they suffering?

Mr. HYDE. They are farming and all that sort of thing.

Mr. CANNON. Then they are not suffering for something to eat and to wear. What I want to get at is this; and I will now go back to the Puyallups: How much is there in that Puyallup Reservation?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Eighteen thousand acres in the allotted lands and 650 acres on the reservation tract.

Mr. CANNON. Eighteen thousand acres besides 600 acres in the agency tract?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. About how much is it worth in value?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would not undertake to state.

Mr. CANNON. About $50 an acre?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. A great deal of it would not bring over $25 an acre to-day.

Mr. CANNON. Well, can not you give us the rate as to that portion of it that is platted, which is adjacent to the city? Is it fair to say that it is worth $50 an acre?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not think it would be fair to put that value upon it at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. What I object to is that here are two Indian tribes grouped together—the Colvilles and the Puyallups—500 miles apart and a lump appropriation made, not under any treaty, but a mere gift for the support and civilization of these two tribes of Indians. Now, I listened with great interest to the earnest remarks, and I have no doubt correct statement, of the gentleman from Washington about the Puyallups, namely, first, that allotments have been made to them in severalty; second, that they were citizens, and third, they are intelligent.

Now, I am perfectly willing to put them upon all fours with those we appropriate for that need assistance; but here we have them with 18,000 acres of valuable reservation in the addition to the city of Tacoma, and it does seem to me, as we are not bound under any treaty to give them one cent, and by this means we are taxing the whole people, a portion of whom are in worse condition than these Puyallups, I mean materially, so far as their property is concerned, it ought not to be necessary to give them support.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me to interrupt him, I have the information right here.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to have it read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I find from a note in the Book of Estimates that it goes to several of the tribes in the State of Washington. To the Colvilles, $5,550; Nisqually, $5,500; Neah Bay, $1,000; Yakama, $1,000; S'Kokomish, $1,000; Tulalip, $1,000; and Quinaielt, $1,000, and part to the Puyallups.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if the gentleman is satisfied from the manner in which this appropriation is made that no part of this gift is to those Indians that do not need it, why, of course, my criticism is ended.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I have elicited the information I desired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad that the gentleman has brought it out, because I desire that the committee should fully understand what it was.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman is further satisfied that these Indians, to whom it goes under the policy of caring for the wards of the nation, are fully entitled to relief——

Mr. SHERMAN. I am.

Mr. CANNON. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

To pay balance due the commission appointed under act approved March 2, 1889, for per diem and expenses, as follows: Alfred M. Wilson, $1,245; Warren G. Sayre, $1,245; David M. Jerome, $1,245, commissioners; and Charles S. King, secretary, $702; in all, $4,437.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon that paragraph, from line 16 to line 24, inclusive, on page 43. There is no estimate for it, first, and second, it is a mere claim, I submit.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is more than a claim.

Mr. CANNON. If it is more than a claim, then it has no place upon this bill, because under Rule XI, if I recollect the number right, all matters of deficiency go to another committee. If it is a claim, it has no status. So far as it is not authorized by law it has no status; and if it has any status it is a deficiency, and the deficiency bill, under the rules of the House, ought to carry it. In any event, it seems to be subject to the point of order. I made it in no captious spirit at all, but for the reason, if, as I suspect, it is a claim, it is a bad precedent; and if it were allowed to go on the bill we would be subject to criticism for refusing to put claims generally upon appropriation bills. If you do it in one instance, why, then, you should do it in another. We would be in the position of passing claims on appropriation bills. But from either standpoint, it seems to me, it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] to explain this provision, as the amendment was his, and he understands the matter more fully than I do.

Mr. LITTLE. I yield to my colleague [Mr. DINSMORE], who has the papers relating to the matter in his possession.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the committee with reference to this item that it is not a claim, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], but is properly a deficiency. The amendment is to provide for the payment of the balance of compensation due to three commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1889, for the purpose of purchasing lands from the Indians. That commission was created by law to expire upon an order of dissolution to be made by the Secretary of the Interior whenever, in his judgment, there was no further necessity for the services of the commissioners. The order for dissolution was made, and the dissolution took place in November. The appropriation for the pay of the commissioners expired on the 16th of August prior thereto, but they continued in the service up to November.

Their compensation had been fixed by the Secretary of the Interior at the time the commission was created; they were paid at that rate up to August, and this item for the balance due them is estimated upon the same basis. That is all there is of the item. It is to pay these commissioners the balance of their compensation which has not been provided for by Congress, and it is calculated at the rate at which they were compensated during the period for which they were paid. This commission was organized under a law which provided that not more than two members of the commission should be of one political party, and was constituted with Mr. Jerome, of Indiana, and Governor Sayre, of Michigan, as the two Republicans, and Mr. Wilson, of Arkansas, as the Democrat. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs corroborating the statements I have made and giving a history of the matter, and I should be glad to submit the letter to any gentleman who desires to see it. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will not insist on the point of order, because this is an eminently just item, in accordance with law, and based upon the precedent which has been established as to the compensation of these commissioners by an order of the Secretary of the Interior. I may add that the omission to make provision for this item in the last Congress was due to an oversight, not of the parties themselves, but to the failure of any member of Congress to bring it before the committee.

Mr. CANNON. How does the gentleman explain the fact that there is no estimate for this item?

Mr. STEELE. I can explain that if the gentleman will permit me. The members of the commission found in this matter that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." They depended upon the treasurer of the commission to prepare an estimate for the amount, but the treasurer thought that the Indian Department would submit an estimate, so it was not done by either, and when application was made for the money with which to pay the commissioners it was found that no estimate had been made and that the fault lay with the treasurer of the commission. Now they come to Congress and make their claim, and the Secretary of the Interior has stated in my presence to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that it is a just claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. CANNON. If anybody here can state, in the absence of an estimate, that this money is really due to these men under the law for service performed, and that he has knowledge in the premises, I will withdraw my point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of the Interior so stated to me in the presence of the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. STEELE.

Mr. DINSMORE. I have a letter from the Secretary which gives the date of the appointment of these commissioners and sets forth the facts in the case, and I should be pleased to read it.

Mr. CANNON. Let the gentleman put it in the RECORD.

Mr. DINSMORE. Well, I state that there is no doubt that these gentlemen rendered service under the orders of the Government up to November; that they did not receive compensation beyond the 16th of August preceding, and that this item provides only for the compensation that is due them from August up to the subsequent November, when the commission was dissolved.

Mr. CANNON. And that their services were necessary to close up the business of their commission?

Mr. DINSMORE. Well, I would not like to say of my personal knowledge that their services were necessary; but I say this, that they were appointed under the law, and that on the 16th of August, when their compensation ceased, their services had not ended, but that they went on thereafter in discharge of their duties and made their report to the Interior Department, and that the commission was dissolved in the ensuing November, and at all times during the interim were subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose you put that letter of the Secretary in the RECORD.

Mr. DINSMORE. I will insert in the RECORD the letter to Mr. Wilson advising him of his appointment and the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs giving the facts. The Secretary's letter to me merely transmits the letter of Commissioner Browning.

They are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 30, 1889.

SIR: The President having appointed you one of the commissioners provided for by the fourteenth section of the Indian appropriation act of March 2, 1889, "to negotiate with the Cherokee Indians and with all other Indians owning or claiming lands lying west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude in the Indian Territory for the cession to the United States of all their title, claim, or interest of every kind or character in and to said lands," you will please report in person to the Department in order that you may receive the necessary instructions for conducting the negotiations provided for.

It is important that the commission enter upon its duties as early as practicable.

Each of the commissioners will be allowed his railroad fare and transportation expenses and $5 per diem during the time of actual service in lieu of all other personal expenses and will be allowed a compensation at the rate of $10 per diem during the time of his actual service.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

Hon. ALFRED M. WILSON,
Fayetteville, Ark.

Hon. George D. Robinson, of Chicopee, Mass., has been by the President designated chairman.

—

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 31, 1896.

SIR: I am in receipt of a memorandum, without date, from Hon. HUGH A. DINSMORE, inclosing a letter to him from Mr. A. M. Wilson, a member of the late Cherokee commission, so called, and asking for information as follows:

First. As to the order fixing the compensation of the commissioners.
Second. As to when the commission was dissolved.
Third. As to when payment was stopped.
Fourth. As to when the last report from the commission was filed.

In reply I have the honor to state:

First. That there is no record in this office touching any order from the Secretary of the Interior or the President, fixing the compensation of said commission. I am informally advised, however, that the compensation was fixed at $10 per diem, and $5 per diem in lieu of all personal expenses, and, in addition, to railroad transportation, by the Secretary of the Interior, in a letter of March 30, 1889, to Otis Humphries, which is of record in the Indian division of the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Second. The records of this office show that the commission was dissolved by order of the Secretary of the Interior dated November 7, 1893, as follows:

"Upon your recommendation of the 3d instant, by direction of the President, the commission to negotiate with the Cherokees and other Indians for the cession to the United States of certain lands, as provided in section 14 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, the membership thereof being David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, is hereby dissolved."

By letters of November 15, 1893, this order of dissolution was transmitted by me to the various members of the commission.

Third. It appears from the records of this office that the commissioners were paid to and including the 16th day of August, 1893.

Fourth. It also appears from the records of this office that the last report of the commissioners was dated August 21, 1893.

I have the honor to inclose Mr. DINSMORE'S memorandum, with inclosures, and recommend that the information herein contained as to the order fixing the pay of the commission be verified from the records of the Department, and that Mr. DINSMORE be furnished with a copy thereof, which is inclosed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The Honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. STEELE. I have the letter, and will see that it is inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. STEELE subsequently said: In my remarks upon one of the items of this bill a while ago I stated that I would insert in the RECORD a letter which I had in my desk. In looking for that letter I find it has been misplaced; but I have telephoned to the Secretary of the Interior, whose secretary promises me that a copy of the letter shall be sent to my hotel this evening. If I receive it there I will publish it with my remarks. I make this statement in justice to myself.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 5, 1891.

SIR: My attention has been called to certain suspensions in the accounts of Mr. C. S. King, disbursing officer of the Cherokee commission, on account of services claimed by said commission and its secretary and disbursing officer while not in the field.

By Department letters of March 30, 1889, addressed to Hon. Alfred M. Wilson of the said commission, and to the other commissioners then in the service, the compensation of the commissioners was fixed as follows:

"Each of the commissioners will be allowed his railroad fare and transportation expenses, and $5 per diem during the time of actual service, in lieu of all other personal expenses, and will be allowed a compensation at the rate of $10 per diem during the time of his actual services."

In view of the statement made to me that the commission, as it now exists, gives its whole time to the duty required by law of it, I am of the opinion that the services of the commissioners and the secretary and disbursing officer of said commission are continuous from the dates of their several appointments and that they are entitled to their compensation and per diem for each and every day while in the service, and I direct the settlement of their accounts upon this basis.

The affidavit required by regulations to cover traveling and incidental expenses of this commission and its secretary and other commissions appointed by the President or the Secretary of the Interior for extraordinary service will not be required; such claims will be allowed upon the certificate on honor as to the correctness of same.

Authority is also granted the disbursing officer of this commission to pay employees on vouchers instead of quarterly pay rolls, these vouchers to be approved by the commissioners and certified to on honor by the disbursing officer as to the correctness of the same.

The commissioners will be allowed to choose the routes of travel as best adapted to the proper conduct of their business, and their traveling expenses should be settled upon their certificate that such expenses are or were for the best interests of the service. Their absence for so much of the time from places where oaths in due form can be administered is deemed sufficient reason for these exceptions.

A copy of this communication has been furnished to the chairman of the Cherokee commission.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

—

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 24, 1890.

Mr. CHARLES S. KING, of Guthrie, Okla.

DEAR SIR: You are hereby appointed and designated to act and serve as secretary and special disbursing agent of the commission appointed by the President under the fourteenth section of the Indian appropriation act of March 2, 1889, "to negotiate with the Cherokee Indians and with other Indians owning or claiming lands lying west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude in the Indian Territory for the cession to the United States of all their title, claim, or interest of every kind or character in and to said lands," and as such you will be paid a compensation of $9 while actually employed, which shall include your subsistence expenses, but you will be allowed your railroad fare and other transportation expenses in addition to your compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I renew the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DINSMORE. I hope my friend will not insist upon the point of order. This amendment is evidently just.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I withdraw the point.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert in line 24, page 43, the following:

"That the sum of $8,647, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury or hereafter to come into the Treasury to the credit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the services and expenses of former delegates of said Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians who have visited Washington on the business of the band, and to pay the debts of the band: Provided, That no portion of said appropriation shall be paid for the debts of said band or expenses of delegates until the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior have approved of the same."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order on that amendment until I hear something more about it. I have not yet even ascertained who offers it.

Mr. BROWN. I have offered the amendment, Mr. Chairman. The facts in regard to the matter are these: Some time prior to the year 1885 the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians became indebted to certain parties living within the boundary of their tribe for expenses incurred on account of delegates coming to Washington to attend to business of the band and for certain other matters. Now, by the act of March 3, 1885, Congress appropriated out of the money of this band of Indians $4,000 to go toward the discharge of this indebtedness. The money was not to be paid, however, until it had been ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior that these debts were just and bona fide claims against the band. On investigation it was found that these debts, instead of amounting to $4,000, amounted to over $12,000; so a certain pro rata or percentage was paid on each claim against the band. This amendment proposes simply to appropriate out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to this band money enough to discharge the balance of the indebtedness.

I have here a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which the facts as I have given them are stated; and I have also a letter of Mr. Julius L. Holmes, United States Indian agent, making a similar statement of facts, and saying that these debts are honest and bona fide claims against the band and ought to be paid.

Besides, the amendment itself expressly provides that no part of the money shall be paid out until the indebtedness claimed has been passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The amendment appropriates no money out of the Treasury belonging to the Government; it simply appropriates out of money now or hereafter in the Treasury belonging to this band and not otherwise appropriated $8,000, to pay this balance of indebtedness when it is ascertained to be just.

Mr. PEARSON. I wish to inquire how and for what these debts were originally incurred?

Mr. BROWN. Most of the indebtedness was, I think, as the act of 1885 says, on account of the expenses of delegates of the Eastern band of Cherokees who visited the city of Washington on business of the band, and also to pay the debts of the band.

Mr. PEARSON. Does the gentleman state that there was an indebtedness of $12,000 on account of certain commissioners or delegates coming from North Carolina to Washington?

Mr. BROWN. I do not know how much of the $12,000 was on account of the expenses of the delegates of that band who visited Washington, but I say that a portion of the indebtedness was on account of such expenses. As to the other part of the indebtedness, I am not prepared to say on what account it was contracted.

Let me repeat, the amendment itself provides that no part of this money shall be paid until the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have approved the claim—until those officers have ascertained that the money is due. As a matter of fact, this indebtedness has already been passed on by the Secretary of the Interior; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his letter to me, says that the indebtedness is just and bona fide and ought to be paid.

Mr. PEARSON. Just one question further: Does the Eastern band of Cherokees recognize this indebtedness and wish this amount to be paid?

Mr. BROWN. In a letter dated July 24, 1885, Mr. Julius L. Holmes, United States Indian agent, says:

All the accounts included in class 1—

That is the indebtedness I have been speaking of—

are just and correct, having been approved by the band in council assembled.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the amendment is amenable to the point of order, and I insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read down to the following paragraph:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase the title of the Ogden Land Company, so called, to the lands within the Allegany and Cattaraugus Indian reservations in the State of New York, at the rate of $5 per acre, for which purpose a sufficient sum be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, payment to be made to said company or its legal representative upon the execution of a proper deed or deeds of conveyance to the United States of all right, title, and interest of said company in and to the lands aforesaid.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph which the Clerk has now reached, in regard to the Ogden Land Company, be passed over temporarily. It relates to a matter in the district of my colleague [Mr. HOOKER], who has been out of the city, and who, returning, has been delayed on the railroad.

Mr. PITNEY. I wish to make a point of order on this paragraph. If the paragraph be reserved, let it be understood that my point of order is pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the first paragraph on page 45 of the bill be passed over temporarily with a point of order reserved by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend by inserting, after line 11, on page 45, the paragraph which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reimburse, upon the presentation of proper evidence, out of any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the support of Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, the Rev. E. Ashley, of Cheyenne River Agency, S. Dak., for money expended by him in the employment of counsel to defend seven Indian policemen of said agency charged with the crime of murder: Provided, That not more than $700 be used for this purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless some member desires an explanation of the amendment, I will not occupy time upon it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the expense of the preparation of a digest, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of the decisions of the courts and the Interior Department, and the opinions of the Attorney-General relating to Indian affairs, $3,000.

Mr. PICKLER. I move, pro forma, to amend by striking out the last word. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee by whom this digest is to be prepared.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is to be prepared in the Indian Office, under the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PICKLER. Can he do this work with the force that he has?

Mr. SHERMAN. So he says. It will be done in some shape or other. I do not know exactly how.

Mr. PICKLER. I did not know whether it was intended to employ a special officer upon this work.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I remember correctly the statement made to me, some gentleman now in the Indian Office has been at work upon this compilation outside of office hours for some time; and, if I recollect aright, has expended a considerable sum of money—I think it was stated as $2,000—in the purchase of special books necessary in the compilation of this digest. The work thus far has all been done outside of office hours, and it will be so done hereafter.

Mr. PICKLER. The work will be done under the direction of the Commissioner?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and of lands to be allotted to Indians, and to make allotments in severalty, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to follow at the end of line 25, on this page.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of line 25, page 45, as follows:
"To reimburse George T. Simpson and Louis Shaw for money expended by them in the survey of the Grand Portage Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, the sum of $900."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order until the gentleman from Minnesota has been heard, if he wishes to be heard, upon the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have just offered appropriates the same amount as is contemplated by the bill which the Committee on Indian Affairs has already considered and reported favorably within the last week.

I ask now that it be made a part of the pending bill at this time, for the reason that the money has been due to these men for some time, having been expended by them, and should be paid, and paid promptly.

If the chairman of the committee desires any further statement in regard to the merits of the claim, I will be glad to make it. I would say that a large part of it has been favorably passed upon by the surveyor-general of our State, also by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and by the Second Auditor of the Treasury. It was rejected by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury for the reason that the amount claimed is due under a supplemental contract—that is to say, a contract made subsequent to the original contract for surveying the reservation—and the Second Comptroller held that the heads of the Departments could not, by a subsequent agreement, change the obligation of the Government as specified in the original contract, and for that reason he rejected the claim.

But I would like to read, from a statement in his letter rejecting the claim, these words:

In the consideration of this case this office does not undertake to say, nor is its action to be understood as deciding, that the services rendered by these contractors were not reasonably worth all that is claimed. The question of what is the reasonable value of the services rendered has not been considered.

He then goes on to say that the services were rendered and that it seems to be a proper question for the consideration of the legislative power, for he says:

The remedy does not appear to lie with the accounting officers of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amount specified in the original contract was found to be inadequate to pay the amount necessarily expended in making the survey. These contractors were driven out of the reservation on account of the plague of flies and insects, which became so annoying during the time this work was in progress that no man could possibly remain on the reservation, and therefore they were compelled to temporarily abandon the work. They went back in the fall, but owing to the peculiar topographical conditions and other obstacles which neither party to the contract could foresee, it was impossible for them to continue the work on the terms of the original contract, and they were about to abandon the contract entirely when the surveyor-general, acting in behalf of the Government, after a thorough and careful investigation of the facts, found that the work could not be done by anybody for the contract price, and he recommended an increase of the compensation fixed by the contract. The recommendation of the surveyor-general was approved by the Department of the Interior, and the approval was communicated to the contractors, who, on the strength of the promises made to them of an increase of the allowance for the work to be done, went back on the reservation and completed it. Their work was approved by Government officials.

The amendment simply proposes to pay them the amount actually expended in doing this work; they get nothing whatever for their services. I have here the verified statement of the parties showing in detail the amount actually expended, which was presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and which was carefully considered by that committee and on which they based the approval of the bill favorably reported.

I hope the gentleman, therefore, will withdraw the point of order, inasmuch as the work has been done, and faithfully done, and also in view of the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs in regard to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, after the gentleman's statement, and in view of the fact which he has last stated, I will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. For just a moment I will renew the point of order. This is a claim, pure and simple.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like the gentleman to first state the grounds of his objection.

Mr. CANNON. My objection is this—and I make it with great hesitation—that this is a claim, pure and simple, and that the Committee on Indian Affairs never rightfully had jurisdiction of it. It is like a hundred thousand other claims. It is most ungracious to make points of order on them. There are not sixty minutes of any day but what I have to say, when gentlemen coming to me wanting this, that, and the other thing put into appropriation bills, that claims can not go on general appropriation bills.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that this is a claim authorized by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It was incurred in making a survey of an Indian reservation, and if the Committee on Indian Affairs is not the proper committee and does not have jurisdiction it is difficult to tell where it should go.

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt it is a just claim, from what the gentleman says.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been approved by a committee of this House after the most careful consideration.

Mr. CANNON. There are hundreds and thousands of other just claims. I am only objecting to making a general appropriation bill a claim bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not proposed to make the Indian appropriation bill a claim bill. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought the gentleman was going to withdraw the point.

Mr. CANNON. Even though it appears to be ungracious, I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For survey and subdivision of the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, and of lands to be allotted to the Indians thereon, $10,000, to be immediately available from the proceeds of lands of said reservation when sold.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, in line 4 of page 46, after the word "available," there is a misprint. The words "and to be reimbursable" should be inserted there.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to negotiate with any Indians for the surrender of any portion of their respective reservations, or for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress, $5,000.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against this paragraph, that it is new legislation. There is no statute which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with any Indians for the surrender of all or any portion of their lands, and this, if enacted into law, would give him that power.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I can not contend that the point of order is not well taken, but I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it. I think the provision is a wise and just one, and for the betterment of the service. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order. Of course I must admit, if he insists upon it, that the point of order is well taken, but I hope that he will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior Department be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust, settle, and pay, upon the presentation of sworn and competent evidence, out of any unexpended balance of the appropriations for the support of the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., for the fiscal years 1894, 1895, and 1896, the claims of all persons, firms, and corporations who furnished goods and supplies for the Indian Industrial School at Genoa, Nebr., during the incumbency of Horace R. Chase, superintendent of said school, which have not already been allowed and adjusted: Provided, That the sum so expended shall not exceed the sum of $8,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, to that paragraph I submit the point of order that it is an appropriation not authorized by law, and is legislation.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Chairman, the Indian industrial school situated at Genoa, Nebr., is in the county in which I reside. The paragraph just read does not provide for an appropriation of any kind, but provides that any unexpended balance of appropriations in 1894, 1895, or 1896 may be applied in the payment of claims for supplies furnished this institution in 1888, 1889, and 1890. During the incumbency of one Horace R. Chase, superintendent of this institution, these supplies were furnished, and by reason of a misappropriation of funds by the superintendent of this college the claimants have never been paid. The paragraph provides that any unexpended balance of these years, not exceeding in amount $8,000, may be applied to pay claimants who furnished supplies for this Indian school. Mr. Chairman, I ask at this time to have the Clerk read the names and amounts of the claims for supplies furnished to this institution in 1888, 1889, and 1890, and for which the unexpended balance of appropriations already made are asked to be applied in liquidation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Claims for sundry supplies furnished the Indian industrial school, Genoa, Nebr., in 1888, 1889, and 1890, during the incumbency of Horace R. Chase, superintendent, with action thereon by the Auditor of the Interior Department.

Claimant.	Amount.	Amount allowed.	Amount disallowed.
A. Spear & Co	$640.29		$640.29
Thos. Sexton & Co	24.70		24.70
Osborne & Bros	895.10		895.10
John Hughes	66.75		66.75
Geo. M. Baer	19.70		19.70
Chas. Miller	29.00		29.00
Pacific Lumber Co	812.29		812.29
Nelse J. Skoog	400.31		400.31
McFayden & Co	301.12		301.12
A. B. Ramey & Son	101.67		101.67
Fairchild & Co	68.15	$21.00	47.15
J. H. Haber	17.40		17.40
H. E. Adams	8.50	1.75	6.75
H. E. Bragg & Co	199.20		199.20
William Ames	270.27		270.27
Jno. M. Travis	8.75		8.75
A. Nebinger & Co	55.04		55.04
Gideon Wheeler	264.04		264.04
Andrew Netzell	282.06		282.06
L. L. Green	355.87		355.87
O. E. Green	3,240.15		3,240.15
Total			8,037.61

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Chairman, the superintendent of this institution was discharged, arrested, convicted of misappropriation of funds, and thereby his vouchers and evidence for these claimants in the respective Departments were discredited. The paragraph which I ask to have adopted in this bill provides that they may be allowed to file their claims with the Secretary of the Interior, introduce their evidence and proof, and if anything is found due them, that the amount so found due may be paid them from the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for the years 1894, 1895, and 1896 for this institution.

I have before me here a report from the Comptroller and Auditor of the Treasury Department, in which they state, by reason of the conduct of this superintendent and the condition of his accounts, it was impossible for them on the evidence they have before them to audit these accounts. This will allow the claimants to file their claims with the Secretary of the Interior and, upon competent proof, if any amount be found due it shall be paid from the unexpended balance of the appropriation already made for this institution. I think the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, under this explanation of the condition of these claimants for supplies furnished this institution, ought not to be insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. May I inquire of the Chair upon what ground the point of order is sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained on the general statement. It seems to be a series of claims against the Government, and has no place on an appropriation bill, but goes to the Committee on Claims. It refers to claims dating back as far as 1889, while this is an appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June, 1897.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Is it understood by the Chair that these claims are still pending in the Treasury Department unadjusted and have been so pending since they were filed in 1888, 1889, and 1890?

The CHAIRMAN. Besides all that, the paragraph provides how the Secretary of the Interior shall adjust and settle the claims. This is a matter of appropriation for the Indian service. So that, on all grounds, the paragraph is out of order.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. I hope the gentleman from Illinois, in view of the statement I have made and as this paragraph makes no appropriation, will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that I have already had to insist in several cases, and there are several more to follow.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. But does the gentleman from Illinois make the distinction that there is no appropriation involved in this paragraph, and that these claims are now pending in the Treasury Department? I hope the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me on those grounds.

Mr. CANNON. I am exceedingly sorry, but if I do so I will have to abandon making points of order on all claims.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Does the gentleman know that this asks for no appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. I understand it thoroughly.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. I ask that this paragraph be passed for the time being with the consent of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. What is the use of passing it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly will gladly consent to it.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Will the gentleman from Illinois consent to have it passed over for the present?

Mr. CANNON. If the point of order can be considered as pending, yes. I can see no object in having it passed, however. I will consent, I say, with the point of order pending. If the gentleman desires to have it passed, I have no objection.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. That will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Unanimous consent is asked that the point of order against the paragraph be reserved.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. That will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that this paragraph be passed over, the point of order being reserved.

Mr. CANNON. I can see no good that would come from that. I guess we had better proceed with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. The gentleman says that he will accede to that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman now says he can see no good in it.

Mr. CANNON. The only objection is that when it is reached again it might happen that I was not in the House. Now, then, I can not allow that to happen unless I should be dead.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. I will state to the gentleman that I will not take up this paragraph in his absence.

Mr. CANNON. What is the object in passing it over?

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. I am inclined to think if you had more complete information on the matters involved you might be disposed not to insist on the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I fully understand the whole of it, and I will have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I now suggest that we return to page 43, which was temporarily passed over by unanimous consent, so that the gentleman from Washington may offer an amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I offer an amendment, which I desire to have read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 5, page 43, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"Provided, That the consent of Congress of the United States is hereby given and granted to the removal of the restrictions now existing against the sale of the allotted lands of said Puyallup Indians in the State of Washington; and this provision shall take effect on the 1st day of December, 1896. And for continuing the work of the Puyallup Indian commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1893 (26 Statutes at Large, 612), until said 1st day of December, 1896, to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands within the Puyallup Indian Reservation, Wash., as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees; and also that part of the agency tract, exclusive of the burying ground, not needed for school purposes, and for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said commission, the sum of $4,000 is hereby appropriated to be available until expended, and to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the agency tract lands, as provided in said act."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. SAYERS. I renew the point of order. I am informed that this is not an amendment that ought to go upon this bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On what ground does the gentleman renew the point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. Simply on the ground that I have been informed that this legislation ought not to go upon the bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. You were for it in conference, with this same provision.

Mr. SAYERS. On the contrary, I was not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It had the same provision.

Mr. SAYERS. But I was not for it in conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George Wright for services as interpreter for the Osage Nation of Indians from January 1, 1863, to September 30, 1865, as provided by section 2070 of the United States Revised Statutes, $550.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is a mere claim and has no place on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to express my hope once more that my friend will not insist on the point of order, though I suppose I must concede it is well taken. The facts are that this Mr. Wright did perform these services, the compensation for which is fixed by the Revised Statutes, and he has not received the full compensation due him. There is no question under the sun but that he is entitled to this money. He can recover it in the Court of Claims, and I suppose that my friend from Illinois would not hesitate to put this provision into a deficiency bill. As there is no doubt about the justice of the claim, and inasmuch as it is in connection with the Indian service and the committee have examined the matter and know that the money is due, I trust the gentleman will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I observe that it dates back to 1863 and if I make the point of order on any of these claims I certainly must insist upon it in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to adjust, settle, and pay upon the presentation of sworn and competent evidence, out of any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the support of Indian day and industrial schools for the fiscal years 1895 and 1896, H. Phillips, the teacher of Puyallup Indian school, a sum not to exceed $314, on account of the loss of his personal property and effects by fire in the buildings of said Indian school in the month of March, 1895, and while assisting in saving Government property belonging to said school.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, this requires no appropriation. The fact is that this gentleman lost his property in a more or less successful attempt to save Government property, and as we can pay him without taking it out of the Treasury of the United States, and as he sustained his loss under these peculiar circumstances, I am sure that the lenient heart of my honored friend from Illinois must yield in this instance. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will put in a clause providing that no part of this money shall come out of the Treasury of the United States I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I suppose it will come out of the Treasury, but it does not require a specific appropriation out of the general fund.

Mr. CANNON. I must insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all children born of a marriage between a white man and an Indian woman shall have the same rights and privileges to the property and annuities of the tribe to which the mother belongs, by blood, as any other member of the tribe; and no prior act of Congress shall be so construed as to debar such child of such right: Provided, That nothing herein shall conflict with the provisions of existing treaties.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this paragraph that it changes existing law and practically repeals the act of August 9, 1888.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the law which it is claimed this provision changes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no white man, not otherwise a member of any tribe of Indians, who may hereafter marry an Indian woman, member of any Indian tribe in the United States, or any of its Territories, except the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, shall by such marriage hereafter acquire any right to any tribal property, privilege, or interest whatever to which any member of such tribe is entitled.

SEC. 2. That every Indian woman, member of any such tribe of Indians, who may hereafter be married to any citizen of the United States, is hereby declared to become by such marriage a citizen of the United States, with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of any such citizen, being a married woman: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall impair or in any way affect the right or title of such married woman to any tribal property or interest therein.

SEC. 3. That whenever the marriage of any white man with any Indian woman, a member of any such tribe of Indians, is required or offered to be proved in any judicial proceeding, evidence of the admission of such fact by the party against whom the proceeding is had, or evidence of general repute, or of cohabitation as married persons, or any other circumstantial or presumptive evidence from which the fact may be inferred, shall be competent.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. If the Chairman noticed that law as it was read he observed that there is not one word in it with reference to the children of an Indian woman who marries a white man, and it is a fact well known that for several years this question was pending before the Department of the Interior, and it was not until within the last two or three years (this act was passed in 1888) that the Secretary held that the child of an Indian woman who had married a white man since 1888 was not entitled to all the rights of a member of the tribe, and to the same rights as the child of an Indian man who had married a white woman.

This amendment, instead of changing existing law, simply places a construction upon this section. At the end of the second section, as the Chairman will notice, it is provided that the mother shall retain all her rights in the tribe—her property and her annuities; and if this be true of her, why is it not true of her children? The fact of her marriage to a white man does not change the status of her children. And will any member of this House claim for one moment that the children of an Indian woman who marries a white man have not the same rights that belong to the children of an Indian man who marries a white woman?

There is another thing that is well known to every man who has had anything to do with the Indian Committee or with Indian affairs. Every time that there has been a treaty negotiated or entered into with the Indians, it has been the half bloods and the quarter bloods that have been appealed to. There is no reason and no justice in claiming that the child of an Indian woman because she happens to have married a white man since 1888 is not entitled to the same portion of land to which she would be entitled had her father been an Indian man and her mother a white woman.

Some gentlemen say, and this objection was urged upon me the other day, "This is taking a step backward." If it is taking a step backward why has not Congress the courage to take the proper step and say that hereafter no Indian man shall marry a white woman and no Indian woman marry a white man? But instead of taking a step backward this is a step in the right direction. You may go to the Indian Territory, you may go to any Indian reservation that you please, and you will find that the children who are advanced in education and intelligence are the children of white men and Indian women or the children of white women and Indian men. These are the first to put on citizen's clothing; they are the first to attend the schools.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, there are only two ways to solve this Indian question. We may talk about it in Congress all we please; missionaries may say what they please; but the only way to solve the Indian question is by education and by intermarriages of Indians and whites.

Mr. Chairman, in the law of 1888 there is nothing that deprives the child of an Indian woman who has married a white man of its rights. So I say this amendment, instead of changing existing law, simply construes that section and simply puts the children of an Indian woman in the same condition as the children of an Indian man occupy.

Another thing: It is well known as a principle of law that the condition of the children follows that of the mother. If that principle of the common law be conceded, then the condition of the children of an Indian woman would follow that of their mother, and they would be entitled to all the rights in the tribe that she enjoyed. The very law which it is claimed we are undertaking to change provides that the mother shall not be deprived of any of her rights in the lands or annuities of the tribe. This is all I desire to say on the point of order.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is simply an argument in favor of the repeal of the act of August 9, 1888, because the children of white men who marry Indian women are placed on a different basis from the children of Indian men who marry white women. Now, that argument may be good or bad; but the statute of August 9, 1888, in clear terms provides that—

No white man, not otherwise a member of any tribe of Indians, who may hereafter marry an Indian woman, member of any Indian tribe in the United States or any of its Territories, except the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, shall by such marriage hereafter acquire any right to any tribal property, privilege, or interest whatever to which any member of such tribe is entitled.

And the next section provides that the Indian wife of the white man shall become a citizen of the United States. The white man being a citizen, his wife becomes a citizen and their children are citizens.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will wait a moment, I will.

Mr. Chairman, the object of that law is to preserve these Indian reservations and Indian lands to the Indians. When an Indian woman marries a white man she surrenders her tribal rights so far as her children are concerned. She herself enjoys during her life all her rights as an Indian woman. My friend from Kansas admitted in his argument, as I understood him, that the Interior Department has put on this law a construction adverse to the construction for which he is contending here.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I wish to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the second section of the statute of 1888 expressly provides that nothing in the act shall interfere with the interests of the wife in the lands or annuities of the tribe?

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Yes; but I think a fair construction of that provision is that it applies to the rights of the wife during her life. The children of such a marriage are citizens of the United States and have no special claim upon the Government for support; they have not the rights that Indians have. They are not in the position of wards of this nation. They are citizens of the Government.

I think there is embodied in that statute a broad public policy; that is, to prevent the maintenance of this race for the purpose of being charges upon the people of the United States. Our people are willing to support Indians; but they draw a line as to who are to be considered Indians.

Now, it seems to me that if the gentleman from Kansas in his construction of the law is correct, then there is no need for this provision in the bill at all. It is not, Mr. Chairman, the function of the appropriation bill to construe the law. That belongs to the courts, and the phraseology of the provision, as embodied in this bill, shows itself that it is obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I have not a copy of the RECORD at hand, but the Chair will undoubtedly remember that the same question was raised on the Post-Office appropriation bill during its consideration in the Committee of the Whole two years ago. The point of order was then made and overruled, for the simple reason that it construed the section and was not a change of the law.

Now, I submit that if there was anything in the section under consideration that shut out the children, it might be a different case. But there is no such provision in this bill; and, as I said at the opening, this question was pending before the Department of the Interior for several years before they determined whether or not it applied to the children of Indian women at all. Now, if the gentleman from Massachusetts occupies a correct position in his argument, why does he not, on this floor, advocate a proposition to shut out the children of Indian men who have married white women?

Talk of supporting the Indians! Suppose you try to carry that out to its fullest extent, and that the Government should cease its support. What is the first step to do? As long as you compel them to intermarry you will have to keep them and support them. Until you enable white men to marry Indian women, and white women to marry Indian men, and protect and educate the children of such marriages, you will have to support the race. There is no question about that.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. The proposition would not be in order on the present bill. That is the point I made against the pending proposition. It is new legislation, and I am simply making a point on the proposition that it is new legislation and has no place in this bill. It is contrary to the rules of the House. If it was properly before the House, I might or might not support it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Probably might not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question of order raised.

The Chair remembers the case of two years ago to which attention has been called, in reference to the Post-Office bill and the ruling then made.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That was only the fraternal press matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recollects the occasion; that it had reference to the transmission through the mails of certain published matter. The present occupant of the chair never had any sympathy with that ruling, but, aside from that, this pending proposition, on which the point of order is made, appears clearly to the Chair to be new legislation. It is a positive enactment by law where at best it is only claimed that none now exists, and the Chair, for that reason, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes, not hereinafter provided for, including pay of architect and draftsman, to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,135,000, of which amount the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, use $5,000 for the education of Indians in Alaska: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts, but only with present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, to an extent not exceeding 60 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for.

Mr. LINTON said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I move to strike out the last word, and desire to say in this connection that it will be impossible for me to conclude my remarks within the five minutes allowed by the rule, and I therefore ask an extension of time. I will desire to occupy some fifteen or twenty minutes, but will conclude as soon as possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think perhaps time will be saved by agreeing now upon a limit of time for the debate. It will be better to arrive at a conclusion now, so that at the end of the time fixed the vote can be taken on the paragraph and any amendments that may be offered to it.

I suggest that we take forty minutes for debate on this proposition and all amendments, and give the gentleman from Michigan twenty, and I will control the other twenty.

Mr. LINTON. I desire to say that there are several others who wish to speak, and I hardly think forty minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to one hour, with the understanding that at the expiration of that time the vote shall be taken on the pending amendment, or amendments that may thereafter be offered, without debate.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Is that an hour on each side?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; one hour altogether.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That, I think, would be hardly sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I must object for the time being.

Mr. SHERMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Nebraska want?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I do not know that I want any; but I would suggest that you make it forty-five minutes on each side.

Mr. LINTON. We can fix the time for the vote, say, at half past 4; that would give ample time.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. So that time is left for the presentation of amendments I will be content. I think thirty-five minutes on a side will be sufficient, reserving the right to offer an amendment after the debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph, and all amendments thereto, be concluded in one hour and ten minutes, thirty-five minutes of which shall be allotted to the gentleman from Michigan and the remainder of the time to the gentleman from New York in charge of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] is recognized.

Mr. LINTON. Mr. Chairman, a little less than two years ago from this same place I said that it was time to call a halt in the expenditure of the Nation's money toward any sectarian institution. Since then a great change has taken place in this class of legislation. No longer do you see the schools of St. Boniface, the Holy Family, or St. Ignatius specifically provided for by Congress, and even the so-called charities of the District of Columbia under sectarian control and for which our whole people have been taxed, thereby becoming unwilling contributors to a taxation without representation, have been swept from legislative bills.

This has been brought about by an outraged, indignant public sentiment created by the knowledge that Congress has for years, contrary to public policy, contrary to the principles of good government, and in direct contravention of the Constitution, appropriated vast sums of money that have been devoted to sectarian purposes. Every member upon the floor at this moment is aware of the fact that the pending bill carries in round numbers a quarter of a million dollars, every penny of which will go into the coffers of one church to be used for the education of 4,000 children in schools where creed, and one creed only, is taught. I will not, and never have attacked or abused any religion or creed, and will endeavor to refrain, in my own remarks, from even mentioning the name of any sect, but I believe this whole religious controversy should be forever eliminated from the arena of politics, and the only way to bring it about is to absolutely divorce church and state, as intended by the founders of our Government, and stop here and now pandering to any church influence or demand by ceasing at once making this class of appropriations.

As stated by a well-known Senator during the debate upon this bill last session—

It is a very serious matter. It concerns the rights of the American people so far as the appropriation of their money is concerned. I do not believe the Congress of the United States can long stand upon the ground we occupy to-day. There is already a gathering storm in this country against this matter of appropriating money for sectarian purposes. That storm may break before a great while upon the Congress and the people of the United States.

The storm prophesied by the Senator did break in many places during the last campaign, and men whose faces have been familiar here for many years are now resting quietly by their firesides, wishing they had voted upon this question in accordance with the Constitution of their country, in obedience to the dictates of their own consciences, and according to the desires of almost their entire constituencies. They then might have escaped the storm of indignation and the flood of ballots which overcame them. The storm of 1894, however, was a zephyr and the flood a rivulet compared with what is impending if Congress persists in its mad course of voting hundreds of thousands of dollars to one church in bills which if passed become laws respecting an establishment of religion (directly prohibited by the United States Constitution); but they go further than that, and actually force poor, ignorant children under that establishment of religion and pay the bills for their religious education. But my good friend from New York will say the children will be thrown out of school if we do not provide for them. Not so. I wish to have the Clerk read a United Press dispatch of this date.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLLECTIONS FOR CATHOLIC INDIAN MISSIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, February 23.

In all the Roman Catholic churches of this diocese collections were taken up for the mission work among the negroes and Indians in the United States. Similar collections were taken in other dioceses as the result of an appeal recently issued to the bishops and archbishops by the commission composed of Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Ryan, of this city, and Archbishop Kain, of St. Louis.

The rich and powerful church which has these children in charge will not discontinue teaching its creed because the Government refuses longer to pay for it any more than the same church would abandon the big university it has established almost within a stone's throw of the Capitol because it can not secure Government aid.

I will introduce here for printing in the RECORD a limited number of letters, remonstrances, and resolutions, which should have great weight with our decisions here to-day, coming from the high sources they do, representing great churches and millions of our people:

NEW YORK, December 27, 1895.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned executive officers of mission boards and representatives of leading branches of the Christian Church in the United States, desire to ask your earnest attention to the matter of appropriations of public money by Congress in aid of Indian schools conducted by religious denominations. The following table, compiled from the reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, sets forth the present status of this question:

Amounts set apart for education of Indians in schools under private control for the fiscal years 1886 to 1896, inclusive.

	1886.	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	Total in 11 years.
Roman Catholic	$118,343	$194,635	$221,169	$347,672	$356,957	$363,349	$394,756	$375,845	$389,745	$359,215	$308,471	$3,430,157
Presbyterian	32,995	37,910	36,500	41,825	47,650	44,850	44,310	30,090	36,340	.....	.....	352,470
Congregational	16,121	26,696	26,080	29,310	28,459	27,271	29,146	25,736	10,825	.....	.....	219,644
Martinsburg, Pa	5,400	10,410	7,500	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	23,310
Alaska training school	.....	4,175	4,175	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	8,350
Episcopal	.....	1,890	3,690	18,700	24,876	29,910	23,220	4,860	7,020	7,020	2,160	123,346
Friends	1,960	27,845	14,460	23,383	23,383	24,743	24,743	10,020	10,020	10,020	.....	170,577
Mennonite	.....	3,340	2,500	3,125	4,375	4,375	4,375	3,750	3,750	3,750	3,125	36,465
Middletown, Cal	.....	1,523	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,523
Unitarian	.....	1,350	5,400	5,400	5,400	5,400	5,400	5,400	5,400	5,400	.....	44,550
Lutheran, Wittenberg, Wis	.....	.....	1,350	4,050	7,560	9,180	16,200	15,120	15,120	15,120	.....	83,700
Methodist	.....	.....	.....	2,725	9,940	6,700	13,980	.....	.....	.....	600	33,945
Mrs. L. H. Daggett	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	6,480	.....	.....	.....	6,480
Miss Howard	.....	.....	.....	275	600	1,000	2,000	2,500	3,000	3,000	3,000	15,375
Lincoln Institution	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	33,400	367,400
Hampton Institution	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	20,040	220,440
Woman's National Indian Association	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,040	4,320	.....	6,360
Point Iroquois, Mich	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	900	600	.....	1,500
Plum Creek, Leslie, S. Dak	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,620	.....	1,620
Total	228,259	363,214	376,264	529,905	562,640	570,218	611,570	533,241	537,600	463,505	370,796	5,147,212

Attention is especially invited to the fact that the Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Friends, Lutherans, and Unitarians have all formally declined to receive further Government aid in carrying on their work among the Indians, and Baptists receive nothing. During the last four years especially the subject has been very widely discussed in the columns of the public press, secular and religious, in the Halls of Congress, and elsewhere, and we believe that the sentiment of the American people is almost solidly united in opposition to this scheme of Government aid in sectarian schools. It is plainly in violation of the spirit of the Constitution; it is contrary to public policy; it is injurious to our politics; it is productive of religious jealousy; it is a misuse of public funds; it is a menace to the integrity of the public-school system, and is detrimental to the cause of Indian education.

We believe that the sentiments already expressed by you are in harmony with the views of the great mass of the American people, and we appeal to you to continue the good work to which you have given so much valuable time.

We believe that if you would send a copy of your speech of June 7, 1894, before Congress, to the pastors in the United States, asking them to preach a sermon or deliver an address on this subject, to circulate petitions to be signed by their parishioners and sent to Congress, and to write personal letters to Representatives and Senators, respectfully praying for the discontinuance of such appropriations, you would find at once such a response as would clearly satisfy Congress as to the unpopularity of such appropriations.

In asking renewed attention to the subject we are encouraged by the action of the last Congress, which ordered the discontinuance of the contract system "as soon as practicable." We believe that it is practicable and desirable that it should be discontinued at once, and that no further appropriations be made for sectarian schools, and that the Indian Office be prohibited by law from setting apart any portion of money for schools under sectarian control.

Wm. C. Roberts, corresponding secretary, Board of Home Missions, Presbyterian Church; T. J. Morgan, corresponding secretary, American Baptist Home Mission Society; A. B. Leonard, corresponding secretary, Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church; C. C. McCabe, corresponding secretary, Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church; C. J. Ryder, corresponding secretary of American Missionary Association, Congregationalist; D. J. McMillan, corresponding secretary, Presbyterian Board of Home Missions

Hon. W. S. LINTON, M. C., Washington, D. C.

LOUISVILLE, KY., January 21, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose copy of preambles and resolutions as below, adopted by the Baptist Pastors' Conference of this city (Louisville). I assure you that these are the sentiments of the 230,000 Baptists in Kentucky, as well as nearly all the 4,000,000 throughout the entire country. I can assure you also that these are the sentiments of five-sixths of the American people. I earnestly hope that this stain upon our Government may be speedily removed.

Very sincerely, yours,

T. T. EATON,
Editor Western Recorder.

Hon. W. S. LINTON, Washington, D. C.

—

NEW YORK, December 30, 1895.

DEAR SIR: At a large meeting of the conference of Baptist ministers of New York and vicinity the preamble and resolution below was unanimously adopted.

Yours, truly,

T. J. MORGAN,
Corresponding Secretary, American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Hon. W. S. LINTON, M. C., Washington, D. C.

—

DEAR SIR: The protest below is offered by the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Atlanta, Ga.:

"That in entering this protest we are guided by a regard for the sacred principle of separation of church and state so prominently characteristic of our constitutional system, and wholly uninfluenced by disproportionate favor shown to any church."

This resolution was unanimously passed at the Baptist Ministers' Conference in Atlanta, Ga., January 6, 1896.

C. N. DONALDSON, Chairman.

Hon. W. S. LINTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

—

Resolutions below were also adopted by the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Richmond and Manchester, Va.

WM. E. HATCHER, President.
J. T. TUCKER, Secretary.

January 13, 1896.

Resolutions passed by the Baptist Pastors' Conference, Louisville, Ky., January 20, 1896:

"Whereas the United States Government during the last eleven years has paid out of the public Treasury the sum of $3,430,157 to the Roman Catholics to aid them in carrying on their missionary work among the Indians; and

"Whereas for the year ending June 30, 1896, while less than $6,000 are set aside for other churches, the sum of $308,471 is given to the Roman Catholics; and

Whereas it is the declared policy of the Government to discontinue Indian contract schools as early as practicable; and

Whereas it is entirely feasible to make provision in Government schools for all Indian children now enrolled in contract schools before the beginning of the school year of 1896-97: Therefore

Resolved, That we earnestly urge upon Congress the importance of discontinuing at once the contract school system, and we hereby protest against the appropriation of further sums from the public Treasury in the aid of contract schools. We do this for the following reasons:

First. The appropriation of public money to any church or religious denomination is plainly in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, which prohibits the establishment of any form of religion.

Second. It is contrary to public policy, causing as it does religious jealousies, and injecting into our politics the animus of sectarian controversy.

Third. The giving of so large a sum to one sect while others doing the same kind of work among the Indians receive nothing from the public Treasury is unwarranted favoritism on the part of the United States Government, which is in duty bound to treat all its people alike.

Fourth. It is a serious menace to the integrity of the public-school system, since the same reason urged in behalf of this action of the Government may be urged with equal potency in behalf of the division of the public-school fund of the several States.

Fifth. It is detrimental to the cause of Indian education. It is better for the Indians in preparation for American citizenship to be trained in public schools, where all the influences tend to foster patriotism and to prepare them for a speedy absorption into national life.

H. C. ROBERTS, President.
NOLAND, Secretary.

—

A PROTEST AND PETITION.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, earnestly protest against the appropriation by Congress of funds from the National Treasury for sectarian education among the Indians, or for the support of any institution or undertaking not wholly under the control of the National Government.

We respectfully petition the Fifty-fourth Congress to adopt the following joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"Neither Congress nor any State shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or use the property or credit of the United States, or of any State, or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either to be used, for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding, by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

R. W. ROWLEY,
And tens of thousands of others.

Attention is invited to a table compiled from the reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs showing the amount of money paid out of the public Treasury for contract Indian schools during the period of eleven years, 1886–1896, inclusive. From this table it appears—

First. That during that time the total amount paid to Indian contract schools was $5,147,292 and that of this sum $3,430,157 has gone to one denomination.

Second. The amount reached its highest point in 1892, viz, $611,570. Since this time there has been a steady decline, the amount appropriated for the year 1896 being $370,796.

Third. The Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Friends, Unitarians, and Lutherans, who have hitherto participated in this Government subsidy, have withdrawn entirely. The amount of $2,160 charged to the Episcopalians for the year 1896 is not by the authority but against the express wish of the church; the same is true of the $600 charged to the Methodists. The school conducted by Miss Howard is in no sense a church school. while Lincoln and Hampton institutes both claim to be undenominational, so that of the total amount apppropriated for contract schools for 1896, viz, $370,796, the sum of $308,471 is given to one church, while only $3,125 is given to any other religious body.

Fourth. It will thus be seen that as the matter now stands the Government of the United States takes from the public Treasury the sum of $308,000 to aid one religious body in carrying on its missionary work among the Indians, while it gives practically nothing to any other.

It is worthy of noting in this connection that at the last session of Congress a clause was inserted in the Indian bill prohibiting the Secretary of the Interior from making any new contracts, and restricting him to a sum not to exceed 80 per cent of the contracts of the previous years, and directing that—

The Government shall, as early as practicable, make provision for the education of Indian children in Government schools.

It thus appears that the Indian contract school system has, after mature deliberation and much public discussion, been repudiated practically by all the churches except one; second, that the entire policy has been condemned by act of Congress.

I hope that the present Congress will abolish at once the entire system, which is so antagonistic to the spirit of the Constitution, repugnant to the public opinion, and which has been heretofore productive of so much bitterness, and which has in it the possibility of so many evils in the future.

I may be called an extremist upon this question, but I know that I am in the right and that the American people are with me.

On the 15th of June, 1876, the Republican national convention declared:

The public-school system of the United States is the bulwark of the American Republic. With a view to its security and permanence we recommend an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the application of any public funds or property for the benefit of any schools or institutions under sectarian control.

Republicans, can you vote for this appropriation after having made this party pledge?

The Democratic national platform at St. Louis, June 28, 1876, declared:

We do here reaffirm our faith in the total separation of church and state for the sake alike of civil and religious freedom—

And referred to—the public schools, which the Democratic party has cherished from their foundation and resolved to maintain, without prejudice or preference for any class, sect, or creed, and without largesses from the Treasury to any.

Democrats, will you vote largesses to a creed, after declaring in party convention assembled that you would not do so? I know of the pressure that is being brought to bear upon members, and the lobby that has been at work. I wish to have read at this time an Associated Press dispatch published in papers throughout the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIRST OF ITS KIND—PÈRE MARQUETTE'S STATUE TO BE PLACED IN THE CAPITOL.

WASHINGTON, February 21.

The unveiling of Père Marquette's statue in Statuary Hall, at the Capitol, which will occur soon, will be the first instance of the placing of a memorial to a churchman in the Capitol. The statue is being put in position. Father Marquette is represented in the garb of the Jesuits, standing with a map in his left hand, the right grasping his robe.

It is expected the unveiling exercises will be attended by Cardinal Satolli, Cardinal Gibbons, and the French and Italian ambassadors, together with a number of high dignitaries of the Catholic Church.

Mr. LINTON. I presume that Father Stephan, who labors so assiduously here for the schools of his church, thinks it a fitting time when at this very moment in Statuary Hall, in the room of the Capitol dearest to our people owing to the associations of great names connected with it, there is being uncovered this marble statue, clothed in the cowl and gown of a Jesuit, with crucifix, rosary, beads, and other paraphernalia of his church, standing with map in one hand, the other grasping his robe—the whole figure, including pedestal, upon which is engraved scenes of church triumph and the Jesuitical letters, "S. J.," is of an ecclesiastical character alone; in fact so much so that devotees of that society have stopped in front of it, placed as it is in the main corridor of the Capitol, to make the sign of their creed, causing a member of the House, who may participate in this debate, to say that—

The interior has been transformed, and now the only thing necessary to give the Capitol the appearance of a complete cathedral is to change the exterior but slightly by removing the Goddess of Liberty from the Dome and substituting a figure of St. Peter,

And this statue of a zealous priest, who never knew the meaning of the precious word "liberty," and never heard the name or even dreamed of the great State he is supposed to represent, has this day been placed, and we are informed is to remain, next to and towering above the marble form of a statesman, the martyred Lincoln, standing just beneath with troubled face and bowed head, but the stroke of whose pen freed 4,000,000 slaves; and, as we are informed in the extract just read, the unveiling exercises of this, the first and only statue of a churchman in the Capitol, will be attended by that "eminent American," (?) Cardinal Satolli, and other high dignitaries of his church—this, I say, Father Stephan may consider a fitting time for Congress to present the schools of his faith with a quarter of a million dollars, but I do not; neither do I believe this House is in a temper to do it, and I therefore ask the adoption of the amendment I offer, which will prevent such a misappropriation of public moneys.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. LINTON, as follows:

On page 49, after the word "Alaska," in line 8, insert:
"And it is hereby declared that it is the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering said appropriation as to carry out said object, and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any part of said fund for education in sectarian schools."
And strike out the proviso beginning in line 8, down to and including the words "ninety-five," in line 14, page 49.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Michigan occupied all the time he desires to occupy?

Mr. LINTON. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] such time as he desires.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say at the outset it is not my intention to make a set speech upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON]. It occurs to me, however, the Committee on Indian Affairs should have some reasons to present for the report they have made so far as it relates to the subject of Indian education.

In an act passed by the last Congress it was declared that the Secretary of the Interior should make contracts, but only with the then contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895, and that the Government should as early as practicable make provision for the education of Indian children in Government schools.

In pursuance of that declaration the Committee on Indian Affairs have brought in a report upon this subject in compliance with the declared purpose of Congress as there laid down, and the amount appropriated this year, as proposed in this bill, is only 60 per cent of the amount appropriated for the year 1895. So, Mr. Chairman, we feel that we are carrying out in good faith the policy of last year; and we do not believe it is just to the Indians that they should be cut off from the proposed appropriation which has heretofore been extended for the aid of Indian education. I heartily agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] in the principle enunciated by him, to entirely dissever church from state, but there is something more than a theory involved. These institutions of learning have been planted in these remote regions for the education of the Indian. It was done in good faith, and at the invitation and encouragement of the United States. There can be no question, I think, that these schools have contributed most encouragingly to the higher and better education of the Indian population.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a constituency that has mingled in its population in different localities something like 25,000 Indians, placed there not voluntarily by the State of South Dakota, but they have been admitted to citizenship by the Government of the United States without any act upon our part, and are a part and parcel of our people. We are interested, Mr. Chairman, in having the Government contribute to their education, as it properly should, for they are its wards and not ours, that they may be brought into harmony and sympathy with the institutions not only of the State, but of the General Government. We are anxious that this people may be educated and fully civilized, that they may in time be a strength rather than a menace to our Commonwealth. The amendment proposed is to strike down all appropriations for this purpose.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Indian Affairs have reported wisely and in compliance with the declared purpose of the law passed in the last session of Congress.

For the fiscal year 1895 a less appropriation was made by $74,000 than for the prior year. By the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1896 the appropriation was reduced more than $92,000. Later I will ask to have read, as a part of my remarks, a communication I received in response to certain inquiries I made of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject under discussion.

I submit in all fairness that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON], if he is to insist upon his amendment and no appropriation is to be extended, ought to ask from the General Government a sufficient amount now for the construction and equipment of schools to be under the control of the Government to supply the place of those that have been and now are doing this work under contract. If the contract schools are to be eliminated and stricken down their equivalent should be supplied, and that without unnecessary delay. He should ask for an appropriation by the General Government, so that the education of the Indian may be provided for in the immediate future, and the service not suffer and its elevating and stimulating influence be postponed.

Mr. PEARSON. With the gentleman's permission, I will state that as I understand this amendment it does not cut off any of the appropriation, but simply says it shall be expended without sectarian control. Is that so?

Mr. LINTON. That is the only provision. The appropriation is not reduced in the least.

Mr. SPALDING. It does not reduce the appropriation.

Mr. GAMBLE. The amendment to which the gentleman from Michigan directed his remarks was simply to strike out the last word; but I understand that he concluded his remarks by submitting an amendment.

The amendment, however, will have the effect I have indicated. The Government has not its own schools or school facilities, nor are they otherwise provided in the localities where the service is needed. It is our understanding, the schools can not otherwise be provided at the present time than by the contract schools. I am in hearty sympathy with the gentleman in his proposition to have an absolute separation of church and state. But, interested as we are in the education of the Indian as a part of our citizenship, in the elevation of his manhood, and strengthening his character, we say in all fairness that he ought to come in, if these schools are to be cut off and the opportunities of the Indian lessened, and ask for a reasonable appropriation to supply facilities in lieu of what he proposes to strike down. I hold in my hand a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to which I heretofore referred, which states that it will require upward of $1,200,000 to supply school facilities equaling those already provided by the contract schools. I will ask to have it read as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to have it read?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 15, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 8, relative to certain school matters. In reply I advise you seriatim as follows:

First. Number of Indian children receiving education in sectarian or contract schools under pay from the Government:

Contracts are made for 4,072 pupils, while the average attendance on these schools is shown by reports of contractors to be 4,998.

Second. How much was paid by the Government to such schools for the above purpose for each of the fiscal years of 1895 and 1896, and how much is proposed to be used for such purpose for the fiscal year 1897:

During fiscal year 1895 contracts were made for this purpose aggregating $463,505, and for 1896, $370,796. A like reduction for 1897 would reduce the amount to about $299,000.

Third. How much money, if any, has been used by the Government since the appropriation for the fiscal year 1895 for the Indian Department in the construction or purchase of school buildings for educational use for the Indians:

An approximate estimate shows the cost of this item to be $216,612, to which should be added about $50,000 more for minor repairs, improvements, water systems, and sewerage.

Fourth. If all contracts by the Government with sectarian or other schools were at this time terminated, what appropriation of money by the Government would be necessary to construct or purchase suitable buildings and sites with equipments to adequately and sufficiently supply the service equal to that before the discontinuance of any of the contract schools under the law of 1895?

As stated above, if the contract-school system were abolished and the Government forced to care for the 4,000 children now being educated therein, it would require at least twenty boarding-school plants, with capacity for 200 pupils each. To construct and equip these plants would cost not less than $60,000 each, or a total of $1,200,000. This estimate is based upon the actual expenses of this office in constructing such schools.

Fifth. How long would it take the Government to construct and equip the school buildings by purchase or otherwise before the same would be ready for use and occupancy without injury to the cause of education of the Indians?

By putting forth special effort it would take from two to three years.
As to the policy of this Bureau and the Department, see reports transmitted to Congress, Executive Document No. 107, Fifty-third Congress.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. R. J. GAMBLE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. GAMBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to add anything to what is contained in the communication I have submitted, except to say that I am in no ways wedded to any particular measure; but being interested as I am in the education of the Indians, especially within the limits of my own State, I do not want to see the cause of Indian education suffer even temporarily, and this is the reason for my objection to the amendment. It can not be otherwise than detrimental to the service, at least until adequate facilities are supplied by the Government to supply the places by these schools. I submit that under the policy already inaugurated by Congress every dollar of appropriation will cease within three years from this time, and it seems to me it is a feasible, it is a practicable, it is a wise provision that the committee has followed out, and it ought to be satisfactory to everyone.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS. Has any provision been made thus far for the building of houses by the Government to take care of these children?

Mr. GAMBLE. That is a subject to which I was about to address myself. In the letter submitted by the Commissioner it is shown that upward of $200,000 has been used for that purpose during the past year. And I submit, Mr. Chairman, if we are to withdraw support from these schools within three years—and the Commissioner, by his letter, states it will take three years to complete the construction of these buildings—we ought, in justice to the Indians, to appropriate at least one-third of the amount at this time and at once commence the construction of school buildings so as to have them ready to be occupied as the needs of the service require, and avert, if possible, any harm to the cause of education among any of this people.

Mr. ANDREWS. Another question, with the permission of the gentleman. Why not proceed with that business immediately and put this whole question under absolute Government control from the outset?

Mr. GAMBLE. I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to assent to the proposition of the gentleman, but is this Congres willing under present conditions to appropriate $1,200,000 for the purpose? I think, however, we ought at least to appropriate a part of it, because I think the United States is large enough, great enough, and has resources enough, and should be independent enough to educate the Indian, and if possible make him a self-supporting, intelligent citizen, within their own school buildings, without renting the services from sectarian or other contract schools.

Mr. ANDREWS. Just one more question. In the end it means so much money to equip these schools to transact the work now under practical Government control, does it not?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; it would require an appropriation of $1,200,000 to provide the facilities with which to do the work that is now being done by contract schools. It will require that amount of appropriation for school buildings.

Mr. KIEFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Suppose the Government should furnish that amount of money, $1,200,000, or whatever the amount may be, would it not take at least another year before these buildings would be finished and the children entered for educational purposes?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIEFER. Consequently the present appropriation asked by the committee must be given.

Mr. GAMBLE. It ought to be given, so as to keep up the education of the Indians until other facilities are supplied by the Government to do the work under its direct charge and entirely independent of the contract system.

Mr. KIEFER. So as to have no break in the course.

Mr. GAMBLE. And if no appropriation is made, then the education of 4,998 Indian children would not be provided for.

Mr. ANDREWS. This appropriation relates to what fiscal year?

Mr. GAMBLE. To the fiscal year ending June, 1897.

Mr. ANDREWS. And it is deemed that between this time and the time when the Government can erect these buildings the educational work would be seriously injured if this system were not continued?

Mr. GAMBLE. That is conceded by the communication I had read. There are many school buildings now in which the work is being done, and it would require some time to construct buildings to take the place of those used for that purpose. With this statement, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat. It was not my intention to take so much time in stating the position of the committee. We do not want the cause of Indian education to suffer. We think the appropriation asked for by the committee should be made. The Government will do the work as soon as it is in a position with adequate facilities to do it, and in the meantime we desire the appropriation contemplated in the act of 1895 and in pursuance of the policy then declared.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will allow me a question, if we continue to pursue the policy under which we are now working how long will it be before the Government will have complete control of the education of these Indians?

Mr. GAMBLE. Three years.

Mr. PEARSON. If I understood the gentleman from South Dakota, the proposition is to cut down this appropriation 20 per cent each year, so that it would take four more years. Why not make some provision now looking to the future control of these schools?

Mr. GAMBLE. You would have my most hearty cooperation in making the appropriation. We all know, even if the policy of 1895 is to be followed, there ought to be an appropriation for the purpose of constructing and equipping school buildings, so that the Government will be in a position to do the work of education itself when these contracts will have terminated.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that this provision is being made thoroughly in this bill. There were eighty contract schools, and 20 per cent has been deducted from those, and we are making Government schools. If he will take the trouble to examine the report he will see that half a dozen schools were erected last year.

Mr. PEARSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if it would not be better to make provision for the whole amount for the erection of these buildings as soon as possible, and thus stop this sectarian discussion?

Mr. ANDREWS. I have known it to occur that buildings have been erected in less than six months for the accommodation of 4,000 white children, and why can not we do it in this instance? [Applause.]

Mr. LINTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] I have no set speech on this subject, but in view of the great importance of it I deem it my duty to explain my attitude toward the pending bill. I shall vote against this provision in the bill just as I voted against a similar provision in the bill of two years ago, and for the same reason. This provision is unrepublican, as is demonstrated by the extract from the Republican platform of 1876 read by the gentleman from Michigan. It is undemocratic as demonstrated by the extract read from the Democratic platform of that year. It is un-American. Such a proposition has no legitimate place before the House of Representatives. I do not speak to-day as a member of the A. P. A. I am not now nor have I ever been a member of that organization. I speak simply as an American citizen who thinks that upon this particular proposition there is no room whatever for compromise. This proposed 20 per cent reduction is a compromise, or an attempt to compromise, a principle which lies at the very foundation of this Government; a principle that no true American citizen ought ever to consent to see compromised in the slightest degree. The argument in favor of these appropriations which I heard two years ago, and which has been repeated to-day, did not and does not commend itself to my judgment.

It is based on two premises. The first one is that if we withdraw the support of the Government from these sectarian schools they will languish and die. I deny that first premise of the argument of the gentlemen from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. It is only a mere expression of opinion, not a statement of fact, and I deny that that opinion is well founded. As stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] if we withdraw the appropriations proposed in this bill from the church or churches which desire to receive them, those particular churches will support these schools just as the Presbyterians and the Methodists and the Baptists and the other denominations now support their schools. The Baptists have never received but have always refused to receive any appropriations from the Government. The Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, and the Methodists have received such appropriations, but some two years or more ago, of their own volition, they announced to Congress and to the American people that they wanted no more Government appropriations to support their schools. Why does not the other church say the same thing?

Mr. WALSH. What church do you refer to when you say "the other church?"

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The other churches—I do not know how many there are. I understand, however, that there are certain churches that ask for these appropriations. I understand, for instance, that it has not been announced to the American people or to the American Congress that the Catholic Church is willing to give up this appropriation—and I make no invidious comparison between churches, for I am friendly to all of them.

But I understand that there is one church which clings to this appropriation. Now, I saw by the Census Abstract the other day that there are in the Catholic Church in this country 6,000,000 communicants. This appropriation carries about $250,000 to that church for these schools. If it were $300,000, how much would each one of those 6,000,000 of communicants be called upon to contribute in order to make up that amount? Five cents—5 cents a year, less than half a cent a month! What an imputation upon the loyalty, the zeal, the devotion of the members of this enormously wealthy religious organization to say that to preserve these schools and to propagate among the Indians the faith in which they believe they would not be willing to impose an additional per capita assessment or to make an additional per capita contribution to the amount of half a cent a month, or 5 cents a year! Gentlemen, do you believe anything so improbable as that? No one can believe it. There is another reason why we know that that church would continue to support its schools. We know it by the remarks made by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. In his opening statement, when he brought this bill before the Committee of the Whole, this colloquy occurred. I read from page 2200 of the RECORD:

Mr. PEARSON. Before the gentleman takes his seat I should like to ask him if he can give the committee any information as to how much money would be required to procure, either by lease or purchase, the school buildings that are now used in these contract schools?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to my friend from North Carolina that I do not know whether these buildings can be procured at all or not. I presume some of them could not be had. I imagine that to erect school buildings which would take the place of all these contract schools would require perhaps from a million and a half to two millions of dollars.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman knows that we have already acquired certain of the schools?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. PEARSON. And we have acquired them from nearly every denomination except one?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. PEARSON. Now, has any effort been made looking to the obtaining of the title to such schools, either by lease or otherwise?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not; but I will say to my friend that I have an idea, obtained from a semiofficial source, that these schools perhaps would not be sold to the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. "Unofficial" that should be, not "semiofficial."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It reads "semiofficial." It could not be semiofficially.

Mr. SHERMAN. It should be "unofficial." The statement had no connection whatever with any official.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Very well. If these schools would not be sold to the United States, then they would be retained by the church which owns them. If retained, they would be retained for what purpose? Evidently for the purposes of Indian schools, and their maintenance would involve, as I have already said, an additional per capita assessment of only 5 cents a year upon the communicants of that church.

But even if the statement be true that the schools would languish and die but for Government aid, that furnishes no argument whatever why we should make this appropriation. We have no right to do good to an Indian child by outraging the plain rights of a white man. The Virginia statute of religious freedom was drawn by Thomas Jefferson, and he was prouder of it than of anything else he ever wrote except the Declaration of Independence. It received the sanction of James Madison and his warm approbation in a letter which he wrote after its enactment.

Here is a clause in that statute of religious freedom:

That to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves is sinful and tyrannical.

Have you a right to take the money of Catholics or Presbyterians or Methodists to educate Indian children in infidelity or to teach them the Jewish faith? No; nor have you the right to take the money of Jews or infidels or Protestants generally to teach Indian children the Catholic faith, because, in the language of Thomas Jefferson, when you take the money of any man for the purpose of propagating religious opinions which he disbelieves you commit an act which is sinful and tyrannical. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know how much time there is left on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has nineteen minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] six minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. EDDY].

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with the principle laid down in the discussion of the District appropriation bill a week or two ago, that all governmental appropriations should be disbursed by Government officials. But I take it there is no principle so correct that under certain circumstances and conditions it may not be inapplicable; and I take it there is no rule so exact that under certain conditions it is not "more honored in the breach than the observance," and it seems to me thinking men will conclude this is such an occasion. The great aim and object of all governmental transactions with the Indians has been to elevate, to civilize, and to Christianize them; and the greatest of all influences in such civilization and advancement have been the schools that have been established among the various Indian tribes by the different religious denominations of the United States and the self-sacrificing efforts of noble men and women who have left the abodes of civilization and everything that is dear to the heart of a civilized person and, impelled by an overpowering missionary spirit and no hope of reward except the consciousness of having well performed a self-imposed duty, have devoted their lives to the Indians—who have settled among these children of the forest and the plains and endeavored to elevate and Christianize them.

I am aware that very many of these missionaries are Roman Catholics and that very many of these schools are controlled by Catholics, and I take it that this amendment is aimed chiefly at that church. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not a Roman Catholic, and have no personal interest in that church; but, Mr. Chairman, my widening experience among men has taught me that no one church is great enough to absorb all the principles proclaimed on Calvary's mount by that wonderful carpenter of Nazareth. And, Mr. Chairman, I declare, without fear of successful contradiction and as a matter of simple justice, that this denomination has done as much as if not more than any other denomination to civilize and Christianize the Indians of North America. My long acquaintance with the Indians and an intimate acquaintance with the Indian character has taught me that a Catholic Indian is very much preferable to a heathen Indian.

I want to call attention to the schools established on the White Earth Reservation. There are two schools there that have been established for many years, one managed by the Episcopalians and one by the Catholics. Within the radius over which the influence of those schools has extended the Indians have made considerable advancement in civilization and enlightenment. They live in houses; they have wagons; they cultivate the land; they are advancing in civilization; while beyond the borders of the influence of those schools the Indians are exactly in the same condition that they were when Christopher Columbus discovered America.

I have not forgotten that when the "ghost-dance" excitement swept over the Western plains, bringing within its influence those Western Indians, a band of wild Indians went to our Chippewa Reservation in Minnesota; they instituted a "ghost dance" and were working those civilized Indians up to the wildest frenzy, so that the whole northern portion of our State trembled in anticipation of an immediate Indian outbreak. In that emergency the only white men who dared to go among those Indians were those missionaries that had charge of those mission schools on the reservation. They did go among those excited Indians, and by their influence, an influence which they had obtained through a lifetime of association with and work among them, persuaded the visiting Indians to return home and persuaded the resident Indians to resume their ordinary vocations, so that the danger was averted.

Nor have I forgotten, Mr. Chairman, the terrible Sioux Indian war which swept over southwestern Minnesota in 1862, the most terrible Indian war in all the history of such warfare in this country. It came like a thunderclap from a clear sky. Our men were away at the front, battling for the Union, leaving their homes, their wives, their children unprotected. In that terrible holocaust of death, which was led on by Little Crow, more than 6,000 men, women, and children lost their lives. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to admit that many so-called educated and Christianized Indians forgot their education and their Christianity, and with bloody hands joined the wild Indians in that awful carnival of death. But at the same time I do not forget John Otherday and four or five other Christianized Indians, who by their warnings and by their efforts, made at the imminent danger of their own lives, saved more than 2,000 innocent persons—men, women, and children—from sharing the awful fate of their fellows. Mr. Chairman, I most strenuously maintain that all the appropriations in favor of sectarian schools and sectarian education are not worth as much as the lives of those people who were saved by those Indians so educated and so Christianized.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LINTON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the provisions of the bill and shall favor the amendment; and in taking this position I am true to the principles of a lifetime. Ever since I have been old enough to read the provisions of our Constitution I have believed, as I believe now and hope I shall ever believe, that church and state in this Government ought to be separated. Therefore I am in favor of this amendment, and hope that it will pass the House by a ringing vote. [Applause.] It is a violation of the spirit if not of the letter of our Constitution to appropriate money from the Treasury of the Government for sectarian purposes. Such a thing ought never to have been done, and it ought to be stopped as soon as possible. I appreciate and respect the spirit that seeks the wild and untamed children of the desert, the mountain, or the forest and lifts them by education into the responsibilities of citizenship, but that is the function of the church; let the churches do this work unaided by the General Government.

Mr. LINTON. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the minute allotted to me to send forward to the desk an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON]. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Michigan will accept the amendment, as his idea is the same as that entertained by myself, to provide accommodation for these children as speedily as possible in the schools owned and controlled by the United States Government.

I ask the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "one," after the word "million," in line 5, of page 49, and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. PEARSON. That simply makes the provision read instead of one million one hundred thousand, one million three hundred thousand dollars, and the difference will be sufficient to construct the schools necessary for these Indian children now in the contract schools, and the work can begin at once.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PEARSON. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. That section, the gentleman understands, does not cover any authority for building schools. This, as I understand, is only for support.

Mr. PEARSON. Under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON], the Secretary of the Interior is distinctly charged with that duty. This, the gentleman will understand, is an amendment to that amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LINTON. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER].

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily and unqualifiedly in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. The House and the country are to be congratulated on the fact that no gentleman has thus far risen in his place on this floor and advocated the principle of appropriating a single dollar for the maintenance of sectarian schools.

The only excuse for this appropriation is found in the contention that if it is not made these children will not be taken care of at all. That is the usual stalking horse which has been invoked in this and preceding Congresses to do service in debates on this subject; the fact still remains that while the Secretary of the Interior has sufficient authority and has full power under existing law to make necessary provisions for these children, practically nothing has been done thus far until this day and year of our Lord 1896 for taking care of these children in Government schools.

During the past year, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, only four sectarian schools, for which about $39,000 had previously been appropriated each year, were turned over to the Government. The entire reduction of appropriations for sectarian purposes made for this current year was only about $93,000, and of this $39,000 is accounted for by transfer of certain Protestant schools to the Government, and a reduction of about $50,000 was made in the cases of sectarian schools still receiving subsidies. Of the $370,796 expended in subsidies, $308,471 was paid to one church, while the great Protestant denominations, Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist, received only $600, the whole of this amount being paid to the Methodists.

Have the schools of these great denominations been closed? Are they doing less of good work than they did when receiving subsidies? Certainly not.

No intelligent person will claim that the work of these great churches or the great cause of education will be ever checked by withholding sectarian appropriations. On the contrary, all experience teaches that private contributions shrink with the prodigality of public aid.

The proposed amendment does not curtail appropriations. It simply gives them wise and proper direction and control. It works no hardship. Gentlemen seem content with a 20 per cent reduction each year, well knowing this 20 per cent will be expended for the same cause by the Government direct, but the proposed plan of making an annual reduction of 20 per cent will, at the end of three years, only do what my friend from Michigan proposes to do here now. The friends of sectarian appropriations offer to turn over each year to the Government 20 per cent of the total. Why not do it all at once? If it is right to reduce it by 20 per cent, why is it wrong to turn it all at once into Government channels?

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes of the time remaining to me to my colleague from New York [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not credit the gentleman on the other side who has offered this amendment and some of the gentlemen who have spoken upon it from a highly patriotic standpoint with the motives that they assume to themselves in this debate. The opposition here to the system which has prevailed for some years is confined now to the contract schools, which, according to the information given in this debate, are limited to one sect or to one church. As a member of that church, I suppose from the source and character of the opposition the Roman Catholic Church is intended, and as an American citizen, as devoted to my country and its institutions as any man on the floor of the House [applause], I may say that whether you do or do not appropriate the money for these schools, these children will be taken care of and educated, and they will be taken care of and educated by these very schools. [Applause.] That church and that sect has never undertaken a charge yet that has been abandoned or that did not end in a manner that was worthy of so great an organization and of its glorious mission; and it is too late now—it is too late in the day—to contend that, even if this great country shall withhold the pittance that was heretofore granted, that church will abandon her sacred trust in connection with the care and custody of these helpless children. [Applause.] So you need have no fear on that score.

But, my friends, I want you to pause a little while before you reverse the policy heretofore pursued or endeavor to enforce the principle that you will not enter into a contract with a school or an individual because that school or individual happens to be a representative of the Roman Catholic Church. That is exactly what you are doing. This bill appropriates certain moneys by which the Government is enabled to make certain contracts with certain schools for the care of the Indian children. Why, my friends, in the city of New York, in which I reside, and which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, if all the Catholic schools there were to turn their children out on the streets the other schools of New York are not roomy enough to educate or accommodate them, and the people of the city of New York would have to appropriate at least $3,000,000 annually to educate the Catholic children.

Something has been said here about the niggardliness of Catholics with respect to these Indian missions. Talk of the niggardliness of Catholics and their parsimony in contributions! Why, my dear sirs, they save in the city of New York, for the taxpayers of that city, at least $3,000,000 each year. And why? Because they take that money out of their own pockets every year, and with it educate their own children in their own schools, built by their own money, and supported entirely by their own contributions.

I am sorry that these questions should take this shape. I am sorry that gentlemen should enter into any discussion of this kind. The first thing a Catholic is taught is to love his country above all things on this earth. There are two precepts which he learns at his mother's knee, which are taught him in the Sunday school, in the church, and whispered in his ear on the deathbed: "Thou shalt love thy God above all things, and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And every man, black or white, civilized or savage, Christian or infidel, the world over, is the neighbor of a true Catholic. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTON. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCLACHLAN].

Mr. MCLACHLAN. Mr. Chairman, when the District appropriation bill was before the House the other day for discussion, I was surprised to learn that this Government had been in the habit of making large appropriations to institutions controlled by various sectarian denominations. I voted then to strike from the bill every appropriation to a sectarian institution of any kind, including one to a Protestant denomination of which I have the honor of being a member.

I have the satisfaction now of knowing that I acted then not only according to my own convictions of right, but that I have the approval of my constituents in so doing.

For the same reason that I opposed that bill I am opposed to the provisions of this bill as reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, appropriating more than a quarter of a million of dollars to the Indian schools under the special management and control of a sectarian denomination, and am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, directing this money to be expended by the Government in its own schools for the education of these Indian children.

To make the appropriation recommended by the committee would, in my judgment, be an unwarrantable disposition of public funds, a gross violation of the Constitution, and diametrically opposed to the principles of our Government.

Personally I make no war upon the religion of any man. On the contrary I join with all good American citizens in strenously contending for the principle that accords to every man, woman, and child the right to worship God according to the dictates of his or her own conscience, but I contend no less earnestly for the principle that in this Government of ours there must ever be a complete separation of church and state.

That this principle has often been violated in the past by appropriations similar to the one now sought to be passed through this Congress is no argument why it should be again violated, though the custom has even become venerable with age.

The pages of history are darkened by the records of the fatal results of just such legislation as that proposed by this bill, and the same pages abound in warnings to all the nations of the earth to sacredly avoid all legislation for the special benefit of any sect or denomination.

Even in these later days the ominous warning comes from the neighboring Dominion of Canada, now threatened with war and disruption because of the formidable effort of the general Government to compel the Province of Manitoba to set aside a portion of the public revenue for the benefit of sectarian schools.

My ancestors centuries ago gave up their lives among the rugged hills of old Scotland, fighting for civil and religious liberty and the absolute separation of church and state, and their descendants have never wavered to this hour in their loyalty to the principle for which they died.

As a descendant of that race, with a right to be heard in this Legislature of the greatest Government ever framed by man, I can not refrain from raising my voice in protest against the un-American legislation proposed by this bill as it comes from the committee and urging you, my countrymen, to support the thoroughly American amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LINTON. How much more time have we remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has two minutes remaining.

Mr. LINTON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. I use the one minute allotted me simply to withdraw the amendment that I offered, increasing this appropriation, in order to make sure that these schools should not be closed. I withdraw the amendment, because I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH], who says that these schools will not be closed, whether the Government appropriates or does not appropriate one cent for their support. In that event I shake hands with him, and am very glad thus to terminate this delicate and disagreeable discussion. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes on each side. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has already consented to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for this debate be extended ten minutes, five minutes on a side. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTON. I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much time does the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LINTON. The remaining time, about six minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I have no feeling about this matter as a partisan or as a sectarian. I do not belong to any church, although my education is that of a Protestant and my practice that of adherence thereto. I have no prejudice against the Catholic Church. I represent a large Catholic population, and one of the very best portions of the population of my Congressional district are members of the Catholic Church. Within the borders of my district is an institution belonging to that church, one of the first of the character west of the Alleghany Mountains. It has sent out some of the very best men that have gone from my section of Ohio. They received their education there. I speak, therefore, from the standpoint of an independent, unprejudiced citizen of my country. I believe the time has come when we can settle this question now and here, and to the entire satisfaction of the people of the country. It is not wise that there should be in this House and upon this appropriation bill an annual contention that more or less drags in that unfortunate subject of discussion, of religious controversy and religious contention. I do not desire that anything shall take place that shall lessen the opportunities of education of the Indian children of the country. I quite agree with the gentleman from Minnesota that there is no element to which we must look more hopefully for the ultimate settlement of the Indian question than to the education of the Indian children of the country. Under all the circumstances the Government is pledged to their support and to their education; but now the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] will not in my opinion lessen the opportunity.

I do not concur in the figures stated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] that it will be necessary to appropriate $60,000 each to twenty plants for the education of 4,072 children. I do not believe that anything like this number of children will be found in the hands of the General Government for the purposes of education if this amendment is adopted. I quite concur with the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH], who has spoken so warmly and so enthusiastically for the church of which he is an honored member. That church never has failed yet to do anything which it undertook to do in this country in a matter of this kind. Other churches might very well copy that church in its pertinacity and determination to achieve the objects of its plans and purposes. So I say there would not be left 4,000 children upon the hands of the Government, for the Catholic Church doubtless would educate as many of them as it could, at least under the circumstances surrounding them. I do not think it will take $60,000 to establish a plant, as it is called, sufficient for the education of 400 children. There are in the town in which I live more than four times that number of children, and the entire construction of schoolhouses in that town has not cost the half of $60,000.

So I think that is an exaggerated statement, and very greatly exaggerated; and I believe that if we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan we shall not seriously for any considerable length of time impair the efficiency of the education of the children, and we shall settle this vexed question. I do not believe that the Protestant churches of this country will be benefited by this agitation. I do not believe that the Catholic churches of this country desire this agitation. I do not believe the Catholic churches of this country would press the matter of this appropriation; certainly they would not do it in the light of the fact that it is a constant matter of agitation and aggravation between various communities of the country. I would like to see this question gotten rid of. It is not a question of politics.

The question of a man's religion, the question of the church to which he belongs, the question of his belief or nonbelief, is not a proper question of American politics; and I am willing to try and do a great deal to settle and get rid of any question that is constantly bringing this sort of discussion into the politics of my country. [Applause.] I believe the occasion is ripe; I believe the opportunity is here, and I believe no harm will be done.

Suppose for the first or second year that the full facilities that are offered by these contract schools of sectarian bodies shall not quite be reached, yet there will be better schools than many of us attended. Better, perhaps, than the one I attended for years and years, the building of which did not cost, outside of the labor done by the neighbors, $25 in money. Therefore I am in favor of this amendment. I believe everything will be accomplished. I do not criticise the committee. They have gone forward on the line that was marked out years ago. They are not to be criticised; but the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union have the right to go a little further than we went before and put an end to this whole question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the proposed amendment is subject to the point of order which was reserved, but before asking a ruling on that I wish to say a few words upon the merits of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that gentlemen have overlooked in the discussion of this question the history of the building up of the contract system. Now, gentlemen of the committee, no single church, no single creed, has been knocking at the door of the Government to obtain contracts for the education of Indian children. They did not come to us originally asking us to make these contracts. The proposition emanated, gentlemen of the committee, from that great soldier and statesman, a former President of the United States, Gen. U. S. Grant. [Loud applause.]

That policy which was entered upon in 1870 has been the policy of the Government from that day until two years ago. Various sects have been encouraged to expend very large sums of money in preparing to educate properly Indian children. It so happens that the Catholic Church has expended more money than any other. They have obtained, in their own way, something like a million and a half of dollars which they have put into plants throughout the States and the Territories to educate these children. They have been encouraged from time to time by the Commissioner and by the Secretary in these expenditures. They have enlarged them. They have put more money into them from year to year; so that it became the established policy of the Government to maintain these schools; and no suggestion was ever made to the contrary until two or three years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me if it is deemed to be wise on the part of the Government to change this policy, to contract no longer with sectarian or individual schools for the education of Indian children, that policy should not be changed in a minute. These schools should not be stricken down at one fell swoop. We should go at this thing moderately and wisely. The Fifty-third Congress, with that idea in view, I assume, provided for a reduction in the amount to be appropriated for contract schools, and made the further declaration that it was the policy of the Government at the earliest date practicable to do away entirely with contract schools. The Secretary of the Interior was asked to investigate the matter and report how soon these contract schools could be wisely dispensed with, and he has reported that he is satisfied it could be done without detriment to the service in five or six years; and, following that suggestion, your committee has reduced the number that can be contracted for.

Mr. WATSON of Ohio. I will ask the gentleman have you any doubt if this amendment should be carried that these children will be educated?

Mr. SHERMAN. The question is not whether they will be educated or not. It is, Will the United States educate these children; will Congress see that education is provided, or accept a too generous offer by a single denomination. I think that the Government of the United States is too great a Government to accept charity of any church. [Loud applause.] I think we are able to educate the wards of the Government. Now, I want to say, inasmuch as the gentleman has interrupted me there, that I believe the Government should sustain any sect, I do not care what it is, who will reach down and attempt to shed light into the minds of the dusky little wards of the nation. I believe that it should reach out and aid them as far as it can, and having encouraged them year by year for a quarter of a century, it should not in a single moment strike them down, either on account of the children or on account of the church. The Catholic Church has some rights. I am not a Catholic. I am not like my friend from Ohio—a member of no church; I am a member of a Protestant church; but I do say that to me no single creed can point the way to heaven; I do say that any creed is better than no creed, and any one of the different creeds is better than no creed. [Loud applause.] The idea is not, I will say to my friend, to assist any church. We are not trying to assist any church; we are trying to educate these children; but the idea seems to prevail here that this appropriation is for and will be used for the purpose of teaching some particular catechism to the children.

It is not for anything of the kind, let me say. It is to teach them the multiplication table, to teach them how to sew, how to plow, how to plant, and how to reap. That is mainly what this money is to be used for, and they are taught not merely the rudiments, not merely that twice two are four, but the other practical things that are necessary to make them citizens. I think, and the committee after looking the matter over carefully thought, that if these contract schools are to be done away with the wise policy to pursue was that which the former Congress had declared to be the policy of this Government—to eliminate these contract schools gradually and in such a manner as to give us time to provide other means for the education of these Indian children. We can not build schools for 4,000 Indian children in a minute or in a week. Some gentleman suggested a while ago that schools have been built in some localities inside of months. That is undoubtedly so, but we can not build schools for these Indian children scattered all over this vast territory in the same length of time that schools could be built in the district of my friend from Michigan where everything is at hand.

To supersede these contract schools will take time, and if you strike down the existing schools at one fell swoop you will leave 4,000 Indian children without means of education unless, indeed, you accept the charity of a church, and I hope never to live to see the time when this great country will accept the charity of any church, no matter how generously it may be offered. [Applause.] I repeat that unless you make this appropriation these schools will be struck down. Now, gentlemen of the committee, do you want to do that? I do not believe you do. I think we all want to rise in these matters above partisanship and above sects. Let us be men. Let us be fair-minded and manly. Let us do what we believe is right, and when we have done that, go gome to our constituents and tell them what we have done, and I believe that every member here will be sustained in taking that position. Gentlemen need not fear in any particular district—for these considerations do come in occasionally, whether we want them to or not—gentlemen need not fear that in any particular district anybody will be stricken down unless he votes in a particular way on a particular measure.

The fair-minded men in every district are in the majority, and, in my judgment, they will sustain any member of this committee or of this House who, with honesty of purpose, exercising the best judgment the Almighty has given him, votes for such measures as will most surely and most quickly promote the public weal and the public welfare, and the public weal and the public welfare depend in a measure upon educating these natural wards of the Nation and lifting them up from the plane where they now are to a higher plane, where they will be absorbed into the body politic and become good citizens of the Republic. I think that is all I have to say on this subject, Mr. Chairman. I hope that the Committee on Indian Affairs, following out the declared policy of the Government, will be sustained, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] will be voted down. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment offered by Mr. LINTON was again read as above.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SHERMAN. What about the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the proposed amendment changes existing law.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the point of order comes too late.

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserved the point of order until after the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved; but at any rate the amendment was not in order until after the debate was closed, so the point of order is in time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was about to make the point that the amendment could not be offered during the debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserved the point of order, so there can be no question about that. It seems to me that there can be no question, either, that this amendment changes existing law. The existing law is as plain as the nose on anybody's face. In the appropriation bill of last year it was declared what the policy of the Government in this matter was to be. Now, to change from that policy is to change the existing law, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LINTON] is not in violation of that declared policy of the Government I do not know what it means.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation of last year declared the use that the money there appropriated should be put to. The appropriation bill of this year contains a proviso which changes the provisions of last year by providing that—

The foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment authorizes the Secretary to make certain rules and regulations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That power he has by law. That can not be held to have the slightest effect on the legal character of this amendment. I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs would probably be wise to permit the vote to be taken upon this amendment rather than upon a proposition to strike out these appropriations entirely.

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman of the committee must first insist on the point of order being disposed of.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have said all that is necessary upon the point of order. It can not be claimed that this amendment is new legislation or that it changes existing law on the ground that it confers upon the Secretary of the Interior the power to make rules and regulations for the expenditure of this money.

Mr. SHERMAN. The law as it exists to-day permits the Secretary to make contracts with sectarian schools. The amendment prevents his making such contracts. There can not be any question, it seems to me, upon this point of order. The law before the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole permits the Secretary to make contracts to a limited extent with sectarian schools; the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan proposes to prevent the making of such contracts altogether.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] can be answered in a single suggestion. Suppose we did not appropriate any money at all now. Would there be any "existing law" to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make contracts for the next fiscal year? There is the whole question. What is the use of making a proposition which a boy 5 years old knows has not any pertinency or propriety? [Laughter.] That provision in a former appropriation bill which has ceased to operate simply limited or controlled the expenditure of that particular appropriation. The whole thing is completely illustrated by saying that the provision in that law is dead and inoperative unless there is a new appropriation of money.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if there is an appropriation of one cent that law is operative so far as it goes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; not at all. That law ceased when that appropriation was expended.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. If that is so, we have no right to make any appropriation at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes, we have. There is an appropriation, and a good deal of that money is unexpended. The Committee of the Whole has no right to change existing law now upon the hypothesis of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears that the Clerk has not read the whole amendment, which has been somewhat modified since it was first sent to the desk. The amendment will be read as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 49, after the word "Alaska," in line 8, strike out the proviso down to and including "95," in line 14, and insert the following:

"And it is hereby declared that it is the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering said appropriation as to carry out said object; and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any part of said fund for education in sectarian schools."

The CHAIRMAN. The law to which the Chair has been referred, in the appropriation bill for the current year, relates simply by its terms to an appropriation for that year:

The Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts, but only with present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used for the year 1895; and the Government shall as early as possible make provision for the education of Indian children in Government schools: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to the public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for.

Now, the point is made that the amendment is simply a limitation on the appropriation in the pending paragraph. The Chair is somewhat in doubt whether the latter portion of the amendment, providing for the making of rules and regulations, does not go further than simply limiting the appropriation. But construing the whole of the amendment together, the Chair is of opinion that the amendment simply limits the use of the appropriation and is not obnoxious to the point of order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. [Applause.] The question is on the adoption of the amendment. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, there were—ayes 93, noes 64.

So the amendment was adopted. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of erecting, constructing, and completing suitable school buildings for an Indian industrial school at or near Rapid City, in the State of South Dakota, which buildings are to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon plans and specifications to be approved by him, $25,000; out of which sum the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase not exceeding 160 acres of land near Rapid City, at a cost of not exceeding $3,000, to be immediately available, upon which said buildings shall be built.

Mr. SHERMAN. On behalf of the committee, I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000 for the purpose of erecting additional buildings for the Mount Pleasant Indian School, at Mount Pleasant, Mich.; namely, $30,000 for the erection of a girls' dormitory and dining hall, $10,000 for the erection of a schoolhouse: Provided, That upon the completion of said buildings, the Secretary of the Interior shall make no further contract for the education of Indian children in sectarian schools in the State of Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of 150 pupils at the training school at Cherokee, N. C., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,300, and for general repairs and minor improvements, $1,000; in all, $27,350.

Mr. PEARSON. I move to amend by inserting after the words "one thousand dollars," in line 14, as just read, the words "and for the completion of the new school building, including sewerage and plumbing, $2,000."

With reference to this amendment I wish to say that an appropriation of $3,000 was made by the last Congress for this building. It is now incomplete; there are no sewerage arrangements and no bathing arrangements. These are considered exceedingly important. I trust that the Committee on Indian Affairs will allow this amendment to go through.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., at $167 per annum each, $50,100; for general repairs and improvements, $2,500; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,700; in all, $54,300.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," on page 53, in line 21, the following:

"Provided, That from the unexpended balance of any appropriation for this school there shall be paid to any person, firm, or corporation who furnished goods and supplies for such school during the incumbency of Horace R. Chase, superintendent, such amount as shall be found due them by the accounting officers as now provided by law."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I caught the reading of that correctly I shall be compelled to make the point of order upon it; but I will examine it while the gentleman from Nebraska is addressing the committee, and then determine.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Chairman, the objection raised by the gentleman from Illinois to the paragraph on page 47, which embodies the same matter included in the amendment now offered, has been eliminated by the striking out of the provision that the claim should be passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior, but provides that it shall be passed upon by the accounting officer of the Government as now provided by law.

Section 2 of Rule XXI provides that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill for an expenditure not previously authorized by law.

Expenditures made by this school were authorized by law, and the amendment as now presented, in my judgment, is not in contravention of the rule under which the gentleman from Illinois made the point of order on the paragraph appearing on page 47.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I do insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pierre, S. Dak., at $167 each per annum, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $1,000; in all, $27,550.

Mr. PICKLER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 24, on page 55, after the word "dollars," add: "For the construction and furnishing of bath rooms for said school, $1,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., at $167 per annum each, $16,700; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,200; for general repairs and in improvements, $500; in all, $18,400.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment that I send to the desk, to come in this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 5, page 56, after the word "improvements," the word "twenty," and at the end of said line change the word "eighteen" to twenty: so that the clause will read "for general repairs and improvements $2,500; in all $20,400."

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to have the gentleman make some explanation as to that amendment. What is the object?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. We need an enlargement of the school plant there.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the only nonreservation school in Minnesota, and gathers children from all parts of the State. It is unable to supply now an abiding place for them, owing to the crowded condition of the buildings.

The superintendent of Indian affairs is in favor of this increase. It is imperatively demanded, and I trust that it will not be objected to. It is only an increase of $2,000 over the amount appropriated by the bill.

I ask a vote upon the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the amendment that was adopted a few minutes ago in regard to the bathroom at Pierre, S. Dak., I desire to have read in my time, or have leave to print, an article relating to the water supply there. As the committee seems to be in a hurry, I ask leave to print it as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] asks leave to print an article in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to ask how long it is?

Mr. PICKLER. It makes two printed pages of a pamphlet which I hold in my hand.

There was no objection.

The article referred to by Mr. PICKLER is as follows:

Engineer Fassett has presented the following paper by Dr. D. W. Robinson, of Pierre, president of the State board of health, descriptive of the artesian well at the Indian industrial school in that city, and asked that the same be spread upon the minutes of this convention:

WELL AT THE PIERRE INDIAN SCHOOL.

This well is 1,191 feet in depth. Measurement shows a flow of water more than 800 gallons per minute. At the exit from the pipe the temperature is 93° F. The pressure by closed test is about 175 pounds. Gas constantly escapes with the water, which readily ignites at the end of the pipe and on the water as it flows from the ditch several yards from the well. This was found to be methane or natural gas. I quote from Prof. A. M. Wright, a teacher in chemistry and an expert, who spent some weeks in investigations here. He says:

"The water that flowed from the well showed a flow in excess of 800 gallons per minute. The temperature, taken several times at different times in the day, gave a uniform temperature of 93°. These tests were very satisfactory, and showed a remarkable well. But the further test for gas was the most satisfactory and remarkable. It was well known that gas came from the well in quite considerable quantities, but whether it could be readily separated from the water and thus made of practical use seemed to be questioned. A small gasometer of about 2 cubic feet capacity was made. Water from the well was discharged under the gas holder through a three-quarter inch pipe, when the holder immediately began to fill. Several tests were made, and it was found that the quantity of gas held freely in suspension in the water equaled one-sixth the volume of water, thus showing approximately 25,000 cubic feet of gas daily—a very valuable property in a well in a country where a fair quality of soft coal costs from $8.50 to $9 per ton. I would say that the tests found the gas especially excellent for heating purposes, being rather deficient in carbon for lighting purposes; the candlepower I should not estimate higher than 12 candle. I did not make a chemical analysis of the water, but I can speak in the most satisfactory terms as to the delight one experiences in bathing in the waters of this well. I never had baths more delightful or invigorating."

Professor Wright is president of the Waterville (N. Y.) Gas Light Company, and his conclusions are of special value, especially in so far as they relate to the gas.

In quality the water is known as mineral saline, so called because it contains large quantities of salts of sodium. The water of this well is distinctly of this class. In this, as in all other waters of the same class, sodium chloride (common salt) is largely in excess. Analysis so far made shows this water to be the strongest yet analyzed, with probably two or three exceptions. The most celebrated waters of this class come from the St. Catherine well of Ontario, Canada, and from its counterpart in Europe, the widely known Kreutznack spring in Prussia; in the United States the Hawthorne, Congress, Kissingen, and Saratoga seltzer springs of New York. There are a number of artesian wells more or less celebrated for their medicinal qualities. Among the better known are the Ballston artesian well, Saratoga, N. Y.; Livingston artesian well, Alabama; La Fayette and Lodi artesian wells, of Indiana, and many others. Some of these are utilized for baths and medical use internally. Congress, Saratoga seltzer, Carlsbad, and many others are bottled and sold everywhere by druggists.

In this connection I submit the analysis of Prof. E. T. Eaton, chemist of the Minnesota State Dairy and Food Commission:

Total solids per gallon at 110° F	202.50
Silicae	1.53
Alumnia	Trace.
Sodium carbonate	31.31
Calcium carbonate	5.40
Magnesium carbonate	6.57
Sodium chloride	133.76
Sodium sulphate	4.33
Iron	Trace.

In commenting on the analysis Professor Eaton says: "The solids in solution are more than double the amount in Yellowstone Park Springs, about four times more in quantity than in Vichy, France, and Hot Springs, Colo., and twenty-five times the amount found in the Hot Springs of Arkansas."

Prof. James H. Shepard, of Brookings, also made an analysis, which, although qualitative, seems to correspond with that given by Professor Eaton. Professor Shepard found:

Total solids in tests	3.4888 grains.
Carbonic acid	Small quantity.
Silicae	Medium quantity.
Sulphuric acid	Trace.
Hydrochloric acid	Very large quantity.
Iron	Trace.
Alumnia	Trace.
Calcium	Small quantity.
Magnesium	Small quantity.
Sodium	Very large quantity.

The specimen sent Professor Shepard was carefully confined in a jug immediately after procuring it, which may account for the large amount of volatile matter found. In referring to the examination Professor Shepard said: "When the jug was opened an inflammable gas was given off. As it was burning it gave the flame of menthane, or natural gas, which it probably is. In the work for basis, small quantities of calcium, magnesium, aluminum, and iron were found. The principal base is sodium. The acids appearing in small quantities are carbonic, silicic, and sulphuric. The principal acid is hydrochloric. This water is not identical with other artesian waters that have come to me. This water has a residue of 3.4888 parts per thousand. Most of the other artesian waters have a residue of about 2.4 parts per thousand. I should not be surprised if this water developed medicinal qualities, especially when used as baths, although there is no reason why it may not be used for drinking purposes."

Medicinally, the class of waters to which the water of this well belongs is used internally, and in suitable cases with good results. They are in very general use, and are of special benefit in all catarrhal diseases of the mucous surfaces, especially of the stomach and intestines, and also in congestive disorders of the liver, spleen, abdominal and pelvic organs. When they are thermal or hot, as is the case in the waters of this well, their medicinal value is much increased. There are few, if any, baths more valuable. Elimination is increased both by baths and internal use, hence their curative effect on chronic disorders of the organs of elimination, such as the kidneys and skin. For the same reason they are of marked benefit in rheumatism and other chronic diseases where a more perfect elimination of the effete materials of the body is needed.

With a view to test the qualities of the waters of this well a temporary bath house with three tubs was erected. One of these tubs was at the disposal of those afflicted by disease. Quite a number of cases of different diseases of a chronic character were subjected to treatment, both by baths and of water internally. It was my privilege to have medical supervision of these cases, and although they were comparatively few in number and the facilities insufficient to warrant final conclusion, yet the results were satisfactory beyond my expectation. With proper facilities for bathing and a thorough supervision of its medicinal application, the water of this well will probably rank among the best of its class.

Besides the experiments above referred to, Professor Davis, superintendent of Indian industrial school, had constructed a plunge bath of about 60 feet in diameter. This was done for the purpose of ascertaining the effect upon the afflicted among the pupils in the school. The bath was constructed so that water passed quite rapidly into and out of the bath. It could scarcely be considered a thermal bath, however, as the temperature was materially lowered. Under date of December 14, 1893, Superintendent Davis, in reply to a note of inquiry from me, says: "In reply to your inquiries regarding the healing properties of the artesian well at this school I will say that we have in many instances used it for the various disorders, such as skin diseases, sore eyes, etc., with which Indian children are so generally afflicted, and always with the most gratifying results. After bathing a few days the sores heal and the skin becomes smooth and clear. We are so satisfied of the curative qualities of the water that we prescribe it for all such cases."

For purposes of irrigation the water seems well adapted. During the past season tests were made upon small fields of both oats and corn. Superintendent Davis has this to say in reference to the matter of irrigation: "The well was drilled for the purpose of irrigating the large school garden, for which use the water seems well adapted, as the yield of crops was very largely increased wherever the irrigation was applied."

These are, in so far as I can ascertain, the principal features of interest regarding this remarkable artesian well.

Further tests and observations may modify these conclusions, but I do not think very materially.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase: Provided, That funds herein and heretofore appropriated for construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigating may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be expended in open market: Provided further, That purchase in open market shall, as far as practicable, be made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, when practicable, arrange for the manufacture by Indians upon the reservation of shoes, clothing, leather, harness, and wagons.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59, line 5, after the word "wagons," add "Provided further, That all supplies purchased under the provisions hereof may be delivered at New York City, N. Y., Chicago, Ill., and Omaha, Nebr., under the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall have to raise the point of order on that amendment that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 51, line 15, the word "seven" should be changed to "nine." An amendment was made appropriating $2,000 additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment indicated by the gentleman will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the first page of the bill, in line 10, it reads:

For pay of fifty-four agents of Indian affairs.

It should be "fifty-six." Fifty-six are provided for. I ask that the word "four" be changed to "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, that completes the bill, except the matter of the Ogden Land Company claim, and as there will be some little discussion on that, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 147) granting a pension to George W. Chase, late private Company B, Twenty-second New York Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 1785) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the W. H. Wallace Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Eldorado, Kans., and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Jane Dulany;

A bill (H. R. 4960) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897;

A bill (H. R. 1605) granting a pension to Anna Kelley;

A bill (H. R. 4321) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4153) to grant the Fort Smith and Western Coal Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 121) calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information in relation to the harbor of Manitowoc, in the State of Wisconsin.

And then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Black Warrior River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relating to the removal of certain restrictions upon the sale of the allotted lands of the Puyallup Indians in the State of Washington—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (House Con. Res. No. 2) to print 5,000 copies of the Second Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 494); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (House Con. Res. No. 9) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to print documents relating to the fur seal, salmon fisheries, and other matters pertaining to the Territory of Alaska, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 495); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House No. 22, reported in lieu thereof a joint resolution (H. Res. 126) to provide for a uniform system of numbering public documents, accompanied by a report (No. 496); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 65) to print the annual report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 498); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (House Con. Res. No. 8) directing the Secretary of the Interior to deliver certain copies of the Revised Statutes in force in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 499); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (House Con. Res. No. 3) providing for the printing of 8,000 additional copies of the Eighth Special Report of the Commissioner of Labor, relating to the housing of the working people, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 500); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House, No. 75, reported in lieu thereof the joint resolution (H. Res. 127) to provide for the printing of a digest of the laws and decisions of the courts relating to war claims, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 501); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs: The bill (H. R. 1897) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser. (Report No. 490.)

By Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

The bill (H. R. 5258) granting an honorable discharge to John B. Besler. (Report No. 491.)

The bill (H. R. 1567) authorizing the President of the United States to place Col. David Stewart Gordon, Sixth United States Cavalry, a brigadier-general, on the retired list of the United States Army. (Report No. 492.)

By Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims: The bill (H. R. 1030) to execute the finding of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of John J. Shipman. (Report No. 493.)

By Mr. WILSON of New York, from the Committee on Naval Affairs: The bill (H. R. 572) for the relief of James Duke. (Report No. 497.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the followings titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 6442) to take the United States Government out of the banking business, refund the national debt, reform the currency, and to improve our banking system—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 6443) to amend the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6444) to create a court of pension appeals—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BREWSTER: A bill (H. R. 6445) to amend the tariff act of August 27, 1894, and to protect the silver-mining industry—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. UPDEGRAFF: A bill (H. R. 6446) to abolish the fee system as to United States district attorneys and marshals and substitute salaries, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 6447) to prohibit the collection of special liquor taxes from persons other than those who are duly authorized by State laws to traffic in intoxicating liquors—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 6448) to appropriate $100,000 for sinking artesian wells in the eastern portion of the State of Colorado—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 6449) to grant land to the State of Alabama for the use of the North Alabama Agricultural School, at Athens, Ala.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 6450) to amend an act granting to the Northern Mississippi Railway right of way through certain Indian reservations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 6451) to quiet title and possession with respect to certain located surveyed but unconfirmed private-land claims in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DAYTON: A bill (H. R. 6452) to establish engineering experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under act of July 2, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 6498) authorizing the town of New Decatur to construct and maintain a pontoon bridge across the Tennessee River at the town of New Decatur—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DOVENER: A bill (H. R. 6499) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894," amending the third proviso thereof—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 6500) for the better regulation of freight and passenger rates on railroads in the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California: A resolution (House Res. No. 178) directing the Committee on Ways and Means to investigate the question of Japanese manufactures and importations—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SORG: A memorial of the general assembly of Ohio, concerning the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people of each State—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were referred as follows:

The bill (H. R. 6157) for the relief of Paul Leary—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 6182) to remove charge of desertion from record of John Mander—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 5982) granting a pension to Elizabeth Roberts, of Fort Scott, Kans.—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 6142) granting a pension to David M. Fuller—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 5980) for benefit of James Blackburn—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BERRY: A bill (H. R. 6453) for the benefit of Ellen Steevers, of Covington, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON (by request): A bill (H. R. 6454) for the relief of Mary Bliss, mother of Irvin E. Bliss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLSON: A bill (H. R. 6455) granting a pension to Nancy Roberts, of Manchester, Clay County, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6456) for the relief of J. N. Brafford—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6457) for the relief of J. L. Brassfield—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6458) for the relief of John M. and A. M. Elder—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 6459) granting an increase of pension to George W. Garrison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DE ARMOND (by request): A bill (H. R. 6460) for the relief of James B. Martin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 6461) for the relief of Freeman W. Peverly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARDY: A bill (H. R. 6462) for the relief of Richard F. Parker—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6463) granting a pension to Henry T. Hatfield—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6464) granting a pension to John S. Dukate, late assistant surgeon, Fifty-third Regiment Indiana Veteran Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 6465) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Olivia Betton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON: A bill (H. R. 6466) to increase the pension of George V. Barnard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6467) granting a pension to George L. Barner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6468) to increase the pension of Andrew R. Ladd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 6469) granting compensation to Joseph Dawson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 6470) granting a pension to Winnie M. Crissey—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEISENRING: A bill (H. R. 6471) for the renewal of letters patent No. 210964—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. LEFEVER: A bill (H. R. 6472) granting a pension to Olive M. Lewis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS (by request): A bill (H. R. 6473) for the relief of James Clark Smith—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAHON (by request): A bill (H. R. 6474) for the relief of Recknagel & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky (by request): A bill (H. R. 6475) for the relief of William W. Burns—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MILLER of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 6476) for the relief of Rudolph Staats—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OWENS: A bill (H. R. 6477) for the relief of Dr. D. N. Porter—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6478) granting a pension to L. A. Slade—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6479) to increase the pension of Alexander Williamson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6480) granting a pension to J. W. Vance—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6481) for the relief of Mrs. Emily Oldham—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PICKLER (by request): A bill (H. R. 6482) for the relief of Joseph B. McCooey—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6483) granting increase of pension to Thomas D. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 6484) for the relief of the estate of John H. Peck, late of Burlington, Vt.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SORG: A bill (H. R. 6485) to remove the charge of desertion against Hiram B. Bell, private Company F, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STAHLE: A bill (H. R. 6486) to correct the military record of William J. Becanan, Company E, One hundred and ninety-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WARNER: A bill (H. R. 6487) for the relief of Moses M. Longley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6488) for the relief of John B. Ford—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6489) to grant pension to Samuel L. Busick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 6490) for the relief of Thomas W. White—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 6491) for relief of Mary Oulahan, widow of Richard Oulahan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 6492) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the naval force of the United States—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6493) to increase the pension of Elizabeth L. Larrabee, widow of Col. C. H. Larrabee, late of the Twenty-fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 6494) granting a pension to Margaret Brennan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TYLER (by request): A bill (H. R. 6495) granting an increase of pension to Robert Selden—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 6496) for relief of Ben S. Hamilton—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CONNOLLY: A bill (H. R. 6497) granting a pension to William C. Estill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARHAM: Petition of citizens of Humboldt and Trinity counties, Cal.; also petition of Santa Rosa Grange, California, asking protection to agricultural staples by export bounty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOWERS: Petition of citizens of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the passage of an export bounty bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also petition of citizens of Hollister, Cal., for the relief of book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BROWN: Petition of citizens of Chattanooga, Tenn., favoring the Stone bill, restricting immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BRUMM: Four petitions of citizens of Quakake, Pa., protesting against the sectarian appropriations of the Indian appropriation bill, and urging the passage of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Camp No. 74, Patriotic Order Sons of America; also petition of Camp No. 578, Patriotic Order Sons of America; also petition of Camp No. 264, Patriotic Order Sons of America, in favor of the Stone bill, restricting immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. CANNON: Papers relating to the claim of Mary Bliss, mother of Irvin E. Bliss, for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHICKERING: Petition of Rev. U. M. Babcock, of Watson, N. Y., against the Sunday-observance bill (H. R. 167)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COFFIN: Petition of the South Washington Citizens' Association, relating to the destruction of garbage at the foot of South Capitol street—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of South Washington Citizens' Association, urging the appropriation of a sufficient sum of money to arch over the James Creek Canal open sewer, located in southwest Washington—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, protest of the South Washington Citizens' Association, against change of route of a street railway company and urging the construction of the proposed bridge across the Eastern Branch—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COOK of Wisconsin: Petition and papers of William S. Straight, containing names of 175 citizens of Montello and Marquette counties, Wis., asking for an amendment to section 2 of House bill No. 5381, so that if water is allowed to flow from the Wisconsin River through the Fox River the time for such flow of water shall be limited between November 1 and May 1 of each year; also asking for the removal of Grand River locks from said Fox River, they being unnecessary for navigation and drainage to farm lands above said locks—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Remonstrance of citizens of the township of Fulton, Rock County, Wis., against sectarian appropriations of public funds; and petition for submission of a constitutional amendment forbidding such appropriations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COX: Petition of various churches of Spring Hill, Tenn., for the relief of book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COWEN: Petition for the relief of John Biemiller, for certain property seized and consumed by the armies of the United States during the late civil war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CRISP: Petition of the American Tribune Soldiers' Colony Company of Fitzgerald, Ga., praying for liberal appropriations for the improvement of the Ocmulgee River, in the State of Georgia—to the Committee on River and Harbors.

By Mr. CRUMP: Protest of William S. Bellows, against the passage of House bill No. 4566—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions adopted by the Paint, Oil, and Varnish Club of New York, praying for the passage of a general bankruptcy law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Messrs. H. D. Porter & Co., protesting against the passage of House bill No. 4566, relating to second-class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CURTIS of New York: Fourteen petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Johnstown, Charlton, Wagman, Ridge, Rensselaer Falls, St. Lawrence County, Gansevoort, Canton, Ogdensburg, Norwood, West Galway, Parishville, Oliversville, Hermon, and Morley, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, fourteen petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Johnstown, Charlton, Wagman, Ridge, Rensselaer Falls, Gansevoort, Canton, Ogdensburg, Norwood, West Galway, Parishville, Oliversville, Hermon, St. Lawrence County, and Morley, N. Y., against the sale of beer to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, resolutions adopted at a mass meeting held at Flackville, N. Y., January 26, 1896, protesting against the persecutions of Armenians by the Sultan of Turkey—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a remonstrance of 75 residents of Saratoga Springs, against appropriating public moneys for sectarian undertakings—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of George W. Garrison, of Pittsburg, Pa., for increase of pension, to accompany House bill No. 6459—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DE ARMOND: Petition and papers in support of claim of Freeman W. Peverly for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Memorial of a mass meeting of citizens of Amesville, Ohio, signed by E. A. Smith, moderator, and T. E. Blandon, secretary, praying for action of Congress in behalf of the Armenians—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HAINER of Nebraska: Petition of Memorial Post, No. 151, Grand Army of the Republic, of Shickley, Nebr.; also, petition of H. J. Coats and other ex-Union soldiers of Pleasant Hill, Saline County, Nebr., praying for a service pension and also a pension for Union ex-prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HANLY: Evidence to accompany House bill No. 4190, for the relief of J. D. Armstrong—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of Champion Council, No. 8, Daughters of Liberty, of Pennsylvania, in favor of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Resolutions adopted at the sixteenth annual meeting of the National Farmers' Alliance, held in Chicago December 18, 1895, pledging its influence exclusively for the present to secure the passage of the antioption bill by the United States Congress—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Gowanda and North Java, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Gowanda and North Java, N. Y., against the sale of spirituous liquors to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. JENKINS: Resolutions of George C. Ginty Post, No. 183, Grand Army of the Republic, of Cadott, Wis., praying Congress to recognize the Cubans as belligerents—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. KENDALL: Papers relating to the claim of Miss Mary Sheaver, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LACEY: Petition of J. H. Wolsey and 20 others; also, petition of John Hillman and 25 others; also, petition of J. O. Sword and 12 others; also, petition of C. C. Leonard and 22 others, all of Oklahoma, asking for the passage of the free-home bill—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of Phil. Kearny Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, protesting against bills to remove charges of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAYTON: Resolutions of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, asking Congress to appropriate a sufficient sum of money and adopt the necessary measures to insure the publication and preservation of the records and papers of the Continental Congress, and comprising official documents relating to the Revolutionary period—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LEISENRING: Petition of a number of citizens of Luzerne County, Pa., asking for the passage of a bill to inspect immigrants by United States consuls—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. LEWIS: Paper to accompany House bill No. 6422, in relation to the claim of John Rogers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill No. 6423, relating to the claim of Edward F. Gilkey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LINTON: Petition of citizens of Watrousville, Mich., for the passage of joint resolution (H. Res. 11), to amend the Constitution of the United States, and prohibiting appropriations to institutions under ecclesiastical control—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: Paper to accompany a joint resolution providing jail accommodations for Federal prisoners in the northern district of Georgia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOUD: Resolution of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, relating to the naval training station at San Francisco, Cal.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of shipowners of San Francisco, against the passage of House bills Nos. 1227 to 1233, inclusive—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. MAHON: Petition of Washington Camp, No. 665, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Quincy, Pa., praying for the passage of the Stone bill, to restrict immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota: Resolutions of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Board of Trade, in relation to the Union Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. McRAE: Statement of Dr. J. H. Weaver, to accompany House bill No. 6105, for the relief of D. J. Smith—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, testimony of Dr. W. H. Dickenson, J. W. Hunter, and J. R. Wakeley, to accompany House bill No. 3784, for the relief of Nathan Eldridge—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MEREDITH: Petition of F. M. Brabham, of Washington, D. C., asking reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MILLER: Petition and papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Rudolph Staats—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MORSE: Petition of George H. Varce and 6 other citizens of Spring Valley, Minn., praying for the recognition of God in the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOODY: Petition of W. C. Cuseck and 47 others, for the establishment of a life-saving station at Salisbury Beach, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MURPHY of Illinois: Petition of 50 citizens of Du Quoin, Ill., protesting against the appropriation of public funds by Congress to institutions and undertakings belonging wholly or in part to religious sects—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of 100 citizens of Percy, Ill., protesting against the appropriation of public funds by Congress to institutions and undertakings belonging wholly or in part to religious sects—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. NOONAN: Petition of ex-Union soldiers residing in the State of Texas, favoring an amendment to the pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS: Preamble and resolutions of the Commercial Association of Sioux City, Iowa, with reference to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Also, petition of C. E. Smith, of Onawa, Iowa, in behalf of pension legislation in the interest of ex-prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PICKLER: Petition of ex-Union soldiers residing at Paw Paw, Ind. T., and vicinity, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Artha Post, No. 41, Clarendon, Ark., asking the passage of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS: Paper to accompany House bill No. 5350, to correct the military record of John Hanlin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of West End, Broome County, N. Y., against the sale of spirituous liquors to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of West End, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut: Petition of citizens of New London and Lebanon, Conn., in favor of House bill No. 58, for the inspection of immigrants by the United States consuls—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Bridgeport (Conn.) Board of Trade, favoring sufficient appropriations to make a permanent harbor of refuge of Great Salt Pond, at Block Island, R. I.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of soldiers of Colchester, Conn., who were volunteers in the forlorn hope at Port Hudson, for appropriation to give them the medals promised by General Banks—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By. Mr. SIMPKINS: Petition of executive committee of Cotton Manufacturing Association at Fall River, that the provisions of immediate transportation act of 1880 be extended to the city of Fall River, Mass.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SORG: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Hiram B. Bell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions adopted by the Montgomery County Farmers Institute, held at Vandalia, Ohio, February 6, 1896, for amendment to the postal laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STAHLE: Petition of Alfred Flury Post, No. 558, Grand Army of the Republic, Manchester, York County, Pa., in favor of service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Betsy Ross Council, No. 119, Daughters of Liberty, of Gettysburg, Pa., in favor of the passage of the William A. Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. TRELOAR: Resolution from Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 320, located at Hermann, Mo., indorsing House bill No. 1196—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TYLER: Petition of R. R. Selden, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of Graham Post, No. 106, Grand Army of the Republic, and of 71 veterans of Pottstown, Pa., for the passage of a service and a prisoner-of-war pension act—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, in favor of the publication by the Government of the records of the Revolutionary period—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of A. M. Simmons, of Huntsville, Ala., in favor of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOMER: Petition of Harrison A. Kulen and 25 other citizens of Duncannon, Pa., in favor of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of John M. Rauch, postmaster at Manada Hill, Pa., and 75 other citizens, in favor of a bill to amend the postal laws—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PUBLIC LAND SUITS.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to enter a notice of a motion for a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate yesterday afternoon passed the bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of the time within which suits may be brought to vacate and annul land patents, and for other purposes. I wish to examine the bill and the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Notice of the motion will be entered, as indicated by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DAVIS subsequently said: Information received since I gave notice of a motion to reconsider House bill 5474 a few moments ago induces me to withdraw the notice of that motion. I ask consent to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the notice of a motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the board of managers of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the publication by the Government of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a memorial of the Universal Peace Union, remonstrating against the appropriation of moneys for coast defenses, for the increase of the Army and Navy, and for the organization of the militia of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Manufacturers and Producers' Exchange and the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon Japanese manufactures, importations, and the export trade; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the purchase by the Government of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition, in the form of resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Crosswicks, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation granting protection to American citizens in Turkey and extending sympathy to the suffering Armenians; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Aaron Wilkes Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, of Trenton, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation for the restoration of the grade of Lieutenant-General in the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Lyon Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of Vineland, N. J., praying for the speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots in their struggle for freedom; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PEFFER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent in the District of Columbia to 18 years; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the enforcement of the compulsory educational law; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions adopted at a regular meeting of the Board of Trade of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the readjustment of the affairs of the Union Pacific Railway; which were referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the establishment of a subtreasury in that city; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BACON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Monroe, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, Tenn., praying for the establishment of a uniform rate of letter postage at 1 cent; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Spring Valley, Minn., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KYLE presented the memorial of Emma A. Crammer, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., and a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Badger, S. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to establish a bureau of military education and to promote the adoption of uniform military drill in the public schools of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Samuel Q. Ryan, of Massachusetts, praying that he be awarded a medal by Congress for services rendered in the "forlorn hope" storming column during the late war; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STEWART presented a petition of the Citizens' Association of South Washington, D. C., praying for the construction of a proposed bridge across the Eastern Branch at the foot of South Capitol street, in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Citizens' Association of South Washington, D. C., praying that an appropriation be made to enable the proper authorities to arch over the James Creek Canal open sewer; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISPOSITION OF GARBAGE.

Mr. STEWART. I present a memorial of the Citizens' Association of South Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the construction of a garbage factory, crematory, or reduction plant, or other like institution, in the city of Washington or Georgetown or their more densely populated suburbs.

I also present a resolution which the memorialists have sent me, which they desire to have passed, and which seems to be all right. I will now offer the resolution and ask that it be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is directed to call upon the Commissioners of the said District for a full report of their action under the act of March 2, 1895, in the matter of the removal of the garbage of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, with transmission of all papers; and the said committee is further directed to investigate the subject of the disposition of the garbage of large cities, with special regard to the health and comfort of the people and the location of garbage crematories or reduction plants, and to report what, if any, legislation is necessary.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Nevada please state the reasons for this investigation?

Mr. STEWART. The petitions set forth at great length the reasons for the investigation. I am aware that the Commissioners have been very much embarrassed over this question. I presume the resolution can do no harm, and probably it may do good, if the committee investigates the matter. Of course, I am not a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the members of that committee will know better about it than I do. If there is any objection to the resolution I shall not press it, of course.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be printed and go over until to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 812) to provide for appointment by brevet of active or retired officers of the United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1157) granting a pension to Maria L. Carbee;

A bill (S. 1150) granting a pension to Lucinda S. Twombly; and

A bill (S. 1788) granting a pension to William R. Lake.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 1699) for the relief of William Loring Spencer, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 177) granting a pension to Sophia D. Clendenin, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2129) granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Nolan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1148) granting a pension to Celesthia A. Whitney, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. BRICE), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1036) granting a pension to Rebecca E. Kutz, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2176) granting a pension to Thomas Pollock, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 24) providing for immediate destruction of income-tax returns, etc., to report it back favorably without amendment, and with it I submit a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. SHERMAN. Let us pass it now.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is no objection, it is a brief measure, unanimously reported from the committee, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause the immediate destruction of all income-tax returns and any copies thereof, with all statements and records relative thereto, now in possession of the Treasury Department, by reason of "An act to reduce taxation," etc., in effect August 28, 1894.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what the word "thereto" means as applied to the returns of the income tax and statements and records relative thereto? The point of my question is whether the joint resolution is so drawn as to destroy the record of the fact of the payment of an income tax which may not yet have been refunded to the person who paid it. A great many people paid the income tax in advance.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the point the Senator makes. If the Secretary will read the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, he will see——

Mr. CHILTON. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the present consideration of the joint resolution, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1355) for the relief of Andrew J. Whitaker, late special disbursing agent of the Navy Department, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1604) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1835) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of John J. Shipman against the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 725) granting a pension to Anna C. Garber, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1934) granting an increase of pension to Henry Slaughter, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 995) granting a pension to Kate A. Pitman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1523) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Bell, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 637) granting a pension to George M. Brooks, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1684) granting a pension to Sam P. Barbee, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2218) increasing the pension of Jackson J. Lane, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 925) granting a pension to Annie J. Corbett, of Providence, R. I., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 994) granting an increase of pension to Andrew B. Keith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 321) granting a pension to James W. Dunn, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am instructed by the Committee on Coast Defenses, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, to report it favorably with amendments and submit a report thereon. I ask that the bill and accompanying report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

A bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing the fortifications and other defenses recommended by the board appointed by the President under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making provisions for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, for the ports named in the report of the said board as the ports at which fortifications are most urgently needed, namely, New York, San Francisco, Boston, the lake ports, Hampton Roads, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore; Portland, Me.; Rhode Island ports in Narragansett Bay, Key West, Charleston, S. C.; Mobile, Savannah, Galveston; Portland, Oreg.; Pensacola, Fla.; Wilmington, N. C.; San Diego, Cal.; Portsmouth, N. H.; defenses of Cumberland Sound at Fort Clinch, defenses of ports of the Kennebec River at Fort Popham; New Bedford, Mass.; defenses of ports on the Penobscot River, Me.; at Fort Knox and east entrance, Long Island Sound (including New London and New Haven), and further for the defense of Puget Sound, and of such other ports as in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may require permanent works of fortifications, there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000, the whole or any part of this appropriation to be immediately available if so ordered by the President: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and works as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematic construction of fortifications and other seacoast defenses, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 per annum, for seven years, commencing July 1, 1897.

SEC. 2. That said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and under existing laws for the purpose of providing fortifications and other defenses for the ports aforesaid and the armament thereof and the purchase of sites for the said fortifications, substantially in accordance with the recommendations of said board, with such modifications as are made in the more extended study of the individual projects, as approved from time to time by the Secretary of War, until Congress shall otherwise provide, and shall be apportioned among the said ports in accordance with the consolidated estimate of the cost of said defenses in so far as may be most economical and expedient; and the work shall be, as near as may be, commenced at the same time at each of the said ports, and shall proceed as rapidly as said annual appropriations will admit of; excepting at the lake ports, where fortifications shall not be begun until in the judgment of the President work there shall be necessary and expedient: Provided, That should any material change in the total estimates for the defenses herein provided for be made necessary, a full and complete statement of such changes and the reasons therefor shall be laid before Congress for its action: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated applicable for the defensive works at a port shall be expended for fortifications at that port until the Secretary of War shall have caused the surveys necessary to select a proper site to be made and a detailed project to be prepared for that port, not to exceed in cost the sum apportioned to that port included in the total amount herein appropriated for said fortifications and shall have approved the same.

SEC. 3. That the proportion of the above sums to be expended in each year by the Chief of Engineers of the Army on fortifications and procurement of sites therefor, who is charged by law with the performance of these duties, and the proportion to be expended by the Chief of Ordnance of the Army on the armament of the fortifications, who is charged by law with the performance of this duty, shall be determined by the Secretary of War at the beginning of each fiscal year, and said sums shall be expended in strict conformity with existing laws and regulations.

[Report to accompany S. 1159.]

The Committee on Coast Defenses, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, have had the same under consideration, and report the same back, with amendments, with the recommendation that the bill as so amended do pass.

In lines 15 and 16, section 1, strike out the words "New London."

In lines 21 and 22, section 1, strike out the words "New Haven, Conn.," and insert in lieu thereof the words "East Entrance, Long Island Sound (including New London and New Haven)."

In line 27, section 1, strike out the words "eighty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

Strike out the whole of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematic construction of fortifications and other seacoast defenses, or said materials may be purchased and the work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $10,000,000 per annum for seven years, commencing July 1, 1897."

Maj. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, commanding the Army; Gen. W. P. Craighill, Chief of Engineers; Brig. Gen. D. W. Flagler, Chief of Ordnance; Rear-Admiral J. G. Walker, United States Navy, and others have appeared before the committee and made statements in relation to the subject of coast defenses.

Your committee begs leave to report that in accordance with the statement of the General Commanding the Army it has found that the harbors of the principal seacoast cities of the United States, with few exceptions, are entirely without defenses, and that at the harbors where modern defenses have been commenced the work thus far completed is entirely inadequate for the protection of the cities for which they are designed.

The unprotected state of the country in this respect may well cause anxiety and alarm, and the present condition should be remedied without delay.

It has been estimated that in the cities of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City alone there is property of the value of $4,000,000,000 which a hostile fleet lying in the upper bay of New York would have within reach of its guns. Not one-tenth of the necessary defenses have yet been provided for that port, although its harbor is at present better defended than any other in the United States.

It is probable that the aggregate value of all destructible property exposed at the 27 principal seaports of the United States (not including the lake ports, which should also be protected) is not less than $10,000,000,000. So far as ascertainable, the cost of public buildings alone at the ports recommended to be fortified has far exceeded the amount required to fortify these ports.

The injury to commerce could not be measured by the injury to property at the ports alone, but would extend to the interior for which they are outlets or avenues of exchange.

Thus the risk to property interests affected is such that a small percentage of its value would supply the means for sufficient defense, and would be as reasonable an expenditure as that for fire insurance and police protection. It is estimated that the last two items cost annually eight-tenths of 1 per cent of the value of the destructible property affected. According to the estimates, the cost of permanent coast defenses would be about the same as that for fire insurance and police protection for one year in the same cities. If the expenditure for coast defenses be extended over a period of ten years, the average will of course be less than one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum. The increase in the value of property during the next ten years will probably be great, thus lessening the percentage from year to year.

If a hostile fleet should succeed in entering a harbor the full cash valuation of all property subject to destruction by the fleet could be demanded as a ransom.

A still greater saving is to be considered in the prevention of war itself in consequence of the moral effect afforded by suitable preparation for resistance.

The contrast between the cost of preparation and the cost of war itself is so manifest that it constitutes one of the principal considerations actuating the committee. The money expended upon the pension list of the United States for a single year is equal to the expenditure required to create a complete system of coast defenses and the necessary additions to our Navy in order to prepare our country for all great war emergencies to which it may be subjected in the pursuit of our destiny as a first-class power and influential nation.

Economic and prudential considerations all favor the construction of coast defenses. The prevention of the sacrifice of human life should also be considered as well as the national humiliation and disgrace that may at any time attend our even temporary discomfiture by reason of lack of the ordinary military precautions that are adopted by other great nations.

It is an anomalous state of affairs that this great nation, encircled by a chain of foreign fortresses near its shores, is without the means of resisting an attack from any one of them.

This defenseless condition weakens our influence in diplomacy, as was well stated by Mr. Tilden as follows:

"This state of things is discreditable to our foresight and to our prudence. The best guaranty against aggression, the best assurance that our diplomacy will be successful and pacific, and that our rights and honor will be respected by other nations, is in their knowledge that we are in a situation to vindicate our reputation and interests. While we may ever be deficient in our means of offense, we can not afford to be defenseless. The notoriety of the fact that we have neglected the ordinary precautions of defense invites want of consideration in our diplomacy, injustice, arrogance, and insult at the hands of foreign nations."

While we recognize the efficiency of our Navy, it is clearly shown in the statement made to the committee that it would be unsafe to rely exclusively upon that arm of power for means of defense; in fact, the very existence of our Navy would be imperiled in case of war with any great power without the support which would be afforded to the ships by land defenses.

It is admitted that we do not stand higher than sixth in the list of naval powers, and that our present Navy rates at less than 1 to 6 in comparison to that of England. It has been shown to the committee that the efficiency of the Navy will be vastly increased by the establishment of land defenses. In the absence of the latter in time of war every ship will be required to remain near our own coasts for their defense, and thereby the Navy will be largely deprived of the attribute of mobility and the power to make offensive return.

It is clearly shown by a distinguished admiral of the Navy that the expenditure for coast defenses, as compared with that for the Navy, should at present be in the ratio of 1½ to 1, and that the ratio should be increased in favor of coast defenses after the expenditure of $100,000,000 for both purposes.

Torpedoes and submarine mines are also important as a means of harbor defense, but they are comparatively useless unless protected by guns in suitable position on land.

ESTIMATE OF COST.

The committee has investigated the subject of expenditures already made under the plans for defense adopted by the Government, which were based upon the report of the Endicott Board of 1886 and the more recent Puget Sound Board, with the modifications that have been adopted from time to time by the War Department.

The plans and estimates of the Endicott Board (composed of officers of the Army and Navy) called for an expenditure of $97,782,000 for permanent land defenses. Up to the present time the expenditure for this purpose has been about $10,631,000, which would leave $87,151,000 to be appropriated if the original plans were to be carried out and there were no other changes in the conditions affecting the cost.

However, in the year 1892 the present eight-hour law went into effect, and changes in plan of armament have affected the estimates of cost to such an extent that the committee finds, upon the statements of the Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance, the amount desirable for fortifications and armament to be more than that originally calculated by the Endicott Board for the whole work of land defenses.

The Chief of Engineers estimates that under the most favorable conditions, such as the letting of continuous contracts, the part of the work coming under his charge would cost $60,000,000. He says $1,500,000 in addition is needed for sites, making a total of $61,500,000 for the fortifications.

The Chief of Ordnance estimates the cost of armament, including guns, gun carriages, mortars, mortar carriages, rapid-fire and machine guns, at $43,796,020. This does not include the Bethlehem contract, which is already authorized by law, nor his estimate of the cost of projectiles and other items which may be properly provided for in the ordinary annual appropriations for material and supplies.

The rapid-fire guns and machine guns, of which the cost is estimated at $2,762,000, were not comprised in the plans and estimates of the Endicott Board.

These guns are now considered by the War Department to form a necessary part of the permanent armament to be established for coast defenses therefore they are included in the estimates of the Chief of Ordnance, making the consolidated estimate of both Bureaus $105,296,020 for permanent works and armament.

It is clearly shown in the statement made to the committee that the work for which the expenditure will be required will necessarily extend over a period of probably not less than six years. Therefore the work should be immediately commenced, because it will be impossible to provide an adequate system of coast defenses within a shorter time.

The committee recognizes the desirability of pursuing deliberate and economic methods and the importance of distributing the financial burden over a still greater number of years; therefore it approves of the provision that the expenditure shall be made from year to year during a period of about eight years, as stated in the bill.

During the progress of the work opportunities will be afforded for the introduction of improved and economic methods in its details, thereby lessening the cost without decreasing the efficiency of the defenses.

The Chief of Engineers, who, with the approval of the Secretary of War, prepares the plans for fortifications, states that for the sum of $87,000,000 an efficient defense can be provided. It is understood that, in his opinion, this is a minimum sum to cover the cost of the necessary fortifications and their armament.

It is important that continuous contracts be authorized in order to prosecute the work with the utmost economy. Therefore the committee has decided to recommend the appropriation of $10,000,000, to be immediately available, and that in addition thereto the Secretary of War be authorized to enter into continuous contracts not exceeding $10,000,000 per annum for seven years commencing July 1, 1897, according to the terms of the bill herewith reported.

In addition, the Chief of Engineers estimates that $2,500,000 is required for torpedoes, and the Chief of Ordnance has submitted the following estimates for ammunition, projectiles, and other ordnance supplies, which, in the opinion of the committee, should be provided for by appropriations from time to time as required:

Projectiles for guns	$3,380,131
Projectiles for mortars	4,146,379
Tests, equipment, etc	800,000
Powder for guns	3,042,171
Powder for mortars	1,037,559
Ammunition for rapid-fire guns	774,000
Ammunition for machine guns	11,500
Total	13,191,740

These items do not form a part of the plan for permanent defenses, and provision for similar expenditures was not included in the estimates of the Endicott Board; they are therefore omitted in the bill reported.

EMERGENCY ESTIMATES.

In order to develop the facts in reference to the capacity of the Department of Engineers and the Department of Ordnance to press the work economically, and in addition to ascertain what they can each do under stress, the committee conducted a careful inquiry on both these points.

The Chief of Engineers states that after a few weeks of preparation he can economically expend about $1,000,000 per month on the engineering part of the work until it shall be entirely completed. He also states that "under stress" he can advantageously expend a much larger sum for that purpose.

The following are the tables submitted by him on this point for the years 1896 and 1897, provided the appropriations be immediately made:

Locality.	Stress.		Economically.
	1896.	1897.	1896.	1897.
New York	$2,458,250	$4,016,750	$652,000	$1,660,000
San Francisco	2,725,000	4,575,000	980,000	1,910,000
Boston	2,400,000	3,650,000	460,000	1,040,000
Lake ports	700,000	1,175,000	200,000	500,000
Hampton Roads	850,000	1,075,000	175,000	600,000
New Orleans	100,000	40,000	50,000	90,000
Philadelphia	600,000	750,000	150,000	400,000
Washington, D. C	450,000	1,040,000	200,000	500,000
Baltimore	700,000	1,310,000	75,000	300,000
Portland, Me	500,000	1,000,000	150,000	500,000
Narragansett Bay	700,000	1,500,000	150,000	500,000
Key West	500,000	700,000	75,000	250,000
Charleston	500,000	1,290,000	75,000	250,000
Mobile	700,000	740,000	100,000	250,000
Savannah	300,000	590,000	100,000	300,000
Portland, Oreg	900,000	940,000	150,000	600,000
Pensacola	450,000	540,000	75,000	200,000
Galveston	600,000	290,000	100,000	300,000
Wilmington, N. C	400,000	390,000	75,000	300,000
San Diego	500,000	320,000	100,000	300,000
Portsmouth, N. H	300,000	120,000	50,000	150,000
Cumberland Sound	200,000	390,000	50,000	150,000
Kennebec River	100,000	70,000	50,000	120,000
New Bedford	300,000	70,000	50,000	150,000
Penobscot River	100,000	70,000	50,000	120,000
East entrance, Long Island Sound	460,000	1,000,000	75,000	200,000
Puget Sound	200,000	900,000	50,000	700,000
Total	18,693,250	28,551,750	4,467,000	12,340,000

If above appropriations were made, in eighteen months provision could be made for—

12-inch guns on lifts	6
12-inch on nondisappearing carriage	12
10-inch on disappearing carriage	94
10-inch on nondisappearing carriage	9
8-inch on disappearing carriage	39
8-inch on nondisappearing carriage	6
12-inch mortars	440
Rapid-fire guns	38
Total	644

The Chief of Ordnance states that he requires the sum of $55,000 in addition to what has already been appropriated in order to run the gun factory at Watervliet at its ordinary capacity, working eight hours per day, during the remainder of the present fiscal year; and that in order to run the gun factory to the fullest extent during this fiscal year, viz, sixteen hours per day, an appropriation of $225,000 would be required in addition to the amount already appropriated.

In his regular estimate for running the gun factory during the next fiscal year he has estimated the sum of $342,938.

He states that his regular estimate is somewhat below what he could use if running regularly eight hours per day, by reason of the pressure that has been brought to bear upon him sometimes by the Secretary of War, and especially by Congress, to reduce his estimate. He now estimates that in order to run the factory eight hours additional, or sixteen hours per working day, an appropriation of $426,762 is required in addition to his first estimate for the next fiscal year for this purpose, making a total of $769,700 required for running the gun factory to the fullest extent during the next fiscal year. He says:

"Additional to the present appropriation for seacoast carriages, I should want $1,186,500; additional for 12-inch mortars, $987,900; additional for 12-inch mortar carriages, $476,000; additional for armor-piercing shot, that is, for all varieties of guns, $443,922; additional for shells for the same guns, $416,700; additional for deck-piercing shells, that is, the mortar shell, $135,938; additional for 12-inch mortar torpedo shells, which is a longer shell, $444,264; for powder for guns and mortars, $732,461."

He sums up the requirements of his Department as follows:

"I have been replying to two questions of the committee, viz: What amount of money in addition to existing appropriations could be expended on coast-defense armament during the remainder of the present fiscal year, and what amount for the same purpose in addition to the estimates now before Congress for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1897? As these replies have included much discussion, I think a recapitulation of the amounts that have been given would make the matter clearer to the committee.

"First. In reply to the first question, I have stated that to run the gun factory to its ordinary capacity and not to reduce work during the remainder of this fiscal year would require $55,000.

"Second. Should an emergency require that the work be pressed, then the factory can be run sixteen hours per day, and this would require $225,000 for the remainder of the present fiscal year. If this $225,000 were appropriated, there should go with it, as has been stated, authority to enter into contract for the delivery of forgings, carriages, and projectiles to the amount of $1,800,000. No payments for these last would fall due during the next fiscal year, and as this estimate has been made to meet an emergency, it is understood that the same emergency would require that the work be pressed to the same extent during the whole of the next fiscal year, and estimates to meet payments to fall due under the proposed contracts are included in my estimate for the additional amount that could be expended in the next fiscal year.

"Third. The estimates for coast-defense armament, etc., before Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, amount to $4,965,030. If the work is to be pressed, then, as has already been indicated, we should run the gun factory sixteen hours per day. To do this, secure the necessary forgings and complement of carriages to accompany the increased product of the guns, necessary projectiles, powders, etc., would require $7,006,141.

"Fourth. If any emergency should require that the work should be pressed, as has been contemplated in this estimate, this emergency would make it almost imperative that a large amount of field and siege artillery and rapid-fire and machine guns, with their carriages and ammunition, should be procured for arming and equipping armies. It is estimated that the amount of material that should be procured as rapidly as possible would cost $6,238,215.

"Fifth. There is now a special supplemental estimate before Congress for $150,000 for the purchase of rapid-fire guns, carriages, and ammunition. It is of great importance that this last appropriation should be made in any case."

The following is a recapitulation of the estimates of the two Bureaus and the consolidated estimate for the two years stated:

Estimates of Brigadier-General Craighill, Chief of Engineers, for engineering work.

To carry on the work there can be expended economically and profitably (if appropriations be immediately made) before July 1, 1896	$4,670,000
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897	12,340,000
For every succeeding fiscal year until defenses are completed	12,000,000
For immediate use in procuring sites	1,000,000
For the same purpose there will be needed later	509,000
For torpedoes and necessary appliances	2,500,000

	Stress.	Economically.
For the engineering work, exclusive of sites and torpedo material, there could be expended in the—
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1896	$18,693,250	$4,467,000
Fiscal year ending June 30, 1897	28,551,750	12,340,000

Estimates of Brigadier-General Flagler, Chief of Ordnance, for remainder of current fiscal year.

For running gun factory eight hours a day, in addition to present appropriations	$55,000
To press work at gun factory to fullest extent, working sixteen hours a day, two shifts, in addition to present appropriations	225,000
If emergency plan is adopted, Chief of Ordnance should be authorized to make contracts (money need not be immediately appropriated) as follows:
For forgings	675,000
For carriages	600,000
For projectiles, etc	300,000
Grand total for current fiscal year	1,855,000

For fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

Estimates before Congress	$4,965,030
Special estimate before Congress for rapid-fire guns and ammunition therefor	150,000
Total estimates before Congress	5,115,030
In case of emergency there would be required, in addition to the above sums:
For pressing work on seacoast guns, carriages, etc	7,231,141
For pressing work on field and siege guns, rapid-fire and machine guns and their carriages, implements, equipments, ammunition, etc	6,238,215
Total sum that could be used in fiscal year 1896-97	18,584,386

Consolidated estimate for the fiscal years 1896 and 1897.

FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1896, IN ADDITION TO PRESENT APPROPRIATIONS.

	Stress.	Economically.
Ordnance Department	$1,800,000	$55,000
Engineer Department	18,693,250	4,670,000
Total	20,493,250	5,225,000
Sites		1,000,000
Grand total		6,225,000

FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1897.

Ordnance Department	$18,584,368	$5,115,030
Engineer Department	28,551,750	12,340,000
Total	47,136,136	17,455,030
Engineer Department:
Sites		500,000
Torpedo material		2,500,000
Grand total		20,455,030

It is evident that the time required to manufacture the guns will control the period necessary to complete the whole work of defenses.

The Chief of Ordnance states, in answer to questions, as follows:

How long will it take to complete the armament according to the whole plan adopted by the Government for coast defense, working the usual time—eight hours per day?

General FLAGLER. About eight years for 8, 10, and 12 inch guns; thirteen or fourteen years for the 16-inch guns—as a type 16-inch gun has yet to be made and tested—and about nine years for the 12-inch mortars. The carriages for these guns and mortars could be completed within the same period.

How long will it take, working sixteen hours per day, under stress?

General FLAGLER. About five years for the 8, 10, and 12 inch guns, and eight years for the 16-inch guns, with their carriages. If the mortars could also be manufactured on a sixteen-hour labor basis, which is quite probable, they could be completed in from five to six years.

The latter answer defines the time that is absolutely necessary unless the facilities for manufacturing guns be increased.

The Chief of Ordnance also stated that if it were proposed to duplicate the Army Gun Factory, three years would be required for that purpose.

In conclusion, the committee reports that the investigation has shown the vital importance of immediately commencing the work of defense on an adequate scale, of prosecuting it with vigor, and of providing for it by sufficient appropriation of money, in order to avoid great and unnecessary risks to the safety and welfare of the nation.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Thursday next, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall, by the leave of the Senate, speak briefly on coast defenses.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2247) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2248) for the relief of J. E. Dromgoole, of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLEN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2249) to pay Joel L. Baugh for services rendered to the Old Settler Cherokee Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2250) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes"; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2251) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Calumet River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2252) for the relief of Bvt. Capt. James D. Vernay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2253) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claim of John C. Phillips; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2254) to pension Joseph F. Cison; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to Lorenzo Meserth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2256) granting a pension to William H. Hawes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 2257) to authorize the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion and issue to Isaac N. Babb, Twenty-third Indiana Battery, an honorable discharge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Pensions, and to accompany it I present an application from the claimant and ask that it may also be noted and referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill.

The bill (S. 2258) granting a pension to John Vogt was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2259) granting a pension to Catherine Long; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2260) granting a pension to Emily C. Merriman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2261) providing for an international humane and sanitary conference; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2262) to provide for the further distribution of reports of the Supreme Court and of the circuit courts of appeals; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to state that this bill is simply a combination of several separate bills which have been introduced by other Senators. It is introduced in order to have them all in one. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 2263) to provide for the settlement of accounts and claims in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2264) granting a pension to Henry H. Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2265) for the relief of Martin Mullins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2266) granting a pension to James A. Southard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2267) granting a pension to Alvah A. Eaton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2268) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2269) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, on account of judicial services performed by him while serving as consul-general in Egypt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PEFFER introduced a bill (S. 2270) granting a pension to Avery Lamb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2271) extending the provisions of an act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors, approved June 27, 1890, to the Eighteenth and Nineteenth regiments of Kansas Cavalry Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SAC AND FOX INDIAN SCHOOL IN IOWA.

Mr. GEAR. I submitted a few days ago an amendment intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The amendment proposes to appropriate $35,000 for the purpose of establishing an Indian school on the reservation of the Sac and Fox Indians in Iowa. I do not think I asked to have the amendment referred to the Indian Bureau, but I do now ask that it may be referred to the Indian Bureau for report.

Mr. PLATT. Not to the Indian Bureau?

Mr. GEAR. To the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I should say.

Mr. HOAR. What is the effect of a simple order of the Senate to refer an amendment to the Indian Bureau for report? Do we not make our demand in such a case on the head of the Department—on the Secretary of the Interior—if we desire information?

Mr. GEAR. I am perfectly willing to modify the request.

Mr. HOAR. It is merely a question as to the manner of procedure.

Mr. GEAR. I am glad the Senator has called my attention to it. I ask that the amendment be referred to the Secretary of the Interior for report.

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will pardon me, I do not want to interfere with his affairs, but I suppose the usual custom would be to have an order of the Senate that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate as to any information or facts that are required in regard to a certain subject. I do not think that the Senate ever instituted a practice of simply asking a head of Department for his opinion, but the practice usually is for either an individual Senator or the committee to send to the head of the Department for his opinion. The Judiciary Committee every week send to the Attorney-General certain bills, and sometimes we send bills to the Chief Justice and ask his opinion, which is always given.

Mr. GEAR. I accept the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, and suggest that the Committee on Indian Affairs be requested to send the amendment through the proper channel, to the Secretary of the Interior, for the desired information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

APPOINTMENT OF SECOND ACTING ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That James B. Lloyd, a citizen of the State of North Carolina, be, and he is hereby, appointed to the office of second acting assistant doorkeeper of the Senate, at a compensation of $1,500 per annum.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he is advised that there is such an office that is now vacant, or does the resolution propose to displace some present employee of the Senate?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that there is an office by that name in the Senate. I know there is in fact an office of second acting assistant doorkeeper.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection personally to the gentleman named in the resolution; I should have no objection to seeing him a part of the Senate force; but until I am informed as to the place for which he is designated, and know who is to be displaced, if anyone is to be displaced, I will object to the passage of the resolution. I ask that the resolution may go over until tomorrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the resolution goes over, I should like to say a word in regard to it.

By an arrangement on both sides of the Senate it was agreed and carried out that there should be an assistant doorkeeper and an acting assistant doorkeeper appointed. It has been usual to have persons on either side of the Chamber who are agreeable and acceptable to them, so there have always been two doorkeepers, one practically taking care of the business that falls to his lot on this side of the Chamber, and the other upon the other side. It was agreed by unanimous consent on both sides that these two officers should be appointed in that way, one to represent the Democratic side and the other the Republican side.

Now, as to whether there ought to be a third, a second assistant doorkeeper, it is for the Senate to decide. I do not myself see any special reason for it. I do not believe there is any real occasion for it. It is a new office. Indeed, the first assistant is a new office, and this would be another new office and add the amount of his salary to the expense of the official attendance here. I do not wish to express any opinion about the propriety of the resolution, except that I do not see any necessity for it.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not sufficiently familiar with the nomenclature of these offices to state whether there is an office of this name or not. I know there are four young men who are in charge of the Senate Chamber. I know them by face and I know most of them by name. Exactly what their offices are designated I do not know. I infer, however, that if it is necessary to have one of these gentlemen to look after the secrets of the Republican party and one to look after the secret workings of the Democratic party, the Populist party is becoming of such gigantic proportions in this Chamber that it is necessary for us to have a trusted agent to look after our caucus interests. I make that suggestion to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no mistake about the gigantic proportions of the leader of the Populist party in this Chamber. [Laughter.] Still, that party has not of late increased in numbers in this body, and it is devoutly to be hoped that it will not so increase. Indeed, if the Senator from Nebraska should be taken away from this body by reason of his candidacy as the representative of that party for the Presidency, we should endeavor to get along with the reduced number of Populist Senators.

Mr. President, I do not think that the Senator has quite made a case as yet for the appointment of the gentleman named in the resolution. I was not aware until the Senator so stated that the two officers who have already been appointed were to deal with the secrets of the political parties in this Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. That seemed to be the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, and I only elaborated it.

Mr. CHANDLER. But I understood the Senator from Nebraska to state that the two men who have been appointed were to be intrusted with political secrets.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I understood the senior Senator from Ohio to say that one was appointed upon the suggestion of the Republican party to look after their interests and the other was appointed on the suggestion of the Democratic party to look after their interests, which I inferred were the secret interests of the caucus.

Mr. SHERMAN. I spoke of their services, but I did not say anything——

Mr. ALLEN. It would be entirely out of place, if the Senator will permit me, I think, to have a Republican or a Democrat to attend to the wants of a Populist caucus. We prefer a Populist.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are no secrets to be guarded by these young men. They were elected simply for the convenience of Senators on the two sides of the body; and now if the Populist Senators are in such a condition that they need the attendance of the gentleman named in the resolution I am willing that in due time it shall be granted to them; but I am not willing to eject anyone now in the employ of the Senate or to create a new office. That is the reason and the only reason why I asked that the resolution might go over.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I beg to say one word before the resolution passes over in explanation of our situation. I have heard it suggested in the last three weeks that the Populist party was attaining accessions to its ranks in this Chamber very rapidly. I have heard that suggestion made especially on this side of the Chamber and some suggestions from the other side. It is not an uncommon thing for a Senator on this side of the Chamber to stand in his place and announce himself as an adherent of Populist doctrines. It was done by the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] a few days ago; it has been done by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] from time to time, and by other Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. President, we expect, we are living in the confident hope that before the close of the present Congress a large portion of the Democrats and Republicans will by stress of circumstances be driven into the Populist camp; and I am always pleased to say to these gentlemen that the doors are wide open to them. We are growing every day. We have now about 1,800,000 votes in the United States. The Democrats and Republicans are at war with one another. The Republican party is not harmonious on the financial question by any means, as I infer from what has transpired in this Chamber from time to time; the Democratic party and its Chief Executive are engaged in a parrot-and-monkey fight between themselves; and we have every reason to believe that the accessions to the Populist party in this Chamber will be very great, and we certainly stand in need of a young man of this kind.

I do not understand that the resolution will displace any person; that it will create any new office or anything of that kind; but it gives to an office which is now being exercised a designation and a habitation.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there is an old saying with regard to a hen which has only one chicken showing great solicitude as the mother of a brood, and therefore the Senator from Nebraska is perhaps excused for his great solicitude on account of the Populist party.

However, I did not rise for the purpose of speaking of that, but to call attention to the fact that we are continually, by one means and another, enlarging and increasing the expenses of the Senate, until the amount which is expended for the salaries of officials of the Senate and the expenses of the Senate is so large as to create a great deal of remark, not to say criticism. I really think that we ought to be very careful about further increasing the expenses of the Senate, and that we should provide new offices only when there is an absolute necessity for the same.

I do not think there is any necessity for this new officer, and therefore I hope that the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, as it is necessary that it should go there, and that that may be the last we shall hear of it.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his motion. The resolution does not call for an expenditure of money to be appropriated from the contingent fund of the Senate. It must be met by a general appropriation if met at all. The Senator from Connecticut——

Mr. PLATT. Unless the resolution is required by the rule to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of course I will make no motion to refer. I supposed that it was so required.

Mr. CHANDLER. The resolution is not before the Senate for consideration. I understand that it goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to make one observation in reply to the Senator from Connecticut, and then I will let it go over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly; but the Senator seemed to think that the motion of the Senator from Connecticut is applicable at this time. It is not applicable, because I have objected to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to call attention——

Mr. HOAR. Does not the resolution go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses under the general rule, without going over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, and an objection was interposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. I do not care anything about this resolution one way or the other, but my parliamentary inquiry is as to the general rule. I suppose that a resolution of this kind can not be considered even by unanimous consent under the law until it has gone to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. My question is, whether a resolution of this kind does not go as of course and at once to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the resolution again read, and will then rule upon the point of order suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I do not care anything about what the Senate may do in this particular case. I merely put the general question as a matter of orderly procedure.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that, under the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], the resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, just one word in reply to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. It has been of almost daily occurrence during this session of Congress that some Senator, either upon the Democratic or Republican side of this Chamber, has presented a resolution for the appointment of John Smith or John Jones as a stenographer to a certain committee, or creating the additional office of messenger. I have yet failed to listen to an objection made to the enlargement of the Senate force in that respect, and I am sorry that the Senator from Connecticut, who is usually so accurate and timely in his objections, has permitted all of those opportunities to escape him, and that now, for the first time, when it is proposed to introduce a young gentleman on this floor who would represent a party neither Democratic nor Republican, a spasm of economy seizes the Senator from Connecticut, and he thinks the force ought not to be enlarged.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator understand that we have increased the official force of the Senate this session?

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that resolution after resolution—I can not call the number of them—has been introduced here and passed increasing the Senate force.

Mr. PLATT. I was not aware of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is mistaken. All those resolutions have been referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and there they remain.

Mr. ALLEN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this resolution does not provide for the expenditure of a dollar out of the Senate contingent fund; therefore it has no business before the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. PLATT. If the resolution should pass to-day the officer would have to be paid out of the contingent fund until he could be provided for in an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The officer would simply be provided for in an appropriation bill like other officers.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he thinks the Senate needs the services of the officer that his resolution suggests; if his organization, which I recognize as a political organization, and, as such, I am ready to extend to it every courtesy and every aid that it may deem necessary—but does the Senate need the officer that the resolution suggests? I do not think it does; and, so believing, I shall never consent, so far as I am concerned, to so vote. I should like him to answer whether or not he thinks the Senate does need the services of such an officer.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly, Mr. President. ["Regular order!"] Certainly I think we need this officer. The Senate needs it, and I should not have introduced the resolution but for that fact.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the subject of the House tariff bill. It has been obvious for month after month that there has been a deficiency of revenue. Since the present tariff bill was put in operation in every month except three there has been a deficiency.

Mr. COCKRELL. How was it before?

Mr. MORRILL. And at the present time, up to this date, in eight months of the present year, there has been a deficiency caused by insufficient revenue.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question in connection with that point?

Mr. MORRILL. After I get through.

Mr. STEWART. It is right in point.

Mr. MORRILL. Up to this moment there has been a deficiency of over $20,000,000, and if it should go on to the same extent for the remainder of the year, it will amount to $30,000,000 for the second year in which this tariff act has been in operation. Certainly it seems time that we should supply something to relieve the distress of the Treasury Department, and do something which the people of the United States would be likely to approve as looking toward a revival of the business interests of the country. I therefore make a motion for the present consideration of House bill 2749.

Mr. STEWART. Before that motion is put, the Senator from Vermont said when he got through he would allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The motion is pending.

Mr. STEWART. I insist upon the performance of the promise. I should like to inquire of the Senator what amount of cash balance is now in the Treasury, and how long it will take to draw down the cash balance to reasonable limits at the rate of $30,000,000 of deficits? How many years are we to provide for cash in the Treasury?

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, we all understand that there has been one hundred and thirty-odd million dollars which have been used by the Treasury Department for the ordinary expenses of the Government which was provided for an entirely different purpose, but so far as the question proposed by the Senator from Nevada is concerned, if the bill is taken up he will have ample time to discuss it, and so shall we all.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. MORRILL. I therefore ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency.

Mr. STEWART and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Vermont recognize the fact——

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRIS. That if his motion shall succeed, it will be to take up the bill in the morning hour, and there is no unfinished business in the morning hour?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that debate is not in order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee will please suspend. The Senator from Rhode Island makes the point of order that debate is not in order. The motion is not debatable. The Chair understood the Senator from Tennessee to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of the fact that the question was raised. The point of order is well taken, and I yield most gracefully. But I simply desire to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that this is within the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but understanding that he would vote "nay," if present, I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi, if agreeable to him, that the pair of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] may be transferred to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], which will permit the Senator from Mississippi to vote.

Mr. GEORGE. I will adopt that suggestion, and will announce that my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] is transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to state that if my colleague [Mr. MCBRIDE] were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR]. I do not see him in his seat, and withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Georgia will kindly listen, I will state that I am paired with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], who would vote "nay" if present, and I should vote "yea." I suggest to the Senator from Georgia to transfer his pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], and we can both vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that my colleague [Mr. GEAR] is absent only temporarily. I think he will be here before the roll call is concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I was just going to reply to the Senator from Massachusetts that I would wait a few moments and see if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] came in.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], leaving him paired with the Senator from Arkansas, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I vote "yea," but I announce that I shall withdraw my vote unless a pair is found with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] before the conclusion of the roll call.

Mr. BURROWS (when Mr. MCMILLAN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is detained from the Senate by indisposition. He is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], whom I do not see in the Chamber. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. THURSTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. THURSTON] stands paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. My colleague is necessarily detained from his seat to-day. I do not know how he would vote on this question, if present.

Mr. ALDRICH (when Mr. WETMORE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is absent from the Chamber at present. I think he is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. My colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will take the liberty of pairing the absent Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I understand that my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GEORGE. I stated that I was paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], and in his absence his pair with me was transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. The Senator from Oregon now stands paired with the Senator from New Jersey under that arrangement.

Mr. MCBRIDE. Then I withhold my vote, Mr. President. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], with whom I am paired, having appeared and voted, I now vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea," and I presume he would vote "nay."

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and will allow my vote to stand; otherwise I should withdraw it.

Mr. TURPIE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is detained from the Senate by serious indisposition.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] has been paired?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A pair with him has been announced, the Chair is advised.

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have a general pair, as I stated a moment ago, with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who has kindly consented to it, and I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted "yea," but the Senator from Oregon being very anxious to vote, I accommodate him by pairing with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], with whom the Senator from Oregon was paired; and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is absent and paired with his colleague [Mr. ELKINS]. I notice that his colleague has voted, I presume, inadvertently.

Mr. ELKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with my colleague from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If he were here, I suppose he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea." When I voted I thought he was here; otherwise I should have at the time announced the pair.

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the affirmative.) I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] has authorized me to make a transfer of pairs, so that I will pair him with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I will vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. Can the Senator leave the Senator from Virginia unpaired?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Montana would vote "nay," if he were here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has voted.

Mr. MANTLE (after having voted in the negative). To accommodate the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE] I withdraw my vote and stand paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. BERRY. I understand the Senator from Montana voted "nay," and the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay," if he were here.

Mr. MANTLE. If that be the case, Mr. President, I must refuse my consent to the transfer of the pair and let my vote stand. I did not understand that.

Mr. SQUIRE. Then I withdraw my vote, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote of the Senator from Washington is withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Clark,	Hawley,	Proctor,
Allison,	Cullom,	Lodge,	Quay,
Baker,	Davis,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Sherman,
Brown,	Gear,	Morrill,	Shoup.
Burrows,	Hale,	Nelson,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,

NAYS—33.

Allen,	Chilton,	Kyle,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Lindsay,	Teller,
Bate,	Dubois,	Mantle,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Martin,	Vest,
Butler,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Caffery,	Gray,	Palmer,	White.
Call,	Harris,	Pasco,
Cannon,	Hill,	Peffer,
Carter,	Jones, Nev.	Roach,

NOT VOTING—34.

Blackburn,	Gibson,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Pettigrew,	Vilas,
Brice,	Hoar,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Irby,	Pritchard,	Warren,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	Wetmore,
Elkins,	McBride,	Sewell,	Wilson,
Faulkner,	McMillan,	Smith,	Wolcott.
Frye,	Mills,	Squire,
Gallinger,	Mitchell, Wis.	Thurston,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, permit me to say that when on the 13th of this month I made the motion to take up the tariff bill, and it was lost by a vote of 21 to 29, I then thought the bill was hopelessly defeated, but I felt that it was my duty in so important a matter to give an opportunity for any change of mind on the part of the voters. [Laughter.]

Now, it is perfectly obvious that the Republican party is in a minority in this Senate. The bill on the 13th of February was defeated by 5 Populist and 4 silver Republican votes. I do not think there has been any change so far as the vote now discloses since that occasion. I think that the Republicans on the Committee on Finance will be willing to welcome any decent bill to add something to the revenue of the Treasury Department, whether it is in conformity to their views or not as to the principle of tariff, and will be ready to support any such bill which we have an opportunity to support before the session shall close. But so far as this bill is concerned, I wish to say that I do not think that it will become me to ask the Senate for any further consumption of time.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] states—what everybody has known to be a fact—that there is not a Republican majority in this Senate, and there is not a Republican majority in this Senate if those who have voted against the motion to take up this measure, made out of time and unseemly, who sit on this side of the Chamber, are in the party, which the Senator seems to think they are not.

I shall not in the morning hour undertake to discuss this bill. There is a motion here made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who, I believe, has as much claim to be called a Republican as the Senator from Vermont, to recommit this bill for defects in the bill, patent and apparent defects, defects which everybody who has read and examined the bill understands.

Mr. President, I charge here (and I shall undertake to make the charge good before this debate is over) that this bill was never introduced in either body nor has it been supported in this body with any reference to its becoming a law. It was not intended that it should become a law. Of that I shall speak at another time. If the Senator from Vermont thinks that he can embarrass us who have stood by the Republican party as long as he has, and as zealously as he has, because we do not agree with him upon every subject, he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. President, I voted against the taking up of this bill, as I shall vote against the bill if my judgment dictates that I should, and I shall remain in the Republican party in spite of the suggestions of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. It was known when this bill was introduced in the House of Representatives that it could not pass the Senate unless it had Democratic or Populist support. It was said publicly that it was not expected to pass; it was said publicly that it was for the purpose of political gain and political advantage. It is a play, Mr. President, which is degrading to the American Senate and degrading to any member of the party to which I claim to belong who shall take part in it.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I have read no man out of the Republican party; but I allude to the fact that there are 89 Senators in this body, of which the Republican party has 44 only who claim to be Republicans. Of course we are in the minority.

Mr. TELLER. Of course he knew that before. The suggestion is that we who have not voted to take up this bill are not Republicans. For thirty days the great Republican metropolitan press has read out of that party enough members to make it in the minority, if it had heretofore a majority here. Every man who voted for the free-coinage amendment to the bond bill, no matter what was his motive for voting for it, whether he was a free-coinage man and anxious to promote that purpose and that end, or whether he was against the bill, has been read out of the Republican party by the Republican press.

At the proper time I am prepared to show that the great Republican metropolitan press has declared that 18 members of this body are not worthy to be called Republicans, and we have been notified that unless we change our views upon financial questions and submit to the Cleveland Democracy and Morrill Republicanism of this country on the financial question we must go out of the party.

Mr. President, we can get along without the party as well as the party can get along without us. But we deny the right of either the newspapers or members of the Committee on Finance to read us out of the party. We shall stay in the party until we get ready to go out, and we shall discuss these questions that are so important not from a partisan standpoint, but from the standpoint of an American Senator charged with great interests, charged with doing that which the Senate has shown itself incompetent to do, and nobody more incompetent than the men who voted for the gold proposition of this Administration, charged to bring to this country prosperity, which has been denied to it under our legislation now for twenty years, charged to devise some system that shall satisfy the people that we can enter upon that degree of prosperity to which we are entitled by reason of advantages which exist in this country.

I do not want to detain the Senate, and I shall not; but I wish to enter my protest and to say that I am not to be frightened by the sneers of the chairman of the committee nor by the attacks of the press. I shall do what I think it is my duty to do here, regardless of consequences, and it seems to me that it would be in better taste and more in accordance with the dignity of the Senate if we should hear less here and elsewhere about our partisan duty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Finance I disclaim all partisan feeling in respect to the bill which the Senator from Vermont moves to bring before the Senate. That bill does not belong to any party; it is not the representative of any party. The only merit in the bill is that it proposes to furnish $40,000,000 of revenue for the support of the Government, enough to meet the current expenses of the Government. I do not think anyone can claim that that bill is a Republican measure, or that it is to be voted for by anyone on that ground, or that it has any merit whatever except the fact that it would relieve the Treasury from the deficiency now occurring and accruing and increasing every day. It is a bill prepared for an occasion, not a political one. The gentleman who prepared that bill in the House of Representatives did it in order to secure revenue for the support of the Government. I say now, Mr. President, I shall vote for any tax whatever which may be proposed by anybody, whether Democrat, Populist, or Republican, which shall supply sufficient revenue for the support of the Government.

It is a disgrace to our civilization, it is a disgrace to the country itself that we are now expending $30,000,000 a year more than the receipts of the Government, and that Congress, now in session, with both Houses fully armed with power to furnish the revenue, is idle and refuses to act.

I will vote for a tax on tea, on coffee, on anything, in order to meet this deficiency, and I say that if the present Congress does adjourn in the face of the declarations now made to us, of the official reports sent to us, of the statements made by the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, that we are now going on day by day like a careless spendthrift to involve the country in debt, selling bonds when it is the duty of Congress at once to supply the revenue——

Mr. PEFFER. The President asserts that we do not need any more revenue.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care what the President says.

Mr. PEFFER. I thought so.

Mr. SHERMAN. Every man within the sound of my voice knows that we need more revenue. Here is a statement showing that since the 1st day of last July, and up to the present month of February, 1896, there has already been a deficiency in the current revenues of $20,696,000 and that before the end of the fiscal year at the same ratio the amount of the deficiency will be $30,000,000.

If such a condition should occur in Great Britain or in any other country where they have a parliamentary law, it would dethrone any party in power, and an immediate effort would be made either to increase the income tax or to provide some other form of taxation to meet the current expenses. Yet now and every day and every hour since the passage of the present law, and even before, in view of its passage, we have been running in debt and increasing our debts. There is no occasion for it.

A tax on tea and coffee would be paid cheerfully by the people of the United States. Any tax whatever, the most obnoxious that could be collected, would be supported by the people of the United States rather than to see the funded debt increased. Already $263,000,000 of bonds have been issued during the present Administration. The issuance of the great body of those bonds was made necessary by a deficiency of revenue, and as for the remainder, it was caused by the doubt whether, under this process of financiering, we should be able to maintain the standard of our money in this country.

Sir, I have not one word to say about Populists; I have not one word to say to wound my friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] or anyone else; I do not wish to arraign any individual; but what I do is to appeal to the Senate of the United States. The other House having sent us ever so faulty a bill, let us take it up, and if it is not right let us make it right, and send it back to the House and we will have a ready concurrence. But for us to adjourn with these deficiencies accruing more and more is, as I say, not a manly action to be taken by either of the great parties or by any party that is responsible for it.

Any private citizen who would pursue such a course in his financial affairs, however rich he might be, would soon lose his credit and his reputation for solvency and good sense. There is no poverty in this country, no unwillingness to pay taxes, no reason why taxes should not be levied, and if the taxes proposed by the bill are not right, let us, in the name of heaven, provide others.

My honorable friend the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has done all he could to pass the bill. He has reported it and called it up twice, and now he has had a vote. I shall not analyze that vote, or say anything about why Senators of any party voted this way or that way. It is sufficient for us to know that our duty is not yet performed, and if the Senator from Vermont does not, I will, at the proper time and under proper circumstances, move to take up the bill and then see what the defects are.

Every Senator here appreciates the necessity for increased revenue. Every Senator knows that the hopes and expectations of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury as made in their reports have been erroneous, not from any willful design on their part, but because they did not see the natural tendency of a course of measures which every day left the Government more and more in debt, and every month the necessity——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Why does not the Senator from Ohio advise the Treasury Department to coin the $55,000,000 of seigniorage and the balance of the silver that lies in the Treasury idle and utilize it to answer the purposes of the Treasury——

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a question which has been asked before.

Mr. HARRIS (continuing). As they are in duty bound to do under the third section of what is called the Sherman Act?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Tennessee wishes to divert me to the question of the free coinage of silver. That has been tried and tested, and if ever that question met its final solution it was in the House of Representatives, freshly elected by the people, where, by a majority of almost 2 to 1, the judgment of the House of Representatives, the representatives of the people from equal and exact districts throughout the country, pronounced their denunciation of the most foolish and dangerous policy of departing from the now lawful standards of money in the country.

Sir, it is not enough for the Senator to say to me that the Senate could provide a remedy by providing for the free coinage of silver, when the fact is that 10 States whose 20 Senators voted for the free coinage of silver contain a less population than two-thirds of that of the State of Ohio. The Senate does not represent the people. It represents the States, and rightfully so, and I do not complain about it. But in the House of Representatives the people are represented according to their numbers in every portion of the United States. Let me prophesy to my honorable friend that his remedy will never be so strong in the future as it has been in the past. In my judgment the sober conviction of the people of the United States will settle down in favor of having the best standard that can be found, or that is yet known as the standard of value, with ample paper money always maintained at par with gold, to circulate in all parts of the country freely and without danger of its breaking up.

Mr. President, I have said a great deal more than I intended to say. I will merely add that I shall not consider my duty in the Senate discharged during the present session until some action is taken according to the wishes of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, not their form of action, but until we give them as the executive department of the Government sufficient money, collected from the people of the United States, to carry on the expenses of the Government. If we go home to our constituents without performing that duty, every man who can be held responsible for that condition will be severely dealt with, as I believe, by the people of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I can not afford to hold my peace and allow the false pretense that this bill is designed to produce revenue, or that there is any necessity for a bill to produce revenue, to go unheeded. The most oppressive and the most wicked part of the bond sales is the impounding of the people's money in the Treasury Department. Financial journals in this country declare that that is one of the modes of retiring greenbacks, and the favorite mode. There will be in the Treasury when the last loan shall have been paid in nearly $300,000,000 of cash balance. A deficiency of $30,000,000 a year will not draw down the cash balance in the Treasury to where it ought to be in less than four years. It will take four years for the people to get back into circulation the money which has been unlawfully taken from them by these bond sales. It will take four years to reduce this unhealthy surplus in the Treasury, it matters not how it has got there. It is a sham, a pretext. Anyone who seeks to put more money there wants to impound the greenbacks to a greater extent. Additional taxation, when there is about $300,000,000 in the Treasury, when there is a cash balance which at the present rate of deficiency can not be drawn down to a reasonable limit in less than four years, it seems to me, is outrageous, and I hope that Congress will not adjourn until it takes some means of relieving the Treasury of the surplus that has been taken away from the people.

The gold standard and the policy of impounding what little money is left has distressed the country, and when it is said that the country is anxious for more taxation, that the country is rich and abounding in money and anxious for further taxation, I deny it. I deny that in all the history of this country there was ever such general distress as prevails to-day after twenty-five years of peace and abundant harvests. I deny that with the money impounded as it is now, with contracting circulating medium, the resources of this country can be made available. The wealth of the United States is not in its debts.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEWART. Let me finish this sentence.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. But it consists in its productive power. There has not been 33⅓ per cent of that productive power made available for the last three years because of want of money. Falling prices paralyze industry, and here we have a proposition to put $40,000,000 a year more in the Treasury and contract the currency that much more.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to suggest to my Populist colleague that this is not the time to discuss the general principles of finance. Let us make a proposition to these gentlemen.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, I beg pardon. I say that when the false pretense that the people should be further taxed to pile up money in the Treasury is put forth as a reason for passing this emergency bill, I do not propose to sit still and let it go to the country in that shape. This an emergency bill! This bill that is not for legislation, but for agitation; a bill to keep the tariff question open; a bill to run only two years; a bill to disturb business interests; a bill to set the country quarreling about the tariff for the purpose of burying other issues upon which the prosperity of the human race depends!

I wonder if there is any truth in what we constantly hear? It comes to me in letters every day that there is an arrangement whereby this bill, if it can go to the Executive without amendment, is to be signed by the President. I have received hundreds of letters saying, "Do not amend it; the President is going to sign it as it is." I wonder if the partnership between Cleveland Democracy and gold Republicanism is perfected and satisfactory? Is this a scheme between the gold forces at both ends of the Capitol to get a bill through to retire the greenbacks?

I know there are parties here and at the other end of the Capitol who are in favor of retiring the greenbacks, and it is suggested that we sell two or three hundred million dollars more of bonds and get them all out of the way. I wonder if they have agreed by this means to extract from the people $40,000,000 a year more for the purpose of retiring the greenbacks?

I do not charge that any such arrangement has been made, but the advocates of this bill, the lobby for this bill, have flooded the Western country with letters to the effect that if it should pass without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t" it will become a law, and calling upon them to petition us to give them relief for their wool. There is very little relief in this bill for wool if it should become a law and remain on the statute books permanently. The relief is all for the manufacturers of wool, with 100 per cent advantage against the woolgrowers of the United States in favor of the woolgrowers of silver-standard countries. With that 100 per cent advantage our woolgrowers never will feel any tariff that there is in the bill.

Prices will continue to go down. If there is to be honest tariff legislation, let us equalize exchanges and protect the American farmer, planter, woolgrower, and manufacturer from Asiatic competition. But a bill for agitation is presented here, and then we are appealed to in the name of patriotism to take more money from the people and pile higher and higher this colossal surplus in the Treasury. No matter how the surplus has got there, it is there. We should devise some way to get it out, and not put more there. There is no necessity for the bill. It is not in good faith. It is a sham pretext. It is to get a political advantage. It is to have the tariff issue, so that they can have some pretense between the Republican and the Democratic parties for a contest—a tariff issue of some kind, tariff agitation of some kind, in order to make an issue for the politicians. That is what this bill is, and it will deceive nobody.

At first people in my country were deceived, but the news comes now: "We see the trick. We know that it is to get an advantage; to bury the silver question and put the tariff question at the head. We know that New England will get all the benefit of it, should it become a permanent law. We know we can get no relief unless we can remove the difference of exchange; and we appeal to you now to give the manufactures of the East nothing unless they give us a degree of reciprocity such as they are willing to give foreign countries. For a generation we have given them all they asked for without any reciprocity. All we get for our votes to build up their monopolies is their sneers. That is all the West gets." The people of the West say to the Republican party: "While we have stood by you and have built up your New England monopolies, we have got nothing but sneers, and we are now ridiculed in your press for representing the productive forces of the country."

An emergency tariff bill under the plea of piling up more revenue in the Treasury, but for the real purpose of contracting the currency and making times worse. Ah, do you think you can make times so bad that the people can not resist your oppression? Do you think you have got them to that point? Do you think you can make them so poor that they can not go to the polls? You will be mistaken. The American people will rebel against your tyranny. This is not the first time the two old parties have united and become one. The party of Jefferson and the party of Hamilton, the two parties, the Federal party and the Republican party, united to maintain the money monopoly, the United States bank. They became one party for all practical purposes. The people rose in their might, and Andrew Jackson hurled the unholy alliance out of power. The party of Jackson assumed the name of Democrat, the name of the Republican party being so odious that no man was willing to carry it. The party of Hamilton, the Federal party, was named the Whig party by Henry Clay because nobody would fight under the banner of the Federal party.

The two parties stayed away from each other and fought each other for a few years, but in the fifties they came together again to maintain chattel slavery. The Whigs and Democrats became one in 1860. They died. The question between slavery and abolition was fought out on the bloody battlefield. Slavery was destroyed when one of the combatants was exhausted. But when the war closed the whole South united with a portion of the North and took unto themselves the name of Democratic party, and asked the country to trust them. The country did not trust them at first, but when the gold party, the Republican party, became intolerable the country turned to the Democratic party.

But the Democratic party never came into power. When they elected a President he happened to be a substitute. They happened to get a Republican, a JOHN SHERMAN Republican, as a substitute. No Democrat got in at all. That brought another marriage of the two old parties. We find the Republicans and the Cleveland Democracy one and the same, singing the same song. Do not doubt it at all. The people have rallied every time. You can not tread them under your feet so that they can not rise. The American people will meet every emergency. They will meet the combined forces of Cleveland Democracy and SHERMAN Republicanism and overthrow them.

A marriage between parties is death. Parties are made to oppose each other, and when they come together the people have no use for them because the people want different parties. The Republican party will share the same fate. The Republicans and the Federalists did in the twenties; the Whigs and Democrats did in the fifties. The Republican party has lived now as long as any party ever did. Forty years is the limit. The old Federal party lived forty years before it was entirely killed. The Democratic and Whig parties lived only about thirty years until they were destroyed, and the Democratic party had to be reorganized. It was practically not in existence during the war. They lived thirty years.

It has been forty years since the Republican party came into existence. It has served its day. It has betrayed its cause. It has become an enemy of the people. It started as a friend of the people. It started in favor of free labor; in favor of free men. It has now become a party of slavery, a party of bonded slavery, a party which if its principles can succeed, according to the desire of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], will relegate the people to the same condition of feudal slavery and serfdom from which mankind emerged by the discovery of gold and silver in Mexico and South America. The same causes produce like effects, and it is to be presumed that the Republican party mean to enslave the people of the United States, because they are using the only means by which slavery can be produced, the only means by which any great nation was ever reduced to serfdom. They are depriving the people of their money and they propose to do it. In this very bill they propose to add to the grievance under the pretext of raising revenue. Under the pretext of raising revenue and increasing taxation they want to take from the people more of the means by which they can pay taxes, reducing them faster than the gold standard will do it if legitimately operated. We tell you that the people will not indorse the union of the Republican and Democratic parties for the purpose of oppression and wrong. They will not do it.

The distress in this country is unparalleled. For Senators to say here that these are good times and that the people are anxious for more taxes is adding insult to injury.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] should see fit to run the Finance Committee out of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. STEWART. The Finance Committee never could stand the truth. They always leave when I talk.

Mr. ALLEN. There ought to be something more practical.

Mr. STEWART. It is unpleasant for men to hear of their own misdeeds. If they stand here and do not deny it, they are afraid the people will ascertain what they have done and why they did it. The destruction of one-half of the people's money and the contraction of the gold standard, the paralyzation of business, are all the work of the Finance Committee. Do you wonder that they went out of the Senate Chamber?

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator give me the floor for a minute? I think I have it.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator can have the floor now all he wants.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the trouble is that nothing practical will come out of the discussion here. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] are permitted to run away from the Chamber without any practical result coming from the propositions they make.

The Senator from Vermont has undertaken to cast upon the Populist party the responsibility for a failure to carry his motion this morning. It is responsible, Mr. President, and it is perfectly willing to assume the responsibility and all the consequences that may flow from it. I see present my amiable and distinguished friend the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who always coaches the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who has said he is a bimetallist and that his party is a bimetallic party, whether he is willing to take the tariff bill just exactly as it comes from the House of Representatives with a free silver coinage amendment attached to it?

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Nebraska wish an answer from me?

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to have an answer from some responsible head of the Republican party, if it has one.

Mr. ALDRICH. I answer, then, frankly, no, with as much emphasis as it is possible for me to use.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to hear it, because it stamps the Republican party as the enemy of bimetallism. Your party has been masquerading for three years under false pretenses in this Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN (to Mr. ALLEN). Ask him if he would take the McKinley law with free coinage.

Mr. ALLEN. You would not even——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask——

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Alabama suggests that I ask you if you will take the McKinley bill with free coinage. Will you do that?

Mr. PLATT. No.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Connecticut says "No." Are there any circumstances under which you will take free coinage?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir——

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Except by an international agreement.

Mr. ALDRICH. Unless an international agreement on the subject shall be first secured.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes. Now, that discloses exactly what we have always claimed. There are no circumstances under which you are bimetallists.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLEN. You have lied upon the question, if I may speak metaphorically, for three years to my certain knowledge. For three years you have stood in this Chamber and have undertaken to make the people of this country believe that you are bimetallists, and now when you are put to the test you will not take silver with this tariff bill and you will not take it with the McKinley bill and you will not take it under any circumstances.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator from Nebraska intend to say that the Republican party of this country has ever tried to make the people believe that it was in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1——

Mr. ALLEN. That is it exactly.

Mr. PLATT. Wait a moment. By the United States alone? Does the Senator intend to say that the Republican party has ever taken that position?

Mr. ALDRICH. Anywhere?

Mr. PLATT. Anywhere?

Mr. ALLEN. You took it in 1892. I have not got your platform here.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will turn to it.

Mr. PLATT. I will tell the Senator what the platform is. It is that we are in favor of the use of both silver and gold as money——

Mr. TELLER. As standard money.

Mr. PLATT. As standard money, upon such conditions as will keep both at a parity.

Mr. ALLEN. But you never tried that.

Mr. PLATT. That is practically the language of the platform.

Mr. ALLEN. I have here the platform of 1892.

Mr. STEWART. In your platform of 1888 you said the Republican party was in favor of the use of gold and silver as standard money.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It did not say that. It said, "We demand the use of both gold and silver as standard money."

Mr. ALLEN. I have the platform here.

Mr. STEWART. And it said, "We condemn the Administration of the Democratic party for its efforts to demonetize silver." But you refuse to use silver as standard money.

Mr. ALLEN. Here is what the platform of 1892 says:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal.

Mr. ALDRICH. We stand on that now.

Mr. TELLER. No, we do not.

Mr. ALLEN. The platform of 1892 proceeds:

The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workingmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international conference to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to my friend from Nebraska that he has had great difficulty in times past in elucidating the platform of his own party——

Mr. ALLEN. Never in the world.

Mr. ALDRICH. And it seems to me that it would be more becoming in him to allow the platforms of the other parties to be explained by persons who were members of such parties, respectively.

Mr. ALLEN. No; that is altogether wrong. I wanted to bring out in this discussion, and we do bring it out, the fact that the claim of the Republican party as being a bimetallic party was a falsehood.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. There has never been a time when you have been in favor of bimetallism.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator himself take the McKinley bill with free silver?

Mr. ALLEN. I have made no offer or agreement to give it to these gentlemen.

Mr. PALMER. I think the most dangerous and alarming symptom is the possibility of some combination between those who demand protection for domestic industry, as they call it——

Mr. ALDRICH. There is not the slightest danger.

Mr. PALMER. And those who own silver bullion. That is the dangerous combination.

Mr. PLATT (to Mr. PALMER). Do not be alarmed on that score.

Mr. STEWART. There is no danger of that. The combination is with the Democracy.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply wanted to say to the Republicans on the other side of this Chamber, you have 44 votes. If you want to take your tariff bill with a free-coinage amendment attached to it, the Populist party stand here pledged to give you 6 votes to carry that joint measure. Now, will you do it?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the trouble with the Senator from Nebraska is that his only definition of bimetallism is the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 by the United States alone. I say that is no honest definition of bimetallism. The only honest definition of bimetallism——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut give us a definition of bimetallism?

Mr. PLATT. The only honest definition of bimetallism that has been put forth in this country is the definition put forth in the platform of the Republican party in 1892. What the Senator from Nebraska means is silver monometallism and nothing else. If he supposes that the Republican party——

Mr. ALLEN. Now, Mr. President, let me make a suggestion to the Senator right there.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will allow me.

Mr. ALLEN. Less than ten minutes ago the financial chief of your party stood in this Chamber and said gold monometallism is what we should have in this country, and not one of you arose to correct him or object to his statement.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I have but a moment before the morning hour will expire. The Republican party is going into the next campaign on the platform of 1892 with reference to silver and gold and our currency. It needs no other platform. Of course I can not speak for that party, but as one member of it I can say that I believe it will go again into the campaign upon the doctrine of protection and the doctrine of bimetallism as laid down in that platform.

Mr. STEWART. I would be very much obliged to the Senator if he would let me ask him one question.

Mr. PLATT. Wait one moment.

Mr. STEWART. Only one question.

Mr. PLATT. And when the silver monometallists of this country propose to antagonize protection with the unlimited coinage of silver the death knell of their delusion and craze has struck.

Mr. STEWART. Now, allow me to ask——

Mr. PLATT. I want to refer to the platform for a moment.

Mr. STEWART. Will you let me ask a question?

Mr. PLATT. No. The platform of 1892 says:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal.

There is where we stand. There is where we propose to stand, Mr. President, and we are not to take any bimetallism which will make one dollar more valuable in its debt-paying and purchasing power than any other dollar.

Mr. STEWART. Now, will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. GEAR. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. No; I can not yield.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator is not very polite.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, we have five different kinds of dollars in this country. We have the gold dollar, the silver dollar, the greenback dollar, the Treasury-note dollar, and the silver-certificate dollar. Each one of those dollars is just as good as the other in this country——

Mr. STEWART. No, no.

Mr. PLATT. Because we have kept them at a parity. Each one in debt-paying and purchasing power is equal to any other dollar in this country.

Mr. STEWART. Why do you not pay bonds with it, then, and redeem them?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I have spoken of our five different kinds of dollars. Because they have been kept of the same debt-paying and purchasing power, our finances are in a condition where the country is not distressed and destroyed, so far as currency is concerned; but you can take the silver dollar of ours and go down into Mexico, where they have free and unlimited coinage of silver, and you can buy two Mexican dollars with our dollar.

Mr. GALLINGER. And each one with more silver in it.

Mr. PLATT. Each one with more silver in it than our dollar. What the advocates of bimetallism, which is silver monometallism, would drive this country to is just to that condition, in which one dollar would buy twice as much in this country as another dollar.

Now, the Republican party does not believe in that bimetallism, and the Republican party does not propose to take protection when coupled with that bimetallism as a threat that it can not have protection without. I want here to say to those who advocate that kind of bimetallism, which means silver monometallism, and one dollar worth twice as much as another in this country, and who take the stand that protection is to fail in this country unless the Republicans who favor protection accept that kind of bimetallism, that they can not stand against or stem the tide of protection sentiment in this country and in their own communities. It will override all such delusions. The people of this country have fully determined one thing, and that is, that in this year of grace 1896, in the early November of that year, they will make their voice heard for that protection which will fill both the Treasury of the United States and the pockets of the workingmen, and woe be to silver or anything else that proposes to stand in the way of that verdict of the people!

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I want to deny emphatically that the Republican party is in favor of the use of silver as money, if their acts form any indication of their intention or as to what they believe. They refuse to pay out silver, but borrow gold. They indorse Cleveland's policy of making that discrimination. They believe in issuing bonds to buy gold for gold gamblers, and will not use silver as money. The silver that we have got in the Treasury is worth no more than so much pig iron, so far as any use is now made of it. The gold foundation you make stands on the little gold that you borrow, and that is the reason why your finances are trembling; that is the reason why you have bankrupted the country. It is because you give the lie to your platform that you would use silver as money. I have been working on that for ten years——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A concurrent resolution relative to the war in Cuba, reported by Mr. MORGAN on the 5th instant from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Alabama give way to me one minute? I want to state what the platform was in 1888. It said the Republican party is in favor of using both gold and silver as money, and that it condemns the action of the Democratic Administration in its effort to demonetize silver. Again, the party declared in 1892 that it was in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money. But the Republicans will not use it. They have bankrupted the country to borrow gold because they would not use silver, because they would not obey the law, because they would not obey their solemn promises in their platforms. That is what the Republicans have done.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have not borrowed money.

Mr. STEWART. They have passed a bill through the other House to borrow money, and they are in favor of it. They stand by Cleveland, and they will not investigate his bond transactions. They will not do anything about it at all. They think it is a good thing. They stand by and indorse him. Here is the bond bill put through the other House for no other purpose but to indorse the principle of borrowing gold in time of peace for gold gamblers, because you will not use silver as money, because you will not tell the truth in your platforms that you will obey the law and use silver as money. All this silver is piled up and $1,100,000,000 rests on the little gold you borrow. That is the reason why you have bankrupted the country. Then you talk about protection! You who have created a difference of exchange amounting to 100 per cent of protection to silver-standard countries where our competition comes from. You by your gold standard have produced a wall of protection against this country, and you refuse to tear down that wall, and yet say that you are protectionists.

Is there no good faith in anything you do? It seems not. You are not for protection. We offer you 100 per cent protection and you will not accept it. But you will put us in competition with cheap labor. That is what you like. There is no sham about it at all. The people want real protection, and the first step to it is to equalize exchange and rid us of the 100 per cent advantage which the Asiatic has, by which he has reduced the price of farm products below the cost of production, and by which he will visit dire punishment upon you unless you can pass a prohibitory tariff law, which you can not do unless you recognize the West and the South as a part of this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Alabama, I desire merely to state that I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber this morning when the vote was taken on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to take up the so-called revenue bill for consideration. I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who seems also to have been absent. Had he been here he would have announced that pair. I now desire to say that had I been here and permitted to vote I should have voted in favor of taking up the bill, and undoubtedly the senior Senator from Texas would have voted against taking up the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Alabama, who, I understand, desires to speak on the Cuban resolution, yield to me until I ask consent for the consideration of a bill?

Mr. MORGAN. What is the bill the Senator wishes to have considered?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 1922) creating an art commission of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I think that bill can wait until it is reached on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me two minutes?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I have been instructing my constituents, business men, for the last month and a half that there was not the slightest possibility of the House tariff bill becoming a law. I think I have known for a month that it was dead. After the two votes, one of a fortnight ago and the other of to-day, there is not a Senator here who does not know that it is as dead as Julius Cæsar, and that there is no resurrection whatever for it. The business men of this country ought to know it now, and they ought to conduct their business with a view to the fact that it is dead. When the Democratic party of the Senate and the Populistic party of the Senate both announce that they by their votes will not support this tariff bill, that they will not consider it, it is utterly hopeless for any Republican to undertake to obtain its consideration.

I wish to dissent from the proposition made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that it was his duty and the duty of Republicans to further undertake to obtain consideration for this dead bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps the Senator from Maine did not hear the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, in which he said that he would not further ask for the consideration of the measure.

Mr. FRYE. I did not hear the chairman of the committee make that statement. I am very glad he did so, and I trust that no Republican will undertake to have a vote again on the consideration of the bill. Suppose, as the Senator from Ohio suggested, it should be taken up and could be amended, there is not a Senator here who does not know that more than 600 amendments would be offered to it, and Senators know perfectly well that more than three months' time would be consumed in its consideration, and that the business of the country would be held on the ragged edge for the whole of that period. Business has had blows enough during the last two or three years. Congress should not inflict any more upon it.

I trust, sir, this bill will not be heard from again, and that no Republican Senator, no friend of protection, will ask the Senate to give it any further consideration. Let it be dead, and let the responsibility lie where it belongs.

WAR IN CUBA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the concurrent resolution reported by Mr. MORGAN on the 5th instant from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I had reserved to myself, with the consent of the Senator from Delaware, who will succeed me in this debate, the opportunity to present to the Senate the documents that I spoke of yesterday; and being very desirous to get before the country and the Senate, as far as it is possible to do so, an authentic statement of all the facts that are necessary to be considered in discussing this resolution and in coming to a vote upon it, I will present the civil organization of the Republic of Cuba, of which Mr. Salvador Cisneros Betancourt is the President, and which was adopted at Mangus de Baragua on the 16th of October, 1895. I will not undertake to read this document, but I will ask that it be appended to my remarks as it is printed from page 30 to page 35, both inclusive. [See Appendix A.]

There are a number of other regulations affecting the military and also laws ordained to govern the civil relations of the people of the Republic of Cuba which would be very interesting for examination; and I hope that those who choose to debate this question and those who wish to give it a very thorough consideration will refer to those laws, some of them relating to civil marriage and to other civil institutions, laws for the service of communications and the postal system, laws to regulate the public treasury, and laws of the government council of the nation, all of which are very admirably prepared and embody a most excellent system of government as it is adapted to the situation in Cuba at this time.

My purpose in presenting this paper is to show that there is a civil foundation for that government. Cisneros Betancourt is the President of that Republic. He was the President of the Republic at the time of the surrender in 1878. That fact is stated in the papers sent in by the President of the United States in his message May 14, 1878, which I will also print as an appendix to my remarks, in which will be found two letters written by the then minister of Spain at this capital, Antonio Mantilla, which relate to the terms of the capitulation that were entered into by the Republic of Cuba in 1878. I will read from one of the dispatches announcing the result of that reconciliation. It is from Flores, and was dated at Santa Cruz on the 12th of February, 1878. It is addressed to Director del "Diario de la Marina," Habana, and is as follows:

> The peace of the island is now a fact about to be realized. The President of the Cuban Republic, Maximo Gomez, chamber and government in accord with the force of the Camaguey, are at work to realize peace. Also, in the Villas and Oriental departments. For those two departments commissions of important chiefs have left with that object. Hostilities suspended in all the island.
>
> FLORES.

An examination of these papers shows a distinct recognition of the existence of the Republic of Cuba at the time this capitulation took place, and it shows that Maximo Gomez, who is the commander-in-chief of the armies of the Cuban Republic as it now exists, was busily engaged in an effort, which was applauded by the Spaniards, an honorable effort, to secure peace upon the terms of the capitulation that was entered into at that time between the Spaniards and the Cubans. That capitulation contains various stipulations, some of them added to the original article by after agreement.

In order to get the history of that transaction clearly before the Senate and the people of the United States, I will ask leave to print as an appendix to my remarks each of these letters. I would not encumber the RECORD with these extensive publications but that it is necessary in order to get at an exact statement of the political situation in the Island of Cuba at the time this capitulation took place. I also wish to emphasize the fact that the constitution and plan of organization of Cisneros, who was then President of the Republic, and is now again President of the Republic as it is at present declared, is in substance the same government that is now restored and is in operation, as is set forth in the document which I now present. (See Appendix B.)

These papers show the existence in 1878, and for more than ten years before that time, of a republic in the Island of Cuba, which was recognized as such in the capitulation itself, not in the very language of the capitulation, but in all of the attendant information and facts which were given out to the public by the minister of Spain at this capital in order to justify the conduct of the Spanish Government and also to satisfy this country that permanent peace had ensued.

I mentioned on yesterday that the Cubans who now comprise this Government, including of course the army that is now in existence, insist that their present action is justified entirely, and by subsequent abuses which took place after that capitulation, which involve violations of the agreement entered into between Spain and Cuba, on various occasions, some of which acts, as charged by the Cubans, are very outrageous, if they be true. Perhaps it is not necessary for me to express an opinion on the question as to whether their allegations are true or not, except as a justification of the course that the committee have taken and that I am now advocating on the floor of the Senate. I do believe in their truth; I have nowhere seen them disputed. They stand forth as facts which have been published to the world now for more than a year without any contradiction that I have ever seen.

The war which has ensued for the purpose of the redress of those grievances and for the reclamation of those rights that were thus betrayed into the hands of the Spanish Crown by a breach of their solemn obligation has progressed to the degree and condition of open, public war, which I undertook yesterday to establish both from the accounts of the Cubans and from the accounts given by our own consuls in their communications sent to this Government.

Martinez Campos is everywhere spoken of in the papers to which I have just referred as a man of broad patriotism, great ability and benevolence; as a man who, when he was fighting the men against whom he was arrayed from 1867 to 1878, always regarded them as if they were brethren in arms opposed to him, and his conciliatory spirit, his desire to reconcile the people of Cuba to further submission to the Spanish Monarchy, is everywhere complimented and referred to with applause as being the cause of the composure which took place at the end of that civil war. When Martinez Campos was recently removed from his command of the army of Spain that occupied the Island of Cuba apprehensions were entertained and expressions on all sides were heard that no one could succeed him who could conduct that war in such a way as to heal up the wounds between the Cubans and the Spanish people, nearly all of whom are descended from the same stock, and when he was recalled to Spain after the failure of his campaign there, and after the resources of Spain had been almost exhausted, there was one general expression of regret by the people of the civilized world that so great and so noble a character had been withdrawn from the arena of war and had been retired into private life.

I do not hesitate, Mr. President, on my part, to express my regret at that occurrence, because while Campos was in the field I still had a hope that the Government of Spain would see that in order to keep her hold upon the affections of the people of Cuba and to command their honest allegiance she would be compelled to accord to them a form of government corresponding to that which is exercised in Canada as a province of the Crown of Great Britain; but the Spanish Government seems to be infatuated with the idea that absolute submission must take place in that island to every demand which is urged against those people, and when anything that is demanded is refused extermination is to be the result.

When General Weyler was sent there as captain-general he assumed to himself the double function of a supreme court judge and captain-general, and announced in the proclamation (which I will print in my remarks) that he assumed at one and the same time the functions of generalissimo and commander-in-chief of the army and the office of supreme judge of that country. Thereupon he issued a manifesto consisting of three proclamations, which I will place in the RECORD, which show, without any possibility of misunderstanding, his determination to sacrifice private life and all the liberties of the people whenever he chose to do so for the purpose of extending, consolidating, and enforcing his decrees and his power. By that judgment he placed every inhabitant of Cuba, without reference to nationality, in a position of absolute subjection to his individual and unrestrained will. Then he goes into various details which affect the people of Cuba, the people who live out in the forests and in the country, to such an extent that life itself would be an intolerable burden when it has to be lived under such circumstances. These are the papers which I desire to put in the RECORD. (See Appendix B.)

A gentleman has sent me this morning a newspaper printed in the city of Washington, The Evening Times, a very respectable paper, containing in its telegraphic columns a statement from Dr. Guiteras, in which he makes reply to a recent statement made by General Weyler in the matter of his execution of this decree. It seems that General Weyler had denied that since he had been in command of the island a single execution had been made. Dr. Guiteras scarcely credited the reports of these executions which came from the island, but yesterday a batch of letters in cipher was received by him, and after translating them he said:

> I have been loath to believe the reports of the killing of prisoners in the field and in the prisons since the arrival of Governor Weyler. These reports have been specially denied by General Weyler himself. I have received to-day letters from Habana that confirm the report. I am now firmly convinced that prisoners are quietly disposed of by some officer in the field, and that some prisoners have been brought to the forts in Habana and Matanzas who have subsequently disappeared without their friends knowing what has become of them.
>
> I have in one of these letters the names of three prisoners, but can not give them at this time, as it would disclose the source of my information. I would add that this question has been referred to me especially by friends in Cuba with an appeal that I should exert whatever influence I may have to bring about a termination of this frightful state of affairs. I can do nothing better than appeal to the American press. The section in a letter from Habana which treats of the matter is as follows:
>
> "It happens every day that prisoners are brought to this city. Some are sent to jail, and others to the fortifications. These last, if they belong to the lower classes, are made to disappear. A reason assigned is that there is not money enough to keep them. That is, you will understand, frightful. I am absolutely sure of what I am telling you, and you must make an effort to put a stop to it by appealing to the press of America.
>
> "I have heard of similar stories for some time, but I could find no responsible person to repeat them to me, and I thought them too horrible to believe, though I know the man we are dealing with, but no doubt is left in my mind. It is known that the procedure is common in the field, but is not so frequently employed in the city."

I have an apprehension, which I can not repress, that if General Weyler remains in the command of the army of Spain in Cuba there will be destruction of life at his will and pleasure, perhaps in such a manner as not to be disclosed to the world for two or three or four years to come; but it seems that it is already apparent, in the case of three prisoners, that they have been killed after being captured.

I do not care, Mr. President, to enter more fully into a recital of these horrible incidents, because this is not in the slightest degree necessary to justify the position of the Government of the United States that war exists in Cuba, open, public civil war, and that it is to the interest and welfare of our own people, regardless of our sympathies for the Cubans, regardless of the effect it may have upon the Spaniards or the Cubans, that we should give a recognition, justified by the fact of the belligerency of those two powers in Cuba, and that is as far as we need to go.

Something has been said in this debate on the subject of the proper method of making this declaration. The resolution before the Senate declares that, in the opinion of Congress, a state of public war exists in Cuba, and that it is the duty of the United States to recognize the belligerency of the hostile parties.

What is the effect of such a declaration of opinion on the part of the Congress of the United States? If the effect should be to cause some contrary attitude to be imputed, as existing between the President and the two Houses of Congress, it would be indeed very unfortunate. If Congress should pass a resolution of this kind and the President of the United States, conceiving that our action was only advisory and was not mandatory, should withhold the declaration or should not predicate any Executive act upon it, it would leave the Government of the United States in a position to be severely criticised by our people and by the other powers of the world.

I do not anticipate any such difficulty between the President and Congress. I have no right to do so, from the message which the President sent us at the beginning of this session of Congress, for he recognized the fact of the existence of open and bloody war in Cuba; and I must suppose—I do suppose and I believe also—that when the President of the United States becomes satisfied that it is to the best interests of the people of the United States that there should be a recognition of that belligerency he will concur in the opinion that is expressed in this resolution, and will exert whatever of authority he has as the Chief Executive of this nation to sanction and enforce that resolution. But if he should decline to do so, then the attitude of Congress would be such that we should be regarded as intermeddling with matters with which we have no constitutional concern, and we should be amenable to such a criticism in the event that I have supposed, because the President of the United States can not refuse to respect the will of Congress when it is expressed in a constitutional method upon any subject.

If it is a matter of legislation to which his veto power applies, and if he shall exercise his veto, he is bound to respect the act; he is bound to consider the measure; he is bound either to return it to the House in which it originated, or else he may let it pass over for ten days, in which case it becomes a law and an effectual expression of the legislative will. But to put ourselves in an attitude in reference to a great question of this kind, where the President is at liberty to act or not to act as he sees proper, and where it is to be imputed to his action that it is to give validity and effect to what we do or to the opinion which we express here, it becomes a very serious matter whether we should pass this resolution in the form in which it is now presented.

The question of the power of the President of the United States in respect of the declaration of belligerency between two foreign powers has never undergone conclusive judicial investigation, nor has the Congress of the United States ever given to this subject a decided expression of their opinion upon it. It may therefore be styled a new question. In the consideration of this question the Constitution of the United States alone can rule. There is no other law to which we can appeal to arrive at a decision as between the Executive and the Congress of the United States upon this matter.

Suppose, for instance, that some one should propose to amend this resolution and strike out the words "in the opinion of Congress," and leave it as a clear, emphatic, unequivocal declaration on the part of the two Houses that a public war exists in Cuba and that the Government of the United States recognizes the belligerency of those parties in order that the Government and the people may be put in an attitude where the duties of neutrality would attach to us under the international law, then we should have a declaration here which would assume upon the face of it that this concurrent action on the part of the two Houses of Congress would of itself be a recognition of the existence of the public war, the belligerency of the two parties, and our consequent international neutrality.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Suppose some one, in addition to the amendment of striking out the words "in the opinion," should add "and Congress hereby recognizes the belligerent rights," etc., what does the Senator have to say as to that?

Mr. MORGAN. That would only make the resolution a little more impressive or a little more emphatic in the definition of the attitude of Congress, because if we should strike out the words "in the opinion of Congress," that would then leave this as the declaration on the part of the two Houses of Congress that a public war does exist in Cuba and that we recognize neutrality.

Mr. FRYE. But suppose the words "it is the duty" were left out of the resolution, what then?

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps those words ought to be left out to make the declaration as emphatic as the Senator from Maine now suggests.

Mr. PEFFER. While the Senator is on that point, will it not also involve concurrent action on the part of the Executive? Because, as the Senator very properly stated the other day, this question involves the right of seizure and involves certain Executive acts that might amount to watching and guarding and sometimes affirmative action on the part of the Executive. Would not such a declaration as the Senator from Maine suggests to that extent also involve the Executive; and if so, suppose the Executive should differ with Congress?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the committee of course have endeavored to avoid raising a question of this kind. They have not anticipated that any action of the Executive would make it necessary that they should raise it, or that the question would arise, or that it should be settled by any vote to be taken here. I will repeat that I do not anticipate that a question of that kind will occur; yet it might; and in shaping our resolution here we must be careful that we keep ourselves within the line of our constitutional powers and duties, and also careful that we do not surrender to any other department of this Government a portion of the power that the Constitution lodges in Congress.

Mr. FRYE. That is just what I should like to hear the Senator upon, whether or not, in his judgment, the Congress itself has the power to recognize belligerent rights without any intervention of the President of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution there is an enumeration of the powers of Congress. Several powers are mentioned, such as to coin money, etc., establish post-offices, promote the progress of science, to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

This power to declare war is associated with all those other powers in the same section, which affect and relate only to the civil administration of the Government, to the Government in a state and condition of peace, and for that reason some very able gentlemen have concluded that, being thus associated with this general delegation of powers to Congress, it must take its class with them, and be subject to all of the incidents that belong to the exercise of these general powers in other cases.

I am not prepared to subscribe to that construction of this instrument. I believe that the power to declare war and grant letters of marque and reprisal, and more especially the power to declare war, is a power which, from the very nature of it, when taken in connection with the other provisions of the Constitution relating to war and the conduct of war, stands by itself, and it must be exercised by Congress without the aid, or assistance, or participation of the Executive. It is the nature of the power to be thus exercised that I rely upon as separating it in its incidents and consequences from the other general powers which Congress has conferred upon it under the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution from which I have just been reading. The power to declare war is not a legislative power.

The framers of the Constitution understood perhaps as well as or better than any of us to-day—because they were in the midst of war and the Government which they were founding had just passed through a great struggle with the greatest monarchy then in the world—they understood particularly well what were and should be the functions of the Executive of the United States and the powers of Congress in respect of the declaration of war and the conduct of war, and in respect of making provision for the support of armies and navies, so as to leave it entirely in the hands of the popular branch of Congress to make appropriations for these purposes, or to originate appropriations for these purposes, putting a limit upon the power of the House in making the appropriations that they should be renewed once every two years; thus showing that, in the consideration of the war powers of the Government of the United States, they dissociated these powers from the general mass of powers that are conferred upon the Congress of the United States and placed them in a peculiar light; and it is in that light and in consideration of the purposes that the framers of the Constitution must have had in mind when they organized this splendid system of government that we are to interpret their intentions.

We must consider this question now, and we must not forget the impressions that evidently were foremost in their minds at that time, and by neglect allow the powers of the Congress of the United States to pass into the hands of one of the coordinate departments, in whole or in part, in the extreme case, the terrible case, when this country shall be involved in war.

The war power is to be sacredly guarded, and the people who are held obedient to it and must fight its battles and suffer its devastations should have the exclusive right to declare the existence of a state of war.

The state of war as it affects the citizen, the property of the citizen, his relations to foreign countries, the treaties between this Government and the Government with which we are at war, might be called a total change, a total departure from the state of the country when it is at peace. When the country is at peace the citizen is not required, on any occasion, to give up any of his constitutional rights of protection and of resort to the ordinary tribunals of law for the redress of his wrongs or the enforcement of his rights.

When a state of war supervenes, however, his person, his property, and all that belongs to him are subjected by the laws of nations and the Constitution of the United States to the behests of the Government to answer its purposes, even though in doing so he may surrender his life and all that he has. His duty of submission to the military power of the United States, lawfully exercised in time of war, may be called almost absolute, whereas in time of peace all the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States cluster about him to save him against any arbitrary power or the command of any individual that he shall do this or that or that he omit to do this or that. The condition of war changes almost absolutely and almost completely all the relations of this Government to its own people and to the country with which we are engaged in belligerency, and also, in a collateral way, with the people of the whole world.

So those provisions of the Constitution of the United States that were made for a state of war and adapted to a state of war must be attended with those conditions which make it possible that the Government of the United States shall act as a unit, and shall make it impossible that there should be any division of authority between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government in the recognition which is the declaration of the existence of a state of war.

If there is anything more necessary to the successful conduct of a war than all else, it is the fact that the power of the Government that is engaged in a war is lodged at least in the hands of a single man, or a single tribunal. No possibility of a division of interest, a division of sentiment, a division of will between the high functionaries of a Government can be admitted if the Government that is bound to make this admission is engaged in a war with a foreign country, or even with its own people in insurrection. There must be unity, absolute and perfect unity, in the power that conducts a war, and any division of it that is possible is to that extent a fatal defect in the Government itself.

Now, I will suppose a case. Suppose that a declaration of war by the United States Government is made under a joint resolution, which would go to the President of the United States, and that he, for reasons of public policy or reasons of private interest or affection, should veto the resolution, what would be the situation of this country under those circumstances? The Government would perish in the effort to defend its rights or vindicate its honor; perish upon a division of opinion between the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States. So in regard to making peace; so in regard to every other incident attending the conduct of war, such as the issue of letters of marque and reprisal, etc.

Mr. FRYE. How about raising supplies? Suppose the President should veto a resolution raising supplies?

Mr. MORGAN. He could veto a resolution to raise supplies. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. FRYE. And he could defeat——

Mr. MORGAN. But that is not the actual conduct of war. It is a provision for the conduct of war, and he might constrain us to agree to a peace after we had been at war, or perhaps he might prevent us from getting into a war by the veto of a resolution or bill to raise supplies for the purpose of carrying on the war. But I am not now speaking of that legislative power which might attend the conduct of a war or provision for its support. I am speaking now of those matters which concern the inauguration of war and which relate to the power of the President and the Congress to change the attitude of the Government of the United States and the duties of all the people in it from a state of peace to a state of war. These acts are entirely distinguishable.

Perhaps no argument could be made upon this point which would be entirely consistent with itself in any direction in which you might choose to trace it, unless, indeed, we should admit that the President of the United States, when Congress passes a declaration by a joint resolution, I will say, in proper form, to the effect that the United States is at war with some foreign power, has the right to bring his veto to bear upon it and to deny the fact. While there are no actual decisions conclusive of the point I am now debating, there are various utterances and some official acts on the part of the early Presidents of the United States to which I desire to call attention, and also on the part of some of our wisest constitutional lawyers. I will read several extracts from the opinions of those lawyers and those Presidents which I think support very clearly the proposition that Congress, and Congress alone, has the power to declare war.

But before reading them, Mr. President, I should like to say (and I will cite the authorities in support of that proposition when I come to them) that the power of Congress, as it is expressed in the Constitution, is not to wage war, not to create war; it is the right to recognize its existence. The existence of war in the United States, between this and a foreign country, or the existence of a war in some foreign country, is simply a fact, and when a recognition is made by the Congress of the United States or by the lawful authority of this country of the existence of war, it amounts to a declaration of war. A declaration of war is not a pronunciamento against some other nation as to which Congress demands that war shall be waged, but it is a declaration that a state of war actually exists at the time when the declaration is pronounced. This is not a legislative act.

Mr. FRYE. Actually exists anywhere?

Mr. MORGAN. That a state of war actually exists anywhere at the time the declaration is made; and the declaration is nothing more than a recognition of the fact, a statement of the fact that a state of war acually exists. It places that declaration in legal form. It is not a legislative act, it may be a political act.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to get instruction from the Senator from Alabama, who is so competent to give it on this question, by asking him a question and perhaps putting an illustration.

In regard to our relations with France shortly after the close of the Revolutionary war, some very principal authorities, including, I believe, my honorable friend from Ohio, maintained as a reason for not paying the French war claims that that was a war, not an act of international oppression of individuals. Suppose a citizen were proceeded against for corresponding with the enemy, giving aid and comfort to France at that time, on the ground that she was an enemy of the United States. Does the Senator claim that a resolution like this, passing both Houses of Congress, the President withholding his signature, would be accepted in court as having any validity or virtue whatever in regard to settling that question?

Mr. MORGAN. The illustration used by the Senator from Massachusetts furnishes me an opportunity to make what I conceive to be a just distinction between the duty and obligations of citizenship and the duties and rights of Congress in dealing with a question of this kind. A citizen must submit himself to the laws of his country as they are declared by the highest legislative authority, and until the laws of his country are changed or altered they impose upon him as a citizen the duties that belong to him in time of war, and he can neither appeal from that declaration as to those duties or those rights nor can he avoid them when the Government of the United States has placed him in that situation by declaring that his country is engaged in war.

When I said a moment ago that the existence of war is a fact, I meant to say that the existence of hostilities which have progressed to that degree where a private person coming in contact with the armies engaged in those hostilities would have the right to decide that a war existed would be what is called a state of war, although it is not the state of war that is made obligatory upon the citizenship of a country. It is a state of hostilities that has become so general and the parties to which have become so organized that the citizen himself when brought in contact with the question could decide for himself that it is an open and public war. But his decision bears upon no person except himself.

Now, it requires the act of a government to put the people at large, the nationality, into a condition of recognizing the existence of war.

Mr. HOAR. Including the President?

Mr. MORGAN. Including the President.

Mr. HOAR. I do not like to interfere with the Senator from Alabama, but perhaps he will not mind my asking him another question. I thought his argument was that the phrase in the Constitution "to declare war," where the power is given to Congress to declare war, has a different meaning, a different scope and effect, from the other similar enumerations of the powers given to Congress, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy, for instance; that in that particular instance Congress is referred to as the two Houses, without the consent of the President. That is the reason why I put the question.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the position I take, and I believe it is the correct one.

Mr. HOAR. Then, if it be true that under the Constitution the two Houses of Congress, without the consent of the President, have the power to declare war, does it not follow that the two Houses of Congress, without the President, having declared war, a citizen of this country is bound so to treat the citizens of the country which is declared to be an enemy, and is liable to the charge of treason for giving them aid and comfort?

Mr. MORGAN. Wherever a declaration of war is made by any competent authority of the United States, without now touching upon the question as to what is the competent authority, a citizen of the United States is put in the attitude of a citizen of a country which is at war, and he must obey and respect it, because that declaration defines who is the public enemy, and the citizen is bound to give respect to the declaration.

On December 6, 1805, Mr. Jefferson, discussing Spanish depredations on our territory, said:

> Considering that Congress alone is constitutionally invested with the power of changing our conditions from peace to war, I have thought it my duty to await their authority for using force in any degree that could be avoided. I have barely instructed the officers stationed in the neighborhood of the aggressions to protect our citizens from violence, to patrol within the borders actually delivered to us, and not to go out of them, but when necessary to repel an inroad or to rescue a citizen or his property.

This act of Mr. Jefferson in refusing to recognize the existence of war, as a legal status, until Congress had made the declaration is very impressive. It proves his regard for the limitations of the powers of the coordinate departments of our Government.

Mr. Webster, as Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Severance on the 14th of July, 1851, states:

> In the first place, I have to say that the war-making power in this Government rests entirely with Congress; and that the President can authorize belligerent operations only in the cases expressly provided for by the Constitution and the laws. By these no power is given to the Executive to oppose an attack by one independent nation on the possessions of another. We are bound to regard both France and Hawaii—

There was a controversy between France and Hawaii—

> as independent States, and equally independent, and though the general policy of the Government might lead it to take part with either in a controversy with the other, still, if this interference be an act of hostile force, it is not within the constitutional power of the President; and still less is it within the power of any subordinate agent of Government, civil or military.

Those words are very closely measured by that great statesman and jurist, and they state an opinion to which I am bound to yield my acquiescence.

Mr. Cass, following, in 1857, on the subject of the power of Congress, said:

> This proposition, looking to a participation by the United States in the existing hostilities against China, makes it proper to remind your lordship that, under the Constitution of the United States the executive branch of this Government is not the war-making power. The exercise of that great attribute of sovereignty is vested in Congress, and the President has no authority to order aggressive hostilities to be undertaken.
>
> Our naval officers have the right—it is their duty, indeed—to employ the forces under their command not only in self-defense, but for the protection of the persons and property of our citizens when exposed to acts of lawless outrage, and this they have done both in China and elsewhere, and will do again when necessary. But military expeditions into the Chinese territory can not be undertaken without the authority of the National Legislature.

In the third annual message of President Buchanan, in 1859, when he was contemplating, doubtless, that war that might take place in the United States and a war that was then flagrant in Nicaragua, said:

> I deem it my duty once more earnestly to recommend to Congress the passage of a law authorizing the President to employ the naval force at his command for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of American citizens passing in transit across the Panama, Nicaragua, and Tehuantepec routes against sudden and lawless outbreaks and depredations. I shall not repeat the arguments employed in former messages in support of this measure. Suffice it to say that the lives of many of our people, and the security of vast amounts of treasure passing and repassing over one or more of these routes between the Atlantic and Pacific, may be deeply involved in the action of Congress on this subject.
>
> I would also again recommend to Congress that authority be given to the President to employ the naval force to protect American merchant vessels, their crews and cargoes, against violent and lawless seizure and confiscation in the ports of Mexico and the Spanish American States, when these countries may be in a disturbed and revolutionary condition. The mere knowledge that such an authority had been conferred, as I have already stated, would of itself, in a great degree, prevent the evil. Neither would this require any additional appropriation for the naval service.

The chief objection urged against the grant of this authority is that Congress, by conferring it, would violate the Constitution—that it would be a transfer of the war-making or, strictly speaking, the war-declaring power to the Executive. If this were well founded it would, of course, be conclusive. A very brief examination, however, will place this objection at rest.

Congress possess the sole and exclusive power under the Constitution "to declare war." They alone can "raise and support armies" and "provide and maintain a navy." But after Congress shall have declared war and provided the force necessary to carry it on the President, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, can alone employ this force in making war against the enemy. This is the plain language, and history proves that it was the well-known intention of the framers of the Constitution.

Now I will read an extract from the opinion of Judge Grier in the prize cases, 2 Black, where the court found it necessary to make an emphatic declaration on this subject in order to sustain its jurisdiction of a cause that arose during the Confederate war.

By the Constitution Congress alone has the power to declare a national or foreign war. It can not declare war against a State, or any number of States, by virtue of any clause in the Constitution. The Constitution confers on the President the whole executive power. He is bound to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. He is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States. He has no power to initiate or declare a war either against a foreign nation or a domestic State, but by the acts of Congress of February 28, 1795, and March 3, 1807, he is authorized to call out the militia and use the military and naval forces of the United States in case of invasion by foreign nations, and to suppress insurrections against the government of a State or of the United States.

It will be observed here that the court makes a distinction between the power of the President of the United States to declare war, to recognize the existence of a state of war and to make it obligatory upon the Government by his declaration, and his power under a statute of the United States, without declaring the existence of a state of war, to do certain things—that is to say, to resist enemies who may be invading the country and to suppress insurrection or rebellion in the States. There the court makes the manifest distinction which established the proposition by our highest judicial tribunal that whenever it becomes necessary that the attitude of the Government of the United States should be changed from peace to war, either wholly or in part, that action by the Constitution is intrusted entirely to Congress and that the President can not assume it to himself.

Mr. GRAY. From what has the Senator been reading?

Mr. MORGAN. From Judge Grier's opinion in the prize cases.

Mr. GRAY. I have read the cases which the Senator has in his hand, and I read the opinion differently, if the Senator draws the conclusion from those cases or from the opinion of the court that Congress without the consent of the President can declare war. All that Judge Grier says in that opinion, as I understand, is what the Constitution says, that it belongs to Congress and not to the Executive to declare war; but when it belongs to Congress it belongs as one of the enumerated powers which he must exert in the way prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. MORGAN. It goes to the extent of denying to the President the power even to conduct war except in cases where he is empowered to do so by statute. It does not go to the extent of saying that Congress, in making a declaration of war, can act independently of the President. That point was not up. But I think it necessarily follows from the decision in this case that if the President can not declare war he has nothing to do with a declaration of war. If Congress must act, and the President must act conjointly with Congress in a declaration of war, then of course war can not exist until both departments of the Government have determined it—I mean legally exist, for it may exist in hostilities, but not in the form of war legally declared.

But here we find that the President of the United States, by the decision of the Supreme Court, is excluded from the power on his part of making this declaration. Then the question remains, and it is the only question, whether or not the Congress of the United States can make a declaration of war without the concurrence and consent of the President. That brings the question down to a single point upon this adjudication, as I understand it. I will read the balance of what is furnished here as the argument upon which the Supreme Court sustained that proposition:

If a war be made by invasion of a foreign nation, the President is not only authorized but bound to resist force by force. He does not initiate the war, but is bound to accept the challenge without waiting for any special legislative authority; and whether the hostile party be a foreign invader or States organized in rebellion it is none the less a war, although the declaration of it be "unilateral." Lord Stowell (1 Dodson, 247) observes: "It is not the less a war on that account, for war may exist without a declaration on either side." It is so laid down by the best writers on the law of nations. A declaration of war by one country only is not a mere challenge to be accepted or refused at pleasure by the other.

The battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma had been fought before the passage of the act of Congress of May 13, 1846, which recognized "a state of war as existing by the act of the Republic of Mexico." This act not only provided for the future prosecution of the war, but was itself a vindication and ratification of the act of the President in accepting the challenge without a previous formal declaration of war by Congress.

So we went on and provided by statute various cases in which the President might command the Army and the Navy for the suppression of insurrection and rebellion, and also in the case of a foreign invasion that might be made against this country.

But we now have the question down to a single inquiry—admitting that that question is authority to rule our action in any sense—and that is, must the President act conjointly with Congress in a declaration of war in recognizing the fact—in other words, that a state of war exists—and making that state of war and the attitude of war obligatory upon the people of the Government of the United States?

Now, I believe that the power to declare war and the power to conduct all matters in connection with its immediate prosecution was separated from the other powers in the Constitution of the United States, and, as stated by Mr. Webster, placed solely within the control of the two Houses of Congress, either acting in concert or acting contemporaneously without actual concurrence.

The strongest argument that suggests itself to my mind is the fact that the President of the United States, by the Constitution, has two distinct functions. One is political and the other is military, exclusively so. Wherever the President of the United States has to exercise his political functions, those that belong to legislation or to appointments to office, or in the special case of the negotiation of treaties and the exchange of ratifications, he either acts upon the peculiar powers and in the peculiar way assigned to him by the Constitution of the United States or else he acts by a general participation, in the legislative sense, with the two Houses of Congress.

The veto, backed by the sword, is not given to the President in our Constitution.

The President in negotiating a treaty is a diplomat, and yet he is the Chief Executive; he is the representative of this Government in its sovereignty so far as it touches the relations between this Government and foreign countries. When he performs this act of diplomacy and brings a treaty into shape, the two Governments have got into agreement about it through the powers delegated to another body, distinct and separate from all other bodies in the United States, which rises up under the Constitution for the purpose of determining upon the validity of that treaty. That body is required to act almost as a unit. It requires two-thirds of the vote of the Senate of the United States to confirm a treaty.

Mr. DAVIS. Two-thirds of a quorum.

Mr. MORGAN. It requires two-thirds of the Senators forming a quorum of the Senate of the United States to confirm a treaty. That is not a legislative act, and yet it is legislative in its results, because the treaty when thus confirmed and when ratifications have been exchanged becomes, by the express declaration of the Constitution, a part of the supreme law of the land. So, in our constitutional system of Government, various functions are given to different persons who discharge at the same time other functions which are just as separate as if they were exercised by two different persons. If we had had, like the Indians have, a war king and a civil king, questions of war would have been referred entirely to the war king and questions of legislation and national polity entirely to the civil ruler; as they had at one time in Japan when the Shogun was the absolute imperial ruler of the army and navy of Japan and the Mikado was the spiritual and political ruler of the same Empire.

But we made no such division of power into the hands of two men. We divide and separate the power in the hands of one man. We give the military power to the President of the United States to a certain extent, and to the extent that it was not given to him it remains in Congress. To what extent was it given to him? He is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He is a military officer by the Constitution, holding his commission under that instrument. He is the highest military officer in the United States and every other military officer in the United States is subordinate to his command. But in that function he is just as separate from his other capacity to participate in the legislation of the country as he is when he negotiates a treaty. The functions are quite as different and quite as separate.

Now, I maintain that there was a reason for this, and it was to prevent the possibility of any conflict between the supreme departments of this Government in that most serious matter of declaring the existence of war. If there is any chance for us by a proper construction of this instrument to have the war-making power or the war-declaring power in the hands of a single department of the Government instead of having it oscillating between two, then it is due to the strength and future safety and power of our Government that we should so declare, and we should say that the Congress of the United States is empowered to declare war and the President is forbidden to participate in that declaration, because the war affects him in his office as General in Chief of the Army; that he must take his orders from the Congress of the United States, and must be thereby compelled to recognize that the occasion has arisen in which the functions of his military office come into full play, and he must exercise them.

There is no difficulty in this attitude, because we are not taking from the President anything that is useful in connection with his administration of the affairs of this Government, but if we concede to him the power to declare war, or by the application of his veto to defeat war, when he holds the commission of Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, we acknowledge the principle that the military is superior to the civil power; that is all of it. Right there, more than anywhere else in our constitutional system, that maxim obtains, which is as strong as any feature of the written Constitution in this country, that the civil power is superior to the military.

The President of the United States ought not to be permitted, and I am glad to believe that by the Constitution of the United States he is not permitted, in the exercise of his military powers, to place himself as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy above the civil power of this country. Being such Commander in Chief and having his commission from the Constitution, which therefore is irrevocable on the part of Congress, when the Congress of the United States chooses to declare that the attitude of the Government of the United States toward any foreign country is not war, but peace, or is not peace, but war, the President of the United States ought not to have the power, in connection with this supreme military command, of saying whether or not the condition has arisen. As Commander in Chief, he must obey the civil power, under which he is bound to take the field under the command of Congress and lead its armies. The disassociation of the veto power, if that is what it means, from the control of the President of the United States in reference to war, is to take from him the power, after we have put the sword into his hands, to refuse to exert its authority over belligerent nations that are at war with the United States.

If we are to make an error in this respect, let us make it on the side of maintaining the supremacy of the civil power of this Government over the military power of the President. I admit that this argument would not hold good if the President was not the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but being such, and his commission being irrevocable, Congress not having the power to put him out of office even if he were to sign any joint resolution to that effect, being beyond the reach of any power in this world except his own resignation, and he being the supreme head of the Army of the United States to whom all others are subordinates, let us not make the error of enabling him to use the veto power, which he can use upon any bill that we pass here of a legislative or political sort, to defeat the will of the people of the United States unless two-thirds of each House shall concur in passing the bill over his veto.

The time may never arise when this will become a grave and serious question, but I venture that if Napoleon Bonaparte had found such a power as that in the French constitution, construed as it seems we are likely to construe it, he would not have failed to have seized upon it to carry out his great ambitions, against which I have never made a complaint; they have my full admiration.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. How do the arguments that support the exclusive power of Congress to declare war independently of the President not apply also to the other power contained in the Constitution giving Congress the power to raise and support armies?

Mr. MORGAN. Even that power is very limited, showing that the framers of the Constitution, when they were considering the war powers of this Government, were very guarded. Bills of that kind to raise and support armies must originate in the House of Representatives, as I understand. That has always been conceded; but there is another restriction (and, as I mentioned a moment ago, that is very important) to show that the framers of the Constitution were putting restraints upon the hands even of the legislative power, by requiring that appropriations for the Army should be renewed once every two years. In every direction that we regard this question we find that the framers of that Constitution were extremely cautious in hedging about the war-making and war-declaring and war-executing power, so that when it fell into the hands, perhaps, of some ambitious man who wanted to perpetuate his rule he would find himself confronted with a power in the Constitution of our country which would defeat his ambitious schemes.

Following that train of thought, which evidently possessed the minds of the framers of this instrument, it seems to me that in making a declaration, if we are going to make a declaration, if we are forced at any time to make a declaration upon this subject, it ought to be in favor of the power of Congress as it is declared in the Constitution and is supported by the great men from whose writings I have had the honor to quote.

This is as far, Mr. President, as I care to go now in the statement of this question or in the argument of it. I have no doubt that it will engage the attention of Senators in this debate; but whether the question is brought up or not it is very apt to be debated, for it has been suggested on all sides and evidently is a subject of very anxious inquiry on the part of the Senate, as it should be. I will therefore leave the further discussion of this branch of the subject until the debate has progressed further and I have heard from some other Senators upon the subject.

APPENDIX A.

MANGOS DE BARAGUA.

The national council, in a meeting held on the 16th of October, 1895, resolved that the publication in book form in an edition of 500 copies of all the laws, rules, decrees, and other orders passed by it be printed after being previously approved by the council and sanctioned by its president.

JOSÉ CLEMENTE VIVANCO,
The Secretary of the Council.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY, REPUBLIC OF CUBA.

I, José Clemente Vivanco, secretary of the national council and chancellor of the Republic of Cuba, certify that the representatives of the different army corps into which the army of liberation is divided, met in constituent assembly on the 13th day of September, 1895, at Jimaguayu, agreed to have a preliminary session where the character of each representative would be accredited by the respective credential of his appointment. There resulted, after the proper examination by the chairman and the secretaries, who were temporarily citizens Salvador Cisneros Betancourt and secretaries José Clemente Vivanco and Orencio Nodarse, the following distribution:

Representatives of the First Army Corps, Citizens Dr. Joaquin Castillo Duany, Mariano Sanchez Vaillant, Rafael M. Portuondo, and Pedro Aguillera.

For the Second, Citizens Licentiate Rafael Manduley, Enrique Cespedes, Rafael Perez Morales, and Marcos Padilla.

For the Third, Citizens Salvador Cisneros Betancourt, Lopez Recio Loinaz, Enrique Loinaz del Castillo, and Dr. Fermmin Valdes Dominguez.

For the Fourth, Licentiate Severo Pina, Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares, Raimundo Sanchez Valdivia, and Francisco Lopez Leiba.

For the Fifth, Dr. Pedro Pinan de Villegas, Licentiate José Clemente Vivanco, Francisco Diaz Silveria, and Orencio Nodarse.

They proceeded to the election of officers for the following session and the following appointments were made: Salvador Cisneros Betancourt, president; Rafael Manduley, vice-president; secretaries, Licentiate José Clemente Vivanco, Francisco Lopez Leiba, Licentiate Rafael M. Portuondo, and Orencio Nodarse.

The assembly having been organized as above, and in the presence of the above representatives, they proceeded to hold the sessions to discuss the constitution which is to rule the destinies of the Republic. These sessions took place on September 13, 14, 15, and 16, instant, and all the articles which were to form the said constitutional charta were discussed. Every article of the projected constitution presented to the assembly by the representatives licentiate, Rafael M. Portuondo, Dr. Joaquin Castillo Duany, Mariano Sanchez Vaillant, and Pedro Aguilera, was well discussed, and, together with amendments, reforms, and additions, were also discussed by the proposers. On deliberation, in conformity with the opinion of the assembly, it was unanimously resolved to refer the said constitution, with the resolutions of the said assembly, to a committee of revision of the text, composed of the secretaries and of the representatives, Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares and Enrique Loynaz del Castillo, who, after complying with their mission, returned the final draft of the constitution on the 16th. It was then read, and the signature of each and every representative subscribed.

The president and other members of the assembly, with due solemnity, then swore upon their honor to loyally and strictly observe the fundamental code of the Republic of Cuba, which was greeted by the spontaneous and enthusiastic acclamations of all present; in testimony of which are the minutes in the general archive of the government.

In compliance with the resolution passed by this council in a meeting held to-day, and for its publication, I issue the following copy, in the Mangos de Baragua on the 18th of October, 1895.

JOSÉ CLEMENTE VIVANCO,
Secretary of the Council.

CONSTITUTION OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF CUBA.

The revolution for the independence and creation in Cuba of a democratic Republic in its new period of war, initiated on February 24 last, solemnly declares the separation of Cuba from the Spanish Monarchy, and its constitution as a free and independent State, with its own Government and supreme authority under the name of the Republic of Cuba and confirms its existence among the political divisions of the world.

The elected representatives of the revolution, in convention assembled, acting in its name and by the delegation which for that purpose has been conferred upon them by the Cubans in arms, and previously declaring before the country the purity of their thoughts, their freedom from violence, anger, or prejudice, and inspired only by the desire of interpreting the popular voice in favor of Cuba, have now formed a compact between Cuba and the world, pledging their honor for the fulfillment of said compact in the following articles of the constitution:

ARTICLE I. The supreme powers of the Republic shall be vested in a government council composed of a president, vice-president, and four secretaries of state, for the dispatch of the business of war, of the interior, of foreign affairs, and of the treasury.

ART. II. Every secretary shall have a subsecretary of state, in order to supply any vacancies.

ART. III. The government council shall have the following powers:

1. To dictate all measures relative to the civil and political life of the revolution.

2. To impose and collect taxes, to contract public loans, to issue paper money, to invest the funds collected in the island, from whatever source, and also those which may be raised abroad by loan.

3. To arm vessels, to raise and maintain troops, to declare reprisals with respect to the enemy, and to ratify treaties.

4. To grant authority, when it is deemed convenient, to order the trial by the judicial power of the president or other members of the council, if he be accused.

5. To decide all matters, of whatsoever description, which may be brought before them by any citizen, except those judicial in character.

6. To approve the law of military organization and the ordinances of the army, which may be proposed by the general in chief.

7. To grant military commissions from that of colonel upward, previously hearing and considering the reports of the immediate superior officer and of the general in chief, and to designate the appointment of the latter and of the lieutenant-general in case of the vacancy of either.

8. To order the election of four representatives for each army corps whenever in conformity with this constitution it may be necessary to convene an assembly.

ART. IV. The Government council shall intervene in the direction of military operations only when in their judgment it shall be absolutely necessary to do so to realize high political ends.

ART. V. As a requisite for the validity of the decrees of the council, at least two-thirds of the members of the same must have taken part in the deliberations of the council, and the decrees must have been voted by the majority of those present.

ART. VI. The office of councilor is incompatible with any other of the Republic, and requires the age of 25 years.

ART. VII. The executive power is vested in the president, and, in case of disability, in the vice-president.

ART. VIII. The resolutions of the government council shall be sanctioned and promulgated by the president, who shall take all necessary steps for their execution within ten days.

ART. IX. The president may enter into treaties with the ratification of the government council.

ART. X. The president shall receive all diplomatic representatives and issue the respective commissions to the public functionaries.

ART. XI. The treaty of peace with Spain, which must necessarily have for its basis the absolute independence of the Island of Cuba, must be ratified by the government council and by an assembly of representatives convened expressly for this purpose.

ART. XII. The vice-president shall substitute the president in the case of a vacancy.

ART. XIII. In case of the vacancy in the offices of both president and vice-president on account of resignation, deposition, or death of both, or from any other cause, an assembly of representatives for the election to the vacant offices shall be convened, the senior secretaries in the meanwhile occupying the positions.

ART. XIV. The secretaries shall have voice and vote in deliberations of resolutions of whatever nature.

ART. XV. The secretaries shall have the right to appoint all the employees of their respective offices.

ART. XVI. The subsecretaries in cases of vacancy shall substitute the secretaries of state and shall then have voice and vote in the deliberations.

ART. XVII. All the armed forces of the Republic and the direction of the military operations shall be under the control of the general in chief, who shall have under his orders as second in command a lieutenant-general, who will substitute him in case of vacancy.

ART. XVIII. All public functionaries of whatever class shall aid one another in the execution of the resolutions of the government council.

ART. XIX. All Cubans are bound to serve the revolution with their persons and interests, each one according to his ability.

ART. XX. The plantations and property of whatever description belonging to foreigners are subject to the payment of taxes for the revolution while their respective governments do not recognize the rights of belligerency of Cuba.

ART. XXI. All debts and obligations contracted since the beginning of the present period of war until the promulgation of this constitution by the chiefs of the army corps, for the benefit of the revolution, shall be valid, as well as those which henceforth the government council may contract.

ART. XXII. A government council may depose any of its members for cause justifiable in the judgment of two-thirds of the councilors and shall report to the first assembly convening.

ART. XXIII. The judicial power shall act with entire independence of all the others. Its organization and regulation will be provided for by the government council.

ART. XXIV. The present constitution shall be in force in Cuba for two years from the date of its promulgation, unless the war for independence shall terminate before. After the expiration of the two years an assembly of representatives shall be convened which may modify it, and will proceed to the election of a new government council, and which will pass upon the last council. So it has been agreed upon and resolved in the name of the Republic by the constituent assembly in Jimaguayu on the 18th day of September, 1895, and in witness thereof we, the representatives delegated by the Cuban people in arms, signed the present instrument. Salvador Cisneros, president; Rafael Manduley, vice-president; Pedro Pinan de Villegas, Lope Recio, Fermin Valdes Dominguez, Francisco Diaz Silveira, Dr. Santiago Garcia, Rafael Perez, F. Lopez Leyva, Enrique Cespedes, Marcos Padilla, Raimundo Sanchez, J. D. Castillo, Mariano Sanchez, Pedro Aguilera, Rafael M. Pontuondo, Orencio Nodarse, José Clemente Vivanco, Enrique Loynaz Del Castillo, Severo Pina.

ELECTION OF GOVERNMENT.

The constituent assembly met again on the 18th of the said month and year, all the said representatives being present. They proceeded to the election of members who are to occupy the offices of the government council, the general-in-chief of the army of liberation, the lieutenant-general, and the diplomatic agent abroad. The secret voting commenced, each representative depositing his ballot in the urn placed on the chairman's table, after which the count was proceeded with, the following being the result:

President: Salvador Cisneros, 12; Bartolome Maso, 8.

Vice-president: Bartolome Maso, 12; Salvador Cisneros, 8.

Secretary of war: Carlos Roloff, 18; Lope Recio Loinaz, 1; Rafael Manduley, 1.

Secretary of the treasury; Severa Pina, 19; Rafael Manduley, 1.

Secretary of the interior: Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares, 19; Carlos Dubois, 1.

Secretary of the foreign relations: Rafael Portuondo, 18; Armando Menocal, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of war: Mario Menocal, 18; Francisco Diaz Silveira, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of the treasury: Dr. Joaquin Castillo, 7; Francisco Diaz Silveira, 5; José C. Vivanco, 3; Armando Menocal, 3; Carlos Dubois, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of the interior: Carlos Dubois, 13; Oreneio Nodarse, 5; Armando Menocal, 1; blank, 1.

Subsecretary of foreign relations: Fermin Valdes Dominguez, 18; Rafael Manduley, 1; blank, 1.

Therefore, the following were elected by a majority of votes:

President, Salvador Cisneros; vice-president, Bartolome Maso; secretary of war, Carlos Roloff; secretary of the treasury, Severo Pina; secretary of the interior, Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares; secretary of foreign relations, Rafael M. Portuondo; subsecretary of war, Mario Menocal; subsecretary of the treasury, Dr. Joaquin Castillo; subsecretary of the interior, Carlos Dubois; subsecretary of foreign relations, Dr. Fermin Valdes Dominguez.

The vice-president of the assembly immediately installed the president in the office of the government council that had been conferred upon him; the latter in turn installed those of the other members elected who were present, all entering on the full exercise of their functions after previously taking the oath.

On proceeding to the election of those who were to occupy the positions of general-in-chief of the army, lieutenant-general, and diplomatic agent abroad, the following citizens were unanimously elected by the assembly for the respective places: Maj. Gen. Maximo Gomez, Maj. Gen. Antonio Maceo, and Citizen Tomas Estrada Palma, all these appointments being recognized from that moment.

LAWS FOR THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE REPUBLIC.

CHAPTER I.—Territorial Division.

ARTICLE I. The Republic of Cuba comprises the territory occupied by the Island of Cuba from Cape San Antonio to Point Maisi and the adjacent islands and keys.

ART. II. This territory shall be divided into four portions, or States, which will be called Oriente, Camaguey, Las Villas or Cabanacan, and Occidente.

ART. III. The State of Oriente includes the territory from the Point Maisi to Port Manati and the river Jobabo in all its course.

ART. IV. The State of Camaguey includes all the territory from the boundary of Oriente to the line which starts in the north from Laguna Blanca through the Esteros to Moron, passing by Ciego de Avila, follows the military trocha to El Jucaro in the southern coast, it being understood that the towns of Moron and Ciego de Avila belong to this State.

ART. V. The State of Las Villas has for boundary on the east Camaguey, on the west the river Palmas, Palmillas, Santa Rosa, Rodas, the Hannabana River, and the Bay of Cochinos.

ART. VI. The State of Occidente is bordered on the Las Villas, extending to the west to Cape San Antonio.

ART. VII. The islands and adjacent keys will form part of the states to which they geographically belong.

ART. VIII. The State of Oriente will be divided into ten districts, which shall be as follows: Baracoa, Guantanamo, Sagua de Tanamo, Mayari, Santiago, Jiguani, Manzanillo, Bayamo, and Tunas.

Camaguey comprises two—the eastern district and the western district.

Las Villas comprises seven—Sancti-Espiritus, Trinidad, Remedios, Santa Clara, Sagua, Cienfuegos, and Colon.

That of Occidente comprises sixteen—Cardenas, Matanzas, Union, Jaruco, Guines, Santa Maria del Rosario, Guanabacoa, Habana, Santiago de las Vegas, Bejucal, San Antonio, Bahia Honda, Pina del Rio, and Mantua.

ART. IX. Each of these districts will be divided into prefectures, and these in their turn into as many subprefectures as may be considered necessary.

ART. X. For the vigilance of the coasts there will be inspectors and watchmen appointed in each state according to the extent of the coasts and the number of ports, bays, gulfs, and salt works that there may be.

ART. XI. On establishing the limits of the districts and prefectures, the direction of the coast, rivers, and other natural boundaries shall be kept in mind.

CHAPTER II.—Of the government and its administration.

ART. XII. The civil government, the administration, and the service of communications devolve upon the department of the interior.

ART. XIII. The secretary of the interior is the head of the department; he will appoint the employees and will remove them whenever there will be justifiable cause, and will have a department chief to aid him in the work of the department.

ART. XIV. The department chief will keep the books of the department, take care of the archives, will be the manager of the office, and will furnish certifications when requested to do so.

ART. XV. The department of the interior will compile from the data collected by the civil governors the general statistics of the Republic.

ART. XVI. The civil governor will inform the department of the interior as to the necessities of his state, will order the measures and instructions necessary for compliance with the general laws of the Republic and the orders given by that department, will distribute to the lieutenant-governors the articles of prime necessity which will be delivered to them for that purpose, will communicate to his subordinates the necessary instructions for the compilation of statistics, and will have a subsecretary who will help him in the discharge of his functions.

ART. XVII. The lieutenant-governor will see that the orders of the governors are obeyed in the district, and will have the powers incident to his position as intermediary between the civil governors and the prefects. In case of absolute breach of communication with the civil governors, they will have the same powers as the latter.

ART. XVIII. The prefect shall see that the laws and regulations communicated to him by his superior authorities are complied with. All residents and travelers are under his authority, and, being the highest official in his territory, he in his turn is bound to prevent all abuses and crimes which may be committed.

He will inform the lieutenant-governor as to the necessities of the prefecture; will divide these into as many subprefectures as he may consider necessary for the good conduct of his administration; he will watch the conduct of the subprefects; he will distribute among them with equity the articles delivered to him, and he will have all the other powers incident to him in his character of intermediary between the lieutenant-governor and the subprefects.

ART. XIX. The prefect will also have the following duties: He will harass the enemy whenever possible for him to do so; will hear the preliminary information as to crimes and misdemeanors which may be committed in his territory, passing the said information to the nearest military chief, together with the accused and all that is necessary for the better understanding of the hearing. He will not proceed thus with spies, guides, couriers, and others who are declared by our laws as traitors and considered as such, for these, on account of the difficulty of confining them or conducting them with security, shall be tried as soon as captured by a court, consisting of three persons, the most capable in his judgment in the prefecture, one acting as president and the others as members of the court. He will also appoint a prosecuting officer, and the accused may appoint some one to defend him at his pleasure.

After the court is assembled in this form, and after all the formalities are complied with, it will in private judge and give its sentence, which will be final and without appeal; but those who form the said court and who do not proceed according to our laws and to natural reason will be held responsible by the superior government. Nevertheless, if in the immediate territory there be any armed force, the accused shall be sent to it, with the facts, in order that they shall be properly tried.

The prefect will take the statistics of his prefecture, setting down every person who is found therein, noting if he is the head of a family, the number of the same, his age, his nationality and occupation, if he is a farmer, the nature of his farm, and if he has no occupation the prefect will indicate in what he should be employed. He will also keep a book of civil register, in which he will set down the births, deaths, and marriages which may occur.

He will establish in the prefecture all the factories that he can or may consider necessary in order to well provide the army, as it is the primary obligation of all employees of the Republic to do all possible so that the hides shall not be lost, and organizing in the best manner, and as quickly as may be, tanneries, factories of shoes, rope, blankets, and carpenter and blacksmith shops.

He will not permit any individual of his district to be without occupation. He will see that everyone works, having the instruments of labor at hand in proportion to the inhabitants of his territory. He will protect and raise bees, he will take care of abandoned farms, and will extend as far as possible the zones of agriculture.

As soon as the prefect learns that the secretary of the interior or any delegate of this authority is in his district he will place himself under the latter's orders. This he will also do on the arrival of armed forces, presenting himself to their chief in order to facilitate the needed supplies and to serve him in every possible manner. He will have a bugle to warn the inhabitants of the enemy's approach; he will inform the nearest armed force when his territory is invaded. He will collect all horses and other animals suitable for the war and lead them to a secure place, so that when the army may need them or they may be required by the civil authorities to whom they may appertain.

He will provide the forces that may be, or pass through his territory with whatever they may need, which may be within his power, and especially shall he provide guides and beeves and vegetables which the chief may require to maintain the said forces. He will also deliver the articles manufactured in the shops under his immediate inspection, demanding always the proper receipts therefor.

He will also provide the necessary means for the maintenance of all the families of the territory, especially those of the soldiers of the army of liberation.

Until otherwise decreed he will celebrate civil marriages and other contracts entered into by the residents of his prefecture; he will act in cases of ordinary complaints and in the execution of powers and wills, registering the same in a clear and definite manner, and issuing to the interested parties the certificates which they may require.

ART. XX. The subprefect will see that the laws and orders communicated to him by his superior authorities are obeyed in territory under his command; he will inform the prefect as to the necessities of the subprefecture and will see to the security and order of the public; arresting and sending to the prefects those who may travel without safe-conduct, seeing that no violation of law whatsoever is perpetrated, and will demand the signed authority of the civil or military chief who has ordered a commission to be executed.

ART. XXI. The subprefect will compile a census in which the number of inhabitants of a subprefecture will be stated and their personal description; he will keep a book of the births and deaths which will occur in his territory, and of all this he will give account at the end of the year. He will invest the means provided by the prefect to pay the public charges, and if the said resources are insufficient he will collect the deficit from the inhabitants; he will not authorize the destruction of abandoned farms, whether they belong to friends or enemies of the Republic, and he will inform the prefect of the farms which are thus abandoned.

ART. XXII. For the organization and better operation of the State's manufactories a chief of factories shall be appointed in each district, who will be authorized to establish such factories which he may deem convenient, employing all citizens who, on account of their abilities, can serve, and collecting in the prefectures of his district all the instruments he can utilize in his work. These chiefs will be careful to frequently inspect the factories, to report any defects which they may notice, and to provide the superintendents with whatever they may need, that the work may not be interrupted.

Together with the prefect he will send to the department of the interior the names of the individuals he considers most adapted to open new shops, and on the first day of each month he will send to that department a statement of the objects manufactured in each shop of his district, indicating the place of manufacture, what remains on deposit, what has been delivered, with the names of commanders of forces, civil authorities, or individuals to whom they were delivered.

ART. XXIII. The coast inspectors will have under their immediate orders an inspector, who will be his secretary, who will occupy his place in his absence or sickness, and as many auxiliaries as he may deem convenient. He may demand the aid of the prefects and armed forces whenever he may consider it necessary for the better exercise of his functions. The duties of the inspectors will be to watch the coasts and prevent the landing of the enemy, to be always ready to receive disembarkments and place in safety the expeditions which may come from abroad, to establish all the salt works possible, to capture the Spanish vessels which frequent the coasts on his guard, and to attend with special care to the punctual service of communications between his coast and foreign countries.

ART. XXIV. The coast guards will acknowledge the inspector as their superior, will watch the places designated to them, and will execute the orders given.

ART. XXV. The lieutenant-governors, as well as the inspectors of whatever class, will have their residence, wherever the necessity of their office does not prohibit it, in the general headquarters, so that they can move easily, furnish the necessary aid to the army, and carry out the orders of the military chief.

Country and liberty.

OCTOBER 17, 1895.

The secretary of the interior, Dr. Santiago Garcia Canizares, being satisfied with the preceding law, I sanction it in all respects.

Let it be promulgated in the legal form.

SALVADOR CISNEROS BETANCOURT,
The President.

OCTOBER 18, 1895.

APPENDIX B.

PROCLAMATIONS OF GENERAL WEYLER.

HABANA, February 16.

The following is a verbatim copy of translations made of proclamations published to-day:

"Proclamation—Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau, marquis of Teneriffe, governor and captain-general of the Island of Cuba, general-in-chief of the army, etc., desirous of warning the honest inhabitants of Cuba and those loyal to the Spanish cause, and in conformity to the laws, does order and command:

"ARTICLE 1. All inhabitants of the District of Sancti Spiritus and the Provinces of Puerto Principe and Santiago de Cuba will have to concentrate in places which are the headquarters of a division, a brigade, a column, or a troop, and will have to be provided with documentary proof of identity within eight days of the publication of this proclamation in the municipalities.

"ART. 2. To travel in the country in the radius covered by the columns in operation, it is absolutely indispensable to have a pass from the mayor, military commandants, or chiefs of detachments. Anyone lacking this will be detained and sent to headquarters of divisions or brigades, and thence to Habana, at my disposition, by the first possible means. Even if a pass is exhibited which is suspected to be inauthentic or granted by authority to persons with known sympathy toward the rebellion, or who show favor thereto, rigorous measures will result to those responsible.

"ART. 3. All owners of commercial establishments in the country districts will vacate them, and the chiefs of columns will take such measures as the success of their operations dictates regarding such places which, while useless for the country's wealth, serve the enemy as hiding places in the woods and in the interior.

"ART. 4. All passes hitherto issued hereby become null and void.

"ART. 5. The military authorities will see to the immediate publication of this proclamation.

"VALERIANO WEYLER.

"HABANA, February 16, 1896."

MILITARY AND JUDICIAL PROCESSES.

The second proclamation is a follows:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau, marquis of Teneriffe, governor and captain-general of the Island of Cuba, general-in-chief of the army, etc.:

"In order to avoid suffering and delay other than that essential in time of war, and the summary proceedings initiated by the forces in operation, I dictate the following proclamation:

"ARTICLE 1. In accordance with the faculties conceded to me by rule 2, article 31, of the military code of justice, I assume, as general-in-chief of the army operating in this island, the judicial attributes of H. E. captain-general.

"ART. 2. In virtue of rule 2 of said article, I delegate from this date these judicial attributes to the commanders-in-chief of the first and second army corps and to the general commanding the third division—that is, in Puerto Principe.

"ART. 3. Prisoners caught in action will be subjected to the most summary trial without any other investigation except that indispensable for the objects of the trial.

"ART. 4. When the inquiry is finished, subject to consultation with the judicial authorities, the proceedings will continue during the course of operations, and in the presence of the judicial authority, with an auditor, the sentence may be carried out. When said authority is not present, the process will be remitted to him and the culpable parties detained at the locality where the division or brigade headquarters is situated.

"ART. 5. The military juridic functionary of whatever rank who accompanies in the operations the judicial authorities, when the latter thus decides, will act as auditor, dispensing with the assessors' assistance at court-martial during operations, in cases where no other member of the juridic body is at hand.

SENTENCE IN CERTAIN CASES.

"ART. 6. When the sentence is pronounced, if the sentence be deprivation of liberty, the culprit will be brought to Habana with the papers in the case, so that the testimony can be issued as to the penalty and the sentence be carried into effect.

"ART. 7. The said authorities will be acquainted with all cases initiated against the accused in war.

"ART. 8. I reserve the right of promoting and sustaining all questions of competence, with other jurisdictions, as also with the military, and to determine inhibitions in all kinds of military processes in the territory of the island.

"ART. 9. I reserve likewise the faculty of assuming an inquiry into all cases when it is deemed convenient.

"ART. 10. No sentence of death shall be effected without the acknowledgment by my authority of the testimony of the judgment, which must be sent to me immediately, except when no means of communication exists or when it is a case of insult to superiors or of military sedition, in which case sentence will be carried out and the information furnished to me afterwards.

"ART. 11. All previous proclamations or orders conflicting with this on the question of the delegation of jurisdiction in this island are hereby rendered null and void.

"VALERIANO WEYLER.

"HABANA, February 16, 1896."

The third proclamation is as follows:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Don Valeriano Weyler y Nicolau, marquis of Teneriffe, governor and captain-general of the Island of Cuba, general-in-chief of the army, etc.:

"I make known that, taking advantage of the temporary insecurity of communication between the district capitals and the rest of the provinces, notices which convey uneasiness and alarm are invented and propagated, and some persons, more daring still, have taken advantage of this to draw the deluded and the ignorant to the rebel ranks. I am determined to have the laws obeyed and to make known by special means the dispositions ruling and frequently applied during such times as the present, through which the island is now passing, and to make clear how far certain points go in adapting them to the exigencies of war and in use of the faculties conceded to me by No. 12, article 7, of the code of military justice, and by the law of public order of April 23, 1870. And I make known, order, and command that the following cases are subject to military law among others specified by the law:

"Clause 1. Those who invent or propagate by any means notices or assertions favorable to the rebellion shall be considered as being guilty of offenses against the integrity of the nation and comprised in article 223, class 6, of the military code, whenever such notices facilitate the enemy's operations.

"Clause 2. Those who destroy or damage railroad lines, telegraph or telephone wires, or apparatus connected therewith, or those who interrupt communications by opening bridges or destroying highways.

"Clause 3. Incendiaries in town or country, or those who cause damage as shown in caption 8, article 13, volume 2, of the penal code ruling in Cuba.

"AID AND COMFORT OF THE ENEMY.

"Clause 4. Those who sell, facilitate, convey, or deliver arms or ammunition to the enemy, or who supply such by any other means, or those who keep such in their power or tolerate or deal in such through the customs and employees of customs, who fail to confiscate such importations, will be held responsible.

"Clause 5. Telegraphists who divulge telegrams referring to the war, or who send them to persons who should not be cognizant of them.

"Clause 6. Those who through the press or otherwise revile the prestige of Spain, her army, the volunteers or firemen, or any other force that cooperates with the army.

"Clause 7. Those who by the same means endeavor to extol the enemy.

"Clause 8. Those who supply the enemy with horses, cattle, or any other war resources.

"Clause 9. Those who act as spies; and to these the utmost rigor of the law will be applied.

"Clause 10. Those who serve as guides, unless surrendering at once and showing the proof of force majeure, and giving the troops evidence at once of loyalty.

"Clause 11. Those who adulterate army food or conspire to alter the prices of provisions.

"Clause 12. Those who by means of explosives commit the offenses referred to in the law of June 10, 1894, made to extend to this island by the royal order of October 17, 1895, seeing that these offenses affect the public peace, and the law of April 23, 1870, grants me power to leave to the civil authorities the proceedings in such cases as are comprised in captions 4 and 5, and treatise 3 of volume 2 of the common penal code, when the culprits are not military or when the importance of the offense renders such action advisable.

"Clause 13. Those who by messenger pigeons, fireworks, or other signals communicate news to the enemy.

"Clause 14. The offenses enumerated, when the law prescribes the death penalty or life imprisonment, will be dealt with most summarily.

"Clause 15. All other proclamations and orders previously issued in conflict with this are annulled by this.

"VALERIANO WEYLER.

"HABANA, February 16, 1896."

APPENDIX C.

[Senate Executive Document No. 79, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

Message from the President of the United States, communicating in answer to a Senate resolution of April 29, 1878, information respecting the terms and conditions under which the surrender of the Cuban insurgents has been made, and in relation to the future policy of Spain in the government of the Island of Cuba.

May 14, 1878.—Read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with its accompanying papers.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, May 14, 1878.

—

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 14, 1878.

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, requesting the President "to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, such information as the Government has received respecting the terms and conditions under which the surrender of the Cuban insurgents has been made, together with such other information in his possession respecting the future policy of Spain in the government of the Island of Cuba," has the honor to lay before the President the papers specified in the subjoined list, which contain the information called for by the resolution.

WM. M. EVARTS.

To the PRESIDENT.

—

LIST OF PAPERS.

Correspondence with the Spanish legation.

No. 1. General Jovellar to Mr. Mantilla. [Telegram.] Habana, February 16, 1878.
No. 2. Mr. Mantilla to Mr. Evarts. Washington, March 23, 1878. (Extracts.)
No. 3. The same to the same. Washington, March 23, 1878.
No. 4. The same to the same. Washington, April 3, 1878. (Extracts.)
No. 5. Mr. Seward to Mr. Mantilla. Washington, April 10, 1878.

Correspondence with the consulate-general at Habana.

No. 6. Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward. (No. 663.) Habana, February 16, 1878.
No. 7. The same to the same. (No. 664.) Habana, February 23, 1878.
No. 8. Mr. Seward to Mr. Hall. Washington, February 26, 1878.
No. 9. Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward. (No. 666.) Habana, March 2, 1878.
No. 10. The same to the same. (No. 667.) Habana, March 2, 1878.
No. 11. The same to the same. (No. 668.) Habana, March 5, 1878.
No. 12. Mr. Seward to Mr. Hall. Washington, March 12, 1878.

—

No. 1.

General Jovellar to Mr. Mantilla.—Handed to Mr. Evarts by Mr. Mantilla February 16, 1878.

[Translation.]

HABANA, February 16.

(SPANISH) MINISTER, Washington:

His excellency has suspended the operations of the campaign in consequence of agreements between the general-in-chief and the central junta of the insurgents, which, it is very probable, will give peace as the final result.

JOVELLAR.

—

No. 2.

Mr. Mantilla to Mr. Evarts.

WASHINGTON, March 23, 1878. (Received March 23.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of His Catholic Majesty, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of the honorable the Secretary of State of the United States, of the 21st instant, referring to the pacification of the Island of Cuba.

* * * * * * * *

The undersigned is collecting data and information necessary to answering the aforesaid note, which he will be able to do in a very few days. * * * In a few days the undersigned will have the honor to send a note to the Hon. Mr. Evarts, acquainting him more fully with the situation in Cuba, and answering his of March 21st, and in the meanwhile he avails himself of this occasion to renew him the assurance of his very high consideration.

ANTONIO MANTILLA.

—

No. 3.

Mr. Mantilla to Mr. Evarts.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF SPAIN AT WASHINGTON,
Washington, March 23, 1878. (Received March 25, 1878.)

The undersigned, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of His Catholic Majesty, in compliance with the desire to be accurately informed as to the present real condition of the Island of Cuba, which was expressed to him by the honorable Secretary of State of the United States, during their conference of Thursday, the 21st instant, takes pleasure in communicating the official information which he has received in relation to the latest phase and speedy termination of the civil contest in that island.

Without investigating the origin of the unjustifiable and useless Cuban insurrection, or enumerating the various causes, both internal and external, which have occasioned its duration for a longer time than it could have lasted under normal circumstances in Spain, or drawing a comparison between the ever conciliatory policy of the Spanish Government and the until lately uncompromising one of the misguided sons of the mother country, which task he thinks he could easily and triumphantly perform to the satisfaction of his countrymen and the enlightenment of foreigners, but which would require more time than he now has at his disposal, the undersigned will confine himself to a brief sketch of the most remarkable circumstances that gave rise to the latest events.

The insurrection having been broken by various causes, both internal and external, with its most active forces reduced by the action of time and the vicissitudes of the struggle to elements which were for the most part foreign, with no connection with each other, and having no direct interest in the future of the island, and having been conquered by the policy of energy in the field of battle, of generosity toward the misguided insurgents, and of clemency toward the vanquished, which was so happily inaugurated by Generals Jovellar and Martinez Campos, the present governor and captain-general of the island, and the general in chief of its army; the insurrection, I say, was in a visible state of decadence when, in October last, several of the most prominent Cuban leaders surrendered unconditionally to the Spanish authorities, and spontaneously undertook the task of bringing over to their pacific plans, the few leaders of Cuban origin who still remained in the ranks of the insurgents.

Having been taken and tried by court-martial, by order of the general-in-chief of the Cuban forces, some of these leaders paid for their patriotic efforts at pacification with their lives; but, almost at the same time, the shadows of a legislative chamber and of a government of the imaginary Republic of Cuba, which never had any form or real life, nor any foothold in any city, village, or hamlet, and which for some time had been wandering through the thickest forests of the most inaccessible portion of the extensive and thinly peopled region of Camaguey, were at last overtaken and surprised by small bodies of Spanish troops, the chamber, in its mountain encampment, and the head of the government while leaving that encampment on a political errand.

The result was the dispersion of the so-called chamber (house) of representatives, the death of its presiding officer, Don Eduardo Machado Gomez, and some of its members; that of the secretary of war, Lieutenant-Colonel La Rua, and the capture of the president of the so-called republic, Don Tomas Estrada, who was not tried by any court, but sent to Spain by the Government. The treatment received by Mr. Estrada from the time of his arrival at the Spanish headquarters, the consideration shown him during his brief stay in the Morro Castle at Habana by the captain-general of the island, and complaints made by him against his political friends and partisans, not only on account of their abandonment of him, but also of the accusations of disloyalty which had been made by them against him, form the subject of the last part of a letter written by him to one of them residing in New York, which was published on the 15th of December in the Cuban newspapers of that city. That portion which is the most interesting of this long letter will be found in Appendix A.

Speaking of the aspect then presented by the insurrection in Cuba, one of its organs in New York, La Independencia, in its number for October 27, 1877, after referring to the latest news received from Cuba as grave and highly important, sought to make it appear less significant, expressing itself thus:

"The news to which we refer is by no means improbable. We know what has happened in Cuba during the past year, and this news does not surprise us, it being in our opinion the finale of a great crisis which has been coming on in the insurgent camp since the Citizen Tomas Estrada Palma became President of our Republic, who, according to the Spanish dispatch which we publish elsewhere, has been taken prisoner by a detachment of Spanish troops near Holguin, together with the secretary and several members of the legislative chamber.

"Suffice it to say that according to all the private information that we have received during the past two months it seems to be indubitable that President Estrada and the chamber had been deposed by the liberating army, and that they had consequently ceased to perform their official functions. * * * The vitality of the Cuban insurrection does not depend and never has depended upon the Government or the chamber; it depends exclusively upon the liberating army. * * * The organization of the liberating army is such that a brigade, a regiment, a battalion, a company, or a party of 25 men can operate independently against the enemy in any department, without requiring any instructions save those of their immediate military officers, because their purpose is but one and that is known by heart, as well by the general as the soldier, by the negro as well as the white man or the Chinese, viz, to make war on the enemy at all times, in all places, and by all means; with the gun, the machete,* and the firebrand. In order to do this, which is the duty of every Cuban soldier, the direction of a government or legislative chamber is not needed; the order of a subaltern officer, serving under the general in chief, is sufficient. Thus it is that the Government and chamber have in reality been a superfluous luxury for the revolution."

What an admirable organization was this of the Cuban army, divided up into parties of 25, the majority of them being negroes and Chinese, according to the organ of the insurgents. What wretched military tactics, according to which the use of the machete and the firebrand was allowable. What consideration and respect appear to have been shown to the executive and legislative branches of the Republic of Cuba by the general-in-chief, who is represented as having deposed those branches and having proclaimed himself dictator. The article in which a full statement of this is made is given entire in Appendix B, that it may be placed on file in the Department of State, since it is too late to submit it to the consideration and examination of those who favor the recognition of the belligerency or independence of Cuba.

This article is full of the passion and exaggeration of the inflammable spirit of the Cuban emigrants who, in the secure asylum of this country, and abusing the generous hospitality of the United States, have for many years been lending aid and comfort to the Cuban insurrection, advocating the extermination of the Spaniards, and upholding the use of the murderous machete and of the torch of the incendiary as the principal means of securing the independence of the island, to which task they are still ardently devoting their efforts, although the contest has been abandoned by those whom these emigrants, without incurring any risk themselves, would have wished to see convert the splendid and rich soil of Cuba into a vast pile of ruins and ashes; but there is a great deal of truth in the description of the character lately presented by the insurrection, and in the description of the insurgent bands, which could no longer be called Cuban, and in the assertion that for such bands and such purposes the chamber and the government were a superfluous luxury.

This being the view taken by the few but still influential Cubans who remained in Camaguey, the center of the insurrectionary movement, and who were fighting for independence, not for the ruin of the island, having more confidence in the well-tried generosity of Spain than in the fatal counsels of the emigrants in this country, in January last they made proposals of peace to the general in chief, seeking to obtain a suspension of hostilities in the territorial zone in which the Cuban chamber and government then were, the former being composed of only six members, the latter having been dissolved by the capture of President Estrada, and the general opinion of the people and of the armed force being expressed in favor of the termination of the struggle, only very few dissenting, the majority cooperating in the work of peace, and all intrusting the powers of the Republic to a revolutionary committee, which was instructed to make proposals of peace to the general-in-chief. By the middle of February a capitulation was reached, the preliminaries of which are not yet known to the undersigned, but whose terms were published in an extra issued by the Habana Gazette, the original of which is transmitted in Appendix C.

The arrangement made with the central committee having been made applicable to all the departments of the island, some of the principal leaders of the insurrection, among them the most prominent of all, Maximo Gomez, put themselves in communication with the other insurgent leaders, with a view of persuading them to put an end to the contest and to capitulate; and the revolutionary committee, which had assumed all the powers of the insurrection, commissioned Brig. Gen. Gabriel Gonzales to inform, verbally, representatives in New York of the dissolved government "of the events that had just taken place in the territory of the Republic."

*For a good definition of this word, see late editions of Webster's Dictionary.

Meanwhile the scattered bands of insurgents in Camaguey having been collected, on the 28th of February, which was the day appointed for the surrender, defiled in Puerto Principe before the general in chief of the Spanish army, amid the most enthusiastic acclamations, and on the day following, March 1, the undersigned received at New York the following telegram from the captain-general of Cuba:

"HABANA, March 1, 1878.

"To the Minister of Spain:

"Yesterday all the bands in the department of Principe, to the number of about 1,000 men, with an equal number of women and children, surrendered, together with the central committee; also those of Sancti Spiritus and La Trocha, estimated at 800. Other surrenders are expected in a few days. The general in chief leaves Principe for the Oriental department, in order to accelerate matters.

"JOVELLAR."

On the same day that the formerly rebel forces of Camaguey surrendered Brigadier-General Gonzales arrived in New York, having been deputed by the revolutionary committee of that territory (at the head of whom was the ex-president of the legislative chamber, formerly provisional president of the Republic and the author of some of its most severe decrees, especially of the one against Cubans who should listen to proposals of peace not based upon the recognition of the independence of Cuba) to notify the representatives of the dissolved government of the events that had taken place in the territory of the ex-republic, which representatives, notwithstanding the recent public manifestations of some of them against the probability of the reported surrender of the insurgents without a recognition of Cuban independence, yielding to the irresistible force of facts, recognized as no longer doubtful the dissolution of the Cuban chamber and government, and hastened to declare that "they no longer exercised the functions confided to them by said Government."

The document in which this declaration was contained was sent on the evening of the 1st to the newspapers of New York, and was printed in full in the New York Herald of the 2d, and published on the 9th in the Cuban revolutionary organ called La Independencia, in the form shown by the printed slip in Appendix D.

Since that time all the newspapers in the United States have been full of telegraphic news concerning surrenders in Cuba of more or less numerous parties under more or less prominent leaders, concerning hopes of speedy and absolute peace, concerning the feelings of fraternity and forgetfulness of the past now prevailing among those who were yesterday fighting on hostile fields, of which hopes and feelings the consul of the United States at Habana became the organ in a communication of the 5th to the Department of State, an extract from which was published in the Washington papers, and concerning the indignation with which the capitulating Cuban leaders and the sympathizers in Cuba with the cause defended by them regarded the warlike declarations of the uncompromising revolutionists in New York, and the purpose which was publicly expressed by them to organize fresh expeditions to prevent the complete pacification of the island; but the governor, captain-general of Cuba, who acts in everything, especially in matters of so grave a nature as the one in question, with as much sincerity as circumspection, addressed to the undersigned, in that relatively long space of time, the following telegram only:

"HABANA, March 19, 1878.

"To the Minister of Spain at Washington:

"Yesterday ended the surrender of the insurgent forces of the Villas, whose territory is now entirely free. Those who surrendered were Major-General Roloff, Brigadier-General Maestre, 3 colonels, 55 officers, 404 private soldiers, and about 100 women and children.

"The bands in Bayamo, Manzanillo, and Tiguani had already surrendered on the 8th, with Modesto Diaz, so that the country is completely pacified as far as Holguin.

"JOVELLAR."

As is seen by the foregoing telegram, and as may be verified by consulting a map of Cuba, the pacification of the island is far advanced, but it is not yet complete and definite. Nevertheless, the civil and military authorities of Spain, reciprocating the good faith with which the capitulators of Camaguey fulfilled the terms of their capitulation on the day after they had defiled in Puerto Principe before the general in chief of the army, that is to say, the 1st day of March, in strict fulfillment of article 1 of said capitulation, issued a decree of the same date, which was published in the Habana Gazette of the 3d, and which the honorable Secretary of State will find in Appendix E. By this decree it is provided that the Island of Cuba shall be represented in the Cortes of the Kingdom at their next session; that its government and local administration shall be modeled according to the municipal and provincial laws of the peninsula as they are in force in Puerto Rico, and that the Government of His Majesty shall be requested to introduce in the Island of Cuba, in the manner prescribed in article 89 of the constitution of the Monarchy, the other laws which have been, or which may hereafter be, promulgated in the peninsula. In virtue of article 1 of the aforesaid decree, the undersigned thinks that, according to the census of its population, Cuba will be entitled to at least 20 deputies in the Cortes, in addition to the senators chosen by the people according to the electoral law, and to those whom it already has of its own right or by virtue of royal appointment.

In the decree in question the phrase is to be noted with which its preamble begins: "The war being now near its end" (not a regular war in the sense in which it is defined by international law, but an intestine struggle, civil contest, or armed rebellion, which, in the military parlance of the Spanish language is commonly called war); which phrase shows that said military authorities do not consider the contest to be entirely at an end, although its termination is very near. The first sentence in the second paragraph of the same preamble is also noteworthy, in which it is declared that, had it not been for this contest, "Cuba would long since have enjoyed, according to the constitution of the State, the advantages which must necessarily accrue to her from a possible assimilation to the peninsula," which shows that the prevailing sentiment in Spain is in favor of treating Cuba as Puerto Rico has been treated; that is to say, like a Spanish province, although she could not grant to rebellious subjects what they demand with arms in their hands, namely, absolute independence, during a time of trial for the mother country, nor even what she was always ready to grant them voluntarily, and what she has now granted, at a time of greater prosperity for herself, to them, now that they have repented and sued for peace, which is an act of generosity and a guaranty of reconciliation.

A decree of the general in chief of the army of operations in the Island of Cuba was also inserted in the Habana Gazette of the 3d.

This was issued at Puerto Principe on the 10th of March, and will be found in Appendix F. It guarantees the freedom which was offered in article 3 of the capitulation of all slaves who were in the ranks of the insurgents on the 10th day of February, and who have surrendered or who shall surrender before the 31st day of the current month of March.

Articles 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the capitulation have been fulfilled already, or are now in course of fulfillment, toward all who are willing to take advantage of their benefits. Article 4 requires no immediate action, and article 2 has always constituted the distinguishing trait of the Spanish policy in Cuba. Forgetfulness of the past, pardon of political crimes, release of property embargoed for the same cause, mitigation of the effects of these embargoes as regards the innocent members of the families of those whose property has been embargoed, and even the furnishing of means of subsistence to repentant rebels—all this has been frequently offered or granted by the Government and authorities of Spain from the time of the decree of amnesty, issued on the 12th of January, 1869, by the governor, captain-general of the island, Don Domingo Dulce, who was sent by the revolutionary government of 1868 to establish in Cuba the same liberties and franchises that were enjoyed by the peninsula, until the royal decree of October 27, 1877, by which the unimproved public lands, certain forests belonging to the State, and town lands not used are ordered to be divided among various classes, viz:

First. Licentiates and volunteers, who have been mobilized or who have taken part in a battle.

Second. Inhabitants of the towns of the island who have remained loyal to the Government and who have suffered considerable losses of property in consequence of the war.

Third. Persons who have voluntarily surrendered to the authorities and forces of the Government.

The reproduction and analysis of all these general acts, and many other private ones of pardon, clemency, and generosity, would render this note interminable, which had no other object, as remarked at the beginning, than to satisfy the desire of the honorable Secretary of State to become accurately acquainted with the present situation of Cuba, but which the undersigned, in his wish to correct false impressions which have been circulated by the conspirators against Spain in this country, has thought proper to extend sufficiently to indicate succinctly the policy of Spain in Cuba and the causes that have given rise to the recent events. Although the Government of Spain does not recognize the right of any foreign power to interfere in the internal affairs of that country, it values too highly the opinion of the sensible people of the United States and the friendship of its Government for its representative at Washington to neglect an opportunity like the one now offered to present in their true aspect the acts, intentions, and constant policy of Spain in her relations with the Island of Cuba.

If it were necessary, or the Honorable Secretary of State should desire it, the undersigned would amplify and prove by means of trustworthy documents the assertions which he has just made, and he proposes shortly to show that the only obstacle that can now retard, not absolutely prevent, the complete pacification of Cuba is the war cry and the false promises of immediate aid which are once more sent from New York by the Cuban conspirators, who urge in public meetings the continuation of the struggle which is now so near its end. And it is a remarkable fact that in this struggle, by a sad fatality for the liberators of Cuba, a fatality which would not escape, and which has not escaped, the observation of the American people and the perspicacity of its enlightened press, foreigners have been its principal leaders—those who have most zealously maintained it, and who have most distinguished themselves in it. Jordan and Reeve, Americans; Maximo Gomez and Modesto Diaz, Dominicans; Roloff, a Pole; Caoba and Maceo, the one an African and the other a semi-African; Prado, the captor of the Moctezuma, a Peruvian; and finally, not to mention any more names, Gonzales, a Mexican, who was deputed by the revolutionary committee of Camaguey to announce the dissolution of the legislative chamber and of the Government of the Republic to its representatives in the United States. Even the diplomatic commissioner of Cuba abroad, Echerarria, who less than a month ago proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of this great country, by a circular telegram from the Washington agency of the Associated Press, that the news of the submission of the greater part of the insurgent leaders was false, and that they would accept no terms not based upon the recognition of Cuban independence—even that diplomatic agent, whom the honorable Committee on Foreign Relations of the House of Representatives of the United States, having charge of Cuban affairs, received and listened to with interest in the belief that he was a son of Cuba, is no Cuban at all, but a Venezuelan.

If an insurrection composed of such antagonistic elements as the Latin, African, Mongolian, and Anglo-Saxon races, led on by officers of all known nationalities, could have triumphed, the confusion of tongues at the Tower of Babel, and the memorable catastrophe which took place in the formerly French portion of the island of Santo Domingo, would have been cast into the shade by the spectacle which victorious, free, and Africanized Cuba would have presented to the civilized world.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Honorable William M. Evarts the assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

ANTONIO MANTILLA.

—

No. 4.

Mr. Mantilla to Mr. Evarts.

LEGACION DE ESPAÑA EN WASHINGTON,
Washington, April 3, 1878.

* * * * * * *

On the preceding day the undersigned received a telegram from the governor-general of Cuba to the effect that, after much hesitation, Vicente Garcia has refused to make a capitulation. Besides him, as the governor-general observes, there are remaining in resistance to the Government in Cuba only Maceo, in the neighborhood of Las Tunas, and Mayary. In the department of Las Villas, the central, and in part of the oriental there is the most complete tranquility.

The uniform tendency of the semiofficial telegrams from Habana, published in the journals of New York on the 28th ultimo, is to confirm the news that the local disturbances in the eastern and central portions of the island, which have so persistently and unhappily afflicted Cuba during the past ten years, have subsided and that good order is generally reappearing.

This is substantially the same condition of affairs that was exhibited by the undersigned in his note of March 23 to the Department of State in compliance with the invitation verbally expressed by the Honorable Mr. Evarts on the 21st.

The inconvenience and peril of this imperfect condition of internal administration in the eastern portion of the Island of Cuba would be really unimportant to Spain or to the authorities of that island were it not for the relation which such isolated disorder bears to a busy nest of Cuban, Central American, and South American conspirators in the city of New York. As is well known to the distinguished Secretary of State, the three prominent agents of the so-called Republic of Cuba in that city (MM. Aldama, Echeverria, and Sanguili) abandoned their illegal functions when the officials in Cuba of that (so-called) "Republic" recently threw aside their absurd pretensions to constitute a government, and confessed that no such government existed. The city of New York has been, since 1869, the real fountain and arsenal of the insurrection in Cuba. Its newspapers were there. Its leading generals were there, and are yet there. There was its financial and military base of operations. Resistance to the constituted authority of Spain in Cuba was kept alive in the eastern part of that island from 1869 to 1878 chiefly by representations that the powerful Government of the United States would in the end, and very soon, come to the aid of the revolt, as against Spain. By various devices, bonds of the so-called "Republic of Cuba," payable whenever that island attained her independence of Spain, were sold in the United States (in violation of public law, because not bought as a bona fide investment of money), and the sums received therefor used in the city of New York to support the revolt in that city, and also to fit out military enterprises from the shores of the United States against Cuba. The large Cuban immigration in Florida and in New York, chiefly occupied in the manufacture of leaf tobacco for various uses, was coerced or deluded for many years into contributing a portion of its slender earnings to keep alive the Cuban revolt until the United States saw fit to come to its rescue, either by belligerent recognition or in some other way. The pressure of what is known as the "hard times" in the United States (and which has been so generally felt all over Europe) has thrown a great many of these frightened or deluded Cubans out of employment altogether, or has made it impossible for them to have any surplus earnings left after paying their necessary expenses. These and other causes left the conspirators in New York without funds with which to manufacture what was called a "public opinion" in the United States, or to send military enterprises to Cuba; and therefore, of necessity, the revolt in the eastern and central portions of the island straightway began to expire.

* * * * * * *

There are in the United States, and particularly in New York, both Cubans and Americans who seek for their own selfish purposes to reconstitute the insurrection in New York and fill the places vacated by Aldama, Echeverria, and Sanguili. There are Cuban journals printed in New York in the Spanish language, which even now persist in proclaiming the necessity of continual resistance in Cuba, of assailing the authority of Spain in that island, and in urging the importance of sending, as soon as possible, military succor to the roving bands of discontented negroes, Chinese, escaped Cuban criminals, and deserters from the army of Spain, who wander about, or in the mountains of the extreme oriental part of the island. Public meetings are held in New York with the same object. These Cuban newspapers and these public meetings organize committees to receive subscriptions of money. They ask the former agents in New York of the so-called Republic of Cuba to surrender to them the funds and other property * * * of the so-called Republic which may be in their possession. They publicly solicit the assistance of certain South American Governments. What very many, and indeed a great part, of these conspirators are doing in New York is in palpable violation of the neutrality laws of the United States; but the undersigned has not thus far deemed it necessary to formally invite the attention of the President of the United States to these acts, because the undersigned has believed that these acts would be harmless in their character.

* * * * * * *

The Department of State may be assured that the undersigned will cause to be transmitted, for the information of the President, the first official news which is received that the Cuban insurrection is at an end in the eastern part of the Island of Cuba and the city of New York.

The Secretary of State must have observed how promptly and liberally Spain offered pardon and immunity to her erring Cuban subjects on the first intimation of a desire or willingness on their part to throw down their rude arms and submit to the authority of their legitimate and friendly King, like all other Spanish subjects. During these many years Spain has held the same attitude of pardon and forgiveness, if her misguided subjects in Cuba, under the control of wicked and selfish leaders in the United States, would cease resistance and obey the laws of Spain, as Puerto Rico obeys them, but their leaders in New York would not permit such surrender, and the unhappy revolt has therefore continued until very recently, with no benefit to anyone.

The President of the United States may be assured that Spain stands ready to-day to promote the most liberal measures of amnesty to all those who in good faith abandon armed resistance to her authority. Certainly the United States almost as much as Spain herself must desire to see the island again pursuing the paths of good order, contentment, prosperity, and happiness. Cuba is an ancient possession of Spain, and Spain will vindicate the rightfulness and beneficence of that possession. Cuba lies at the doors of the United States. Her products imported into the United States pay a proportion of the customs revenue of this powerful Republic of the West, which too few people understand or appreciate. It is to be hoped that, with a revival of good order and industry in that prolific and beautiful island, the commercial relations between her, as a province of Spain represented in the Spanish cortes at Madrid, and the United States may be drawn closer and closer, to the mutual and abiding interest of Americans and Cubans. To promote this peaceful object is a work to which the undersigned is constantly reminded by his sovereign that he must dedicate his best efforts.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion to renew to the Hon. William M. Evarts the assurances of his most distinguished consideration.

ANTONIO MANTILLA.

—

No. 5.

Mr. Seward to Mr. Mantilla.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 10, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 23d ultimo, regarding the present political condition of the Island of Cuba, and to observe, at the same time, that the statements made by you will be attentively read and carefully considered.

Accept, sir, a renewed assurance of my distinguished consideration.

F. W. SEWARD, Acting Secretary.

Señor Don ANTONIO MANTILLA, etc., etc., etc.

—

No. 6.

Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward.

No. 663.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Habana, February 16, 1878.

SIR: For a month, at least, previous to the recent festivities which were ordered to take place in the island in honor of the marriage of the King of Spain, it was currently reported that during the festivities peace with the Cuban insurgents would be announced. These reports were not of an official character, and were not generally credited, although it is well known that for a long time Gen. Martinez Campos has been making great efforts to bring about some arrangement with the insurgents whereby they might be induced to lay down their arms.

On the 13th instant there were received from the interior of the island numerous printed supplements, containing what purport to be and are beyond a doubt the bases agreed upon between Gen. Martinez Campos and the so-called "Central Junta of Camaguey" for a treaty of peace, the same having been communicated by Martinez Campos by telegraph to General Figueroa, commanding the Villas department, and by the latter transmitted to the several military commanders of Trinidad, Cienfuegos, Remedios, Sagua, and Colon, in each of which places the terms were published and circulated. It caused some surprise that they were not, as is alleged, communicated to Habana, and here published in the usual official form in the Gaceta, the versions which have since appeared in the Habana papers having been taken from those of the interior.

On the 14th instant, however, the Diario published a telegram from its correspondent at headquarters, as follows:

"Peace in the island is a fact about to be realized. Maximo Gomez, president of the Cuban Republic, the chamber, and government, in accord with the Camagueyan forces, are at work to establish peace," etc.

This telegram, confirming to a certain extent the news of the previous day, set at rest many doubts which had existed as to the authenticity of the statements from the interior. It caused some surprise and many comments that it should contain a recognition of the "Cuban Republic, chambers, and government," hitherto styled bandits, incendiaries, etc.

The terms of the proposed peace are worthy of note. Article 1 provides that the Island of Cuba shall have the same concessions enjoyed by the Island of Puerto Rico. With the exception that the latter sends representatives to the Spanish Cortes, it is generally understood that the two islands have the same form of government and administration.

Article 2 is considered ambiguous, and doubts are expressed in reference to it, whether it might not be construed to prevent the return of those who are absent from the island, but who are not undergoing penalties, as also whether it will embrace the unconditional restoration of embargoed and confiscated property.

Article 3 will beyond doubt prove very unsatisfactory to planters and slave owners.

On the evening of the 14th General Jovellar, accompanied by General Figueroa and other officials, left for Puerto Principe. It is well understood that his departure has reference to pending negotiations with the insurgents.

I further transmit an article from the Diario, of the 14th, which I doubt not will be found of interest.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY C. HALL.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

—

Inclosures.

1. Proposed bases of peace negotiations with the Cuban insurgents.
2. Translation of above.
3. Copy of telegram published in the Diario of February 14, 1878.
4-5. Article and translation from the Diario of the above date.

[Inclosure No. 2 with dispatch No. 663.]

HABANA, February 16, 1878.

[Translation.]

MILITARY COMMANDANCY OF COLON.

His excellency the commandant-general of the Villas, by telegram of this date from Trinidad, states the following:

I have this moment received from his excellency the general-in-chief the following telegram:

"ZANJON, February 10, 1878.

"I have accorded with the central junta of the Camaguey, which has substituted government and chambers for making peace, the following basis:

"ARTICLE 1. Concession to the Island of Cuba the same political privileges, organic and administrative, enjoyed by the Island of Puerto Rico.

"ART. 2. Oblivion of the past, as regards political offenses committed since the year 1868 up to the present, and the liberty of those under trial or who are fulfilling sentences within or outside of the island. A general pardon to the deserters from the Spanish army, without distinction of nativity; this clause to be extended to all those who have taken any part, directly or indirectly, in the revolutionary movement.

"ART. 3. Freedom to the slaves and Asiatic colonists now in the insurrectionary ranks.

"ART. 4. No person who, in virtue of this capitulation, recognizes and remains within the authority of the Spanish Government shall be compelled to render any service of war, so long as peace is not established in all the territory.

ART. 5. Every person who desires to leave the island shall be at liberty to do so, and he shall be furnished by the Spanish Government with the means therefor, without entering a town, if he should so desire it.

ART. 6. The capitulation of each force shall take place outside the towns, where the arms, implements of war, shall be laid down.

ART. 7. The general-in-chief of the Spanish army, in order to facilitate the means for uniting the other departments (in this convention) shall make free all the means of communication, by sea and land, that he can dispose of.

ART. 8. The agreement made with the central junta shall be considered as general, and without special restrictions, for all the departments of the island which accept these propositions.

I make it known to your excellency, for the information of yourself and of the troops under your command, with the understanding that operations shall be suspended, the troops being restricted to acting upon the defensive and to escorting convoys.

In the event of any of our forces falling in with the enemy they will make known to him these bases without firing upon him.

Your excellency will also order that experienced guides shall go out immediately with these instructions and make them known to the chiefs of the opposing forces, until the commissioners of the central junta for that purpose, who have this jurisdiction, shall arrive.

By order of his excellency the general-in-chief.

The chief of staff.

PRENDERGAST.

Which I have the satisfaction of communicating to your highness for information and order that it may be published by the newspapers of that locality by means of extras or other means which the zeal of your highness may suggest, in order that such an important event may become known to the inhabitants of that jurisdiction, and remitting printed copies also to the chiefs of columns in operations for its greater publicity.

FIGUEROA.

All of which I have the satisfaction to make public for the general information of the loyal inhabitants of this jurisdiction.

COLON, 11th February, 1878.

JUAN DOMINGO,
Colonel, Military Commandant.

[Inclosure No. 3 with dispatch No. 663.]

HABANA, February 16, 1878.

[Translation.]

[From the Diario de la Marina of 14th February, 1877.]

We have just received the following telegram from the correspondent of the press, at headquarters, which says more than we could say in commenting upon it:

"SANTA CRUZ, February 12.

"Director del Diario, de la Marina, Habana:

"The peace of the island is now a fact about to be realized. The president of the Cuban Republic, Maximo Gomez, chamber and government in accord with the force of the Camaguey, are at work to realize peace. Also, in the Villas and Oriental departments. For those two departments commissions of important chiefs have left with that object. Hostilities suspended in all the island.

"FLORES."

[Inclosure No. 5 with dispatch No. 663.]

HABANA, February 16, 1878.

[Translation.]

[From the Diario de la Marina of 14th February, 1878.]

WAR AND PEACE.

The present situation of the island is about to undergo a change. Generals Martinez Campos and Jovellar, who contributed so efficiently to the pacification of the peninsula, in all probability (and which we hope may soon become a palpable reality) will have at last been able to break the hundred heads of the hydra of the war which has caused so much desolation; the one with his indefatigable activity, with his conciliatory character, patience, and constancy, the other with his tact for command, with his determination to reenforce the action of the former in providing him, as far as was humanly possible, with all the resources he needed; with his well-known tolerance, his affability, his sound judgment, he having, by mere force of his skill, been able to quiet excited spirits (for there are wars no less prejudicial than those of battlefields), and in maintaining complete tranquillity among the populations of all the cities.

To the Government of His Majesty, which, having reposed its confidence in these illustrious men, and having permitted them to act without placing any obstacle in their progress, as it would have done if it had pretended, in the great crisis through which they have passed, to direct absolutely the issues, will have had no insignificant part in the great result which we trust before long to see announced officially. At times, in governing but little, more governing is accomplished, for the reason that all the details can not be appreciated from a great distance.

The two purposes which both generals undertook to carry out were to quiet excitement, time having demonstrated that it creates rather than removes difficulties, and in vain can it be expected that the passions can accomplish what exclusively pertains to reason and judgment: the other to subjugate the enemy, not altogether by violence and the shedding of blood, but with benignity combined with energy, with the proper distribution of troops, reestablishing discipline in all its rigor wherein it might be suspected of having relaxed, were difficult, very difficult undertakings, although there are some views which do not cause the same effect when near as when seen at a distance, while the most admirable works of art are not appreciated so much when just created as after a lapse of time and the mind can judge of them dispassionately without the preventions of sympathy or antipathy caused by the envy or emulation of contemporary artists.

This is what our judgment, the result of a long series of observation, tells us, because we have always preferred above all things to be eminently practical.

The glory from these happy results which we definitely look for, as our estimable colleague, the Vos de Cuba, in its well-reasoned article, says, pertains in a great measure to Generals Jovellar and Martinez Campos, for among all the services that can be rendered to a country the greatest of all is that of restoring it to peace; because war is the cause of every calamity which can sadden and afflict a people.

The poet Aristophanes has represented war under the figure of a gigantic monster, armed with a pestle and mortar in which he pulverizes not only cities but their inhabitants. A French author calls war "the sister of death and the law of the robbers," and in all centuries it has been the horror of nations. Nations need peace, because they can live only by labor and industry, and there is no heart so insensible as not to be horrified by its desolations, by the sinister lights of its conflagrations, and its blood and carnage.

Peace is the symbol of order, and without order all is confusion; without peace it is impossible that public interests be developed, nor can any measure for increasing the public wealth be carried out. War absorbs everything; it consumes the very elements that nurture it.

What would be the flourishing condition of Cuba if the immense sums that have been spent in sustaining the strife which for more than nine years has disturbed us, without excluding what it has cost the enemy, however limited his resources, if those sums had been invested in works of public utility and in the development of our industries? What would be the aspect of Habana and of the principal cities of the island?

When wars have for their object the removal of obstacles to the prosperity of a decaying country, or for bettering the condition of the needy classes, if over them weighs the iron arm of indigence, they have an honest pretext; but when that impulse controls, the works which represent the labor of centuries are not destroyed.

Only ambition, the negation of every generous impulse, and the most abominable cruelty would influence the minds of those who would not rejoice before the proximity of peace.

And it is a proof of what we say that Turkey, which has given ostensible proofs of heroism in the war of the Titans she has sustained, prefers the humiliation of defeat to the continuation of a series of disasters which in the end could be no other than the complete destruction of all her territory and the loss of life and of her political existence in the concert of nations.

Welcome, then, peace above all, and with peace the greatest difficulties can be overcome tranquilly.

Those whom Divine Providence has selected as the instruments of His omnipotent will to restore to us that great blessing merit well of the country and the pure and disinterested love of all the good.

—

No. 7.

Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward.

No. 664.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Habana, February 23, 1878.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

SIR: With my dispatch No. 663, of the 16th instant, I transmitted a copy and translation of the proposed basis of negotiations for peace between Spain and the Cuban insurgents. I stated therein that these terms had not then been published officially in the Habana papers. On the 19th instant, however, the same were published in a supplement of the Gaceta, and again on the 20th in the paper itself, as per copy and translation herewith. The authenticity of the document being fully established, I thought proper to advise the Department by the cable, as follows:

"HABANA, February 19, 1878.

"Secretary of State, Washington:

"The bases of negotiation for peace and surrender of insurgent forces are published here to-day officially. There appears no doubt whatever that peace will be realized.

"HALL."

I am further informed by the consul at Santiago de Cuba that Maximo Gomez and the two other insurgent chiefs had arrived at that place on the 16th instant en route for the insurgent camps in that department with the purpose of inducing the forces still in arms to accept the proposed bases. There is but little doubt that they will be successful and that ere long peace will be fully established.

In my dispatch No. 663 I had occasion to refer to the dissatisfaction created among planters and slave owners by the third article of the proposed bases; it was asserted that General Jovellar's departure for Puerto Principe was with special reference to that article; the members of the casino, it was said also, were to have an extraordinary meeting with the view of expressing their opinions, which were understood to be in opposition to the proposed terms, and especially to the third article of the bases. But whatever may have been their original intention, the result of the meeting was the transmission of congratulatory telegrams to Spain and to Gen. Martinez Campos, and a general manifestation of hearty approval of all his efforts in obtaining a termination so satisfactory of existing difficulties.

In connection with the foregoing, I beg to invite your attention to an article under the head of "La Paz," published in the Voz de Cuba of the 19th instant, in which it is claimed that the surrender of the insurgents is the result of their own motion, and not of any proposal emanated from Gen. Martinez Campos. The article referred to makes some comparisons which are also worthy of attention, although quite out of place. I regret that I am not able to furnish a full translation by this mail.

It is also known that, by the steamer leaving to-day for New York, an authorized agent of the central committee of the Cuban Government has taken passage for the purpose of conferring with the Cuban junta in the United States.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HENRY C. HALL, Consul-General.

[Inclosure No. 1 with dispatch No. 664.]

HABANA, February 23, 1878.

GACETA EXTRAORDINARIA.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1878.

General Government of the Island of Cuba:

For the information and satisfaction of the public there are published the following bases conceded by his excellency the general-in-chief in accord with this Government for the capitulation of the forces of the insurrection still in arms. These bases are a sure guaranty of an immediate peace, as glorious for the illustrious general who has had the direction of the war, for the army, as honorable and generous for the capitulating forces, and necessary, above all, for the country, which by favor of these terms will be able after long years of perturbation to reach the termination of its extraordinary sacrifices and to dedicate anew the whole of its productive forces to the development of its paralyzed prosperity.

BASES.

ARTICLE 1. Concession to the Island of Cuba the same political privileges, organic and administrative, enjoyed by the Island of Puerto Rico.

ART. 2. Oblivion of the past as regards political offenses committed since the year 1868 up to the present, and the liberty of those under trial or who are fulfilling sentences within or outside the island. A general pardon to the deserters from the Spanish army, without distinction of nativity. This clause to be extended to all those who have taken any part, directly or indirectly, in the revolutionary movement.

ART. 3. Freedom to the slaves and Asiatic colonists now in the insurrectionary ranks.

ART. 4. No person who in virtue of this capitulation recognizes and remains within the authority of the Spanish Government shall be compelled to render any service of war, so long as peace is not established in all the territory.

ART. 5. Every person who desires to leave the island shall be at liberty to do so, and he shall be furnished by the Spanish Government with the means therefor, without entering a town, if he should so desire it.

ART. 6. The capitulation of each force shall take place outside the towns, where the arms, implements of war, shall be laid down.

ART. 7. The general-in-chief of the Spanish army, in order to facilitate the means for uniting the other departments (in this convention), shall make free all the means of communication by sea and land that he can dispose of.

ART. 8. The agreement made with the central junta shall be considered as general and without special restrictions for all the departments of the island which accept these propositions.

JOVELLAR.

HABANA, 19th February, 1878.

—

No. 8.

Mr. Seward to Mr. Hall.

No. 440.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 26, 1878.

SIR: I have to inform you of the receipt of your telegram of the 19th instant, of which the following is a copy: "Secretary of State, Washington: The bases of negotiations for peace and surrender of insurgent forces are published to-day officially. There appears no doubt whatever that peace will be realized. Hall."

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
F. W. SEWARD, Assistant Secretary.

To HENRY C. HALL, Esq.,
Consul-General of the United States, Habana, Cuba.

—

No. 9.

Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward.

No. 666.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Habana, March 2, 1878.

SIR: With reference to my dispatches Nos. 663 and 664, of the 16th and 23d ultimo, I now transmit copies and translations of several official reports of the surrender of portions of the Cuban insurgent forces at Puerto Principe, Sancti Spiritus, La Trocha, and other places in the central department of the island. From these statements it appears that on the 28th ultimo the Cuban insurgent forces of the Camaguey district, or a part of them, surrendered at Puerto Principe to Gen. Martinez Campos; their number is not given in the telegram, but I have been informed by General Jovellar that about 1,000 men, with the central committee or junta (comprising about all that remains to represent the late Cuban Government), passed in review and were disbanded. On the 1st instant, yesterday, other bodies of the insurgents to the number of 800 men surrendered at the Trocha and in Sancti Spiritus. Some of the forces scattered through the Villas department, it is said, are being collected prior to a final surrender and disbandment. It would seem, therefore, that the forces of the Villas and central departments, comprising the half or more of the late insurrectionary district, have accepted the terms of reconciliation, and that in those departments, at least, the insurrection has virtually terminated. There still remain the forces of the oriental department, which have not yet been heard from, but it is not probable that these forces will hold out after the surrender of the main body, and in fact of the very nucleus of the insurrection. I respectfully call your attention to the important decrees published in the Gaceta Oficial of this date, and of which I will forward translations in my next. The first of these decrees declares that the Island of Cuba shall have representation in the Spanish Cortes on the same conditions as those existing in Puerto Rico. It provides also for the establishment of the same provincial and municipal laws now ruling in Spain and in Puerto Rico. The second decree, which is in conformity with article third of the bases of capitulation of the insurgent forces, provides for the freedom of the slaves who were in the insurrection on the 10th February ultimo and who shall present themselves in any form to the authorities or to the troops of the Government before the 31st instant.

I have, etc., HENRY C. HALL, Consul-General.

[Inclosure.—Translation.]

[From the Voz de Cuba of 2d March, 1878.]

INTERESTING NEWS.

Our readers will have seen in the morning edition the telegram dated 28th February, sent us by the correspondent of the press in campaign from Puerto Principe. The late hour in which we received it gave us time only to insert it, and we omitted our comments in order that our subscribers might receive in time the grateful news it contained. When our number was already in press we received from the general Government, for publication, the following telegram, confirming officially all that an active correspondent had sent us:

CAPTAINCY-GENERAL OF THE EVER-FAITHFUL ISLE OF CUBA STAFF.

His excellency the general-in-chief of the army in operations, in a telegram dated Puerto Principe, 3 p. m. to-day, says to his excellency the captain-general the following:

"At 2 p. m. of to-day the surrender of the Cuban forces and arms at this jurisdiction has commenced. Published by order of H. E. for general information. Habana, 28th February, 1878.

"The brigadier chief of staff: PEDRO DE CUENCA."

The capitulation has been carried out on the day announced in the Camaguey and in the Trocha; and peace, in those two vast departments, is a reality. As can be inferred from the telegraphic dispatch of our correspondent, more than a thousand persons, 400 of them armed, have presented themselves in the Camaguey, and in the official dispatch it is said that at their head were the chiefs and deputies. We do not know the number of the forces which have laid down their arms in the camp "Ojo de Agua," but it is to be presumed that the number is, in all, about the same as that of the forces of the Camaguey. The following from the dispatch of our correspondent, "The chiefs who have not surrendered embark for foreign ports to-day," indicate, in our judgment, that there may have been some chief who has not yet accepted the bases and has not wished to remain in the island; whichever way it may be, his departure, which will have taken place at this hour, puts an end to all further interior dissidence. In regard to the Oriental department, it is to be expected that we will soon receive news of the capitulation of the forces therein, as by this time conferences will have taken place between their chief and the commissioners ad hoc to conclude it. The pacification of all the island will soon, therefore, be a consummated reality, as it already is in the Central and the Villas departments. May God grant that, with peace, Cuba may enter upon a new era of prosperity and happiness.

TELEGRAMS RECEIVED AT THE CAPTAINCY-GENERAL.

SANCTI SPIRITUS, 1st March, 1878.

To-day the forces of Jimenez and Sanchez, numbering 425 men, 71 women, and 30 children, have surrendered their arms at Ojo de Agua, near this place. To-day or to-morrow Lieutenant-Colonel Arias should arrive with the object of surrendering at once, and of which I will report to your excellency. The forces of the Remedios, at the orders of Carrillo, are collecting at Ciego Potrero, and will surrender on the 5th. The forces of José Gomez should surrender to-day at the Trocha, according to the order of Jimenez.

SANTA CLARA, 1st March.

To the Chief of the Battalion of Leon at Cumanayagua:

More than 400 men, with 6 chiefs, among them Pancho Jimenez and Serafin Sanchez, laid down their arms yesterday afternoon at Ojo de Agua.

HOLGUIN, 1st March.

Colonel Dominguez returned to-day, having collected those arrived at Guabajanuy, of all which he has reported. He brought 57 men, besides 22 others armed, 22 women, and 35 minors.

No. 10.

Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward.

No. 667.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Habana, March 2, 1878.

SIR: Referring to my No. 666, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies and translations of two important decrees which appear in the Gaceta of to-day.

The first of these decrees provides for the representation of Cuba in the next Cortes of Spain, upon the same conditions which are now applied to the Island of Puerto Rico; it also provides for the extension to Cuba of the municipal and provincial law of the 2d of October, 1877, now in force in Spain and in Puerto Rico.

The second decree or edict, issued by General Martinez Campos, declares that all the slaves, of both sexes, found in the insurrection on the 10th February ultimo, and who shall present themselves to the civil or military authorities of the Government before the 31st day of March, 1878, shall be free and provided with vicinage certificates to that effect.

It provides also for indemnity, in due time, to those owners who have remained loyal to the Government during the insurrection.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
HENRY C. HALL, Consul-General.

Hon. F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington.

[Inclosure No. 1 with dispatch No. 667.]

HABANA, March 2, 1878.

[From the Gaceta de la Habana of March 2, 1878.]

GENERAL GOVERNMENT OF THE ISLAND OF CUBA.

The war, which for a period of more than nine years has demanded the preferent attention, subordinating to its vital interest every thought and every measure of the Government, being near its termination and peace being happily inaugurated upon conditions of concord in the future, the opportune moment has arrived, at last for carrying out known purposes, which, on account of perturbations, have been postponed, and consequently to introduce into the present organic political and administrative system of the island all those reforms which without prejudice to the unity and prerogatives of the central authority may facilitate, by means of the action of popular corporations disencumbered, within the circle of loyalty, the complete development of municipal and of provincial organization.

A long time ago, but for the war, in consonance with the provisions in the constitution of the State, Cuba would have enjoyed the advantages which, necessarily, assimilation as far as possible with the peninsula would have given her; and, aside from certain reforms of social character, which are by circumstances subject to special laws and to definitive solutions of profound study in everything relating to representation in the Cortes, the island would have been in a situation analogous to Puerto Rico.

The only opposing obstacle being removed, it becomes natural and logical to recognize the administration in the sense referred to, and to invite to the participation of public life, in behalf of the country, all the constitutive elements of the new institutions.

In accord, therefore, with his excellency the general-in-chief, and authorized by the Government of His Majesty the King, I issue the following:

DECREE.

ARTICLE 1. Commencing with the next coming legislature, the Island of Cuba shall have its representation in the Cortes of the Kingdom upon the same terms with Puerto Rico and in accordance with its population.

ART. 2. The provincial and municipal laws of the peninsula of October 2, 1877, published in the Gaceta de Madrid of the 4th of the same month and year, shall also be adopted in its government and administration in the manner now in force in Puerto Rico.

ART. 3. The Government of His Majesty will be solicited to apply to this island in succession, with the modifications it may deem expedient and in virtue of the provisions of article 89 of the constitution of the monarchy, other laws already promulgated or which may be promulgated for the peninsula.

JOAQUIN JOVELLAR.
ARSÉNIO MARTINEZ CAMPOS.

HABANA, March 1, 1878.

[Inclosure No. 2 with dispatch No. 667.]

[Translation.]

[From the Gaceta de la Habana, of March 2, 1878.]

ARMY OF OPERATIONS OF THE ISLAND OF CUBA.

The insurgents of the central department and of the commandancy-general of the Trocha having laid down their arms, and in expectation that their example will be followed soon by the others in the island:

The day, therefore, of the long wished for peace being near, and desiring to signalize the happy event by a new proof of the firm purpose which animates the Government of His Majesty to continue in the road of progress long since undertaken, avoiding at the same time possible derangements of social order and of measures adopted in the period of the war:

Having in view the sentiment which inspired the present law of the gradual emancipation of slavery in this Antilla;

Considering, besides, that the majority of those slaves who, for any cause, are to-day in the insurrection, have not figured in the census made in 1870 for classifying their legal status, or otherwise, that may have belonged to owners who, in taking an active or indirect part in the Cuban revolution, declared, in fact or by their own will, the freedom of their slaves; and, on the other hand, taking into consideration their condition, that at that time they had no civil or political responsibility; and finally recognizing the right of those owners who have maintained complete fidelity to the national cause to indemnification by the State, in sacrificing to other expediencies their legitimate property;

Authorized by the Government of His Majesty the King, and in accord with his excellency the governor-general of the island, I issue the following

EDICT:

ARTICLE 1. All slaves of both sexes that may have been found in the insurrection on the 10th day of February shall remain free if they present themselves in any form to the legitimate authorities or troops of the Government before the 31st day of the present month of March.

ART. 2. The legitimate owners of those freedmen who have taken any part or have aided in any way, that can be proven, the insurrection, shall have no right to any indemnification in the premises.

ART. 3. The lawful owners of the said freedmen who are not comprised in the preceding article shall be indemnified in due time in conformity with what is ordered in the law of gradual emancipation.

ART. 4. The local authorities shall issue certificates of vicinage as free citizens to those slaves who present themselves and are found to be comprised in article 1, giving a detailed and direct account to the respective commandancies-general, which will act in concert with the local juntas of freedmen in regard to their new status.

Puerto Principe, 1st March, 1878.

ASENIO MARTINEZ CAMPOS.
JOAQUIN JOVELLAR.

No. 11.

Mr. Hall to Mr. Seward.

No. 668.] UNITED STATES CONSULATE GENERAL,
Habana, March 5, 1878.

SIR: With reference to my dispatches No. 664, of the 23d ultimo, and No. 666, of the 2d instant, relating to the surrender of Cuban insurgents, I beg to transmit herewith an article from the Diario of this date, containing about all of interest that has transpired since forwarding my last-mentioned dispatch. The reports received thus far are very meager; it would seem, however, that up to the present two thousand and upward of the insurgents have laid down their arms. There still remain to be accounted for the several forces in the eastern department and in the department of the Villas, whose numbers are variously estimated at from two to four thousand. There is no doubt, I imagine, that these bodies will soon give in their adhesion, and with it the insurrection of Yara, which has existed over nine years, may be said to have ended. The terms given the insurgents are considered honorable to them as well as to Spain. It is noticeable also that the rancors and animosities which existed between Cubans and Spaniards during the first years of the war have to a great extent disappeared. The time is, therefore, propitious for the voluntary introduction of the long-promised reforms in the government of the island.

I have, etc., HENRY C. HALL, Consul-General.

[Inclosure.—Translation.]

[From the Diario de la Marina of March 5, 1878.]

NEW ADHESIONS TO THE CAPITULATION.

We have said that the war is virtually terminated, by reason of the resignation of the authorities from whom emanated the powers of all those who had command of the forces of the revolution, or discharged special commissions in Cuba or abroad; even in the event that the latter might not be convinced of the sterility of their efforts in sustaining the ideas they entertained, they could not do otherwise than to follow the example of the most prominent men of the Cuban forces, although they might not agree to exchange their status for another which carried with it a loss of personal prestige; authority can not exist when it has lost the nucleus which sustains it. We are not surprised, therefore, at the news we have received that Aldama, Echevarria, and others who held official positions in New York had decided to resign when they were informed of what had occurred in Cuba by the emissaries of the central Cuban committee, appointed for the purpose of making peace.

We have given an account to our readers of the surrender of their arms by the Cuban forces in the jurisdiction of Sancti Spiritus, in consonance with what had been done previously by the division of the central department; the same will also be carried out on the 6th by scattered forces in the territories of Sagua, Santa Clara, Cienfuegos, and Colon, which, by order of their chief, Maestre, are to unite on that day at a point previously fixed upon near Paso Real. The information we have by correspondence from Santo Domingo just received, and which besides confirms other news of the same nature communicated to a person whom we consider well informed. In the said letter it is stated also that at the time the order was given to the subaltern chiefs, in command of squads, to commence the movement of concentration, they were also instructed to suspend hostilities, and that the news of peace becoming circulated in the ranks, there were many who manifested joy at the prospect of soon returning to their families and of rest from fatigues and privations. On the other hand, the commandant-general of those forces, a person of great influence among his subordinates, is animated by the same conciliatory spirit of which the capitulated chiefs have given proofs, so that with these antecedents it can be assured that the mission of the envoys sent by the central Cuban committee to confer with the commanders beyond the Trocha will meet the success that was to be expected.

As we informed our readers at the time, one of the chiefs who most merited this confidence is the renowned Marcos Garcia, who, according to a letter received a few days ago from Santa Clara, has manifested the greatest zeal and interest in behalf of peace, having omitted neither means nor effort in obtaining an interview with Maestre, and it is not to be doubted that he will follow the example of his other companions on the designated day, so near to hand. It is truly providential that the Cuban chiefs who have most distinguished themselves in the war happily terminated should be the ones who, with the greatest enthusiasm, have embraced the idea of peace, and the ones who have most efficiently contributed to the realization of a pacification of the island; for which important service they merit the general approbation of the country. To these adhesions we are able to add another important one which we copy from the Periguero de Holguin of the 28th February, as follows: "We know that Modesto Diaz has accepted the bases of the peace, and is now in Manzanillo, where he has embraced his countryman, the Brigadier Francisco Heredia, chief of the second brigade of the commandancy-general of Bayamo and Manzanillo."

No. 12.

Mr. Seward to Mr. Hall.

No. 448.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 12, 1878.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatches Nos. 666 and 667, both bearing date of the 2d instant, and to state that the substance of the two decrees of the Spanish authorities accompanying the latter dispatch, issued on the occasion of the termination of the Cuban insurrection, has been communicated to the press.

I am, sir, your obedient servant, F. W. SEWARD,
Assistant Secretary.

To HENRY C. HALL, Esq.,
Consul-General of the United States, Habana, Cuba.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not intend by anything that I may say unduly to prolong the debate upon the resolution that has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I recognize the importance of the action of that committee, and have no disposition to belittle the questions which have been raised. But, with due respect to the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], there are many of the matters treated of by him in his interesting speech for the last two days which, in my opinion, have no relevancy to that resolution and to the propriety of its passage by the Senate.

The President of the United States in his message sent to Congress at the opening of its present session brought the matter of Cuba and its condition and our relations to it and to those conditions prominently before the people of the country and before the Senate of the United States. We could not avoid taking notice of a matter thus brought to our attention, even if there had been less of public notoriety concerning all that affects the people of that interesting island, so closely connected with us geographically, commercially, and socially. The President in his message said:

Cuba is again gravely disturbed. An insurrection, in some respects more active than the last preceding revolt, which continued from 1868 to 1878, now exists in a large part of the eastern interior of the island, menacing even some populations on the coast. Besides deranging the commercial exchanges of the island, of which our country takes the predominant share, this flagrant condition of hostilities, by arousing sentimental sympathy and inciting adventurous support among our people, has entailed earnest effort on the part of this Government to enforce obedience to our neutrality laws and to prevent the territory of the United States from being abused as a vantage ground from which to aid those in arms against Spanish sovereignty.

And further on the President says:

Though neither the warmth of our people's sympathy with the Cuban insurgents, nor our loss and material damage consequent upon the futile endeavors thus far made to restore peace and order, nor any shock our humane sensibilities may have received from the cruelties which appear to especially characterize this sanguinary and fiercely conducted war, have in the least shaken the determination of the Government to honestly fulfill every international obligation, yet it is to be earnestly hoped, on every ground, that the devastation of armed conflict may speedily be stayed and order and quiet restored to the distracted island, bringing in their train the activity and thrift of peaceful pursuits.

Mr. President, that part of the message and that monition from the Chief Executive of the United States is only one and the last in a long train of similar statements made during this century, and especially during the last half of it, by Presidents of the United States to Congress, calling attention to the exceptional condition of the Island of Cuba, the importance of our relations to it, and the disturbed and unhappy state in which the people of that island existed under the rule of His Catholic Majesty the Sovereign of Spain.

The attitude of this Government has been one of long-continued constraint and forbearance toward the Government of Spain and toward the troublesome conditions that have grown out of the policies of that Government in the control of that unfortunate island. Every obligation imposed upon the United States by the law of nations has been scrupulously observed. Every aid that could be given by our strictly maintained attitude of noninterference has been given in order that peace and quiet and order and the reign of law might be restored to that wretched people. I do not regret that that has been the attitude of my country. But, nevertheless, while I commend it. while I take pride in the history of the United States in regard to the observance of neutral obligations, while I rejoice that this country has pursued a path, upon which it started at the beginning, of peace and of amity with all the world, yet, Mr. President, we are not to forget nor can we ignore that the relations of the people of this country, as well as the Government of this country, to the people of Cuba and to their Government are exceptional.

They are exceptional by reason of the proximity of that seagirt island to our own coast. They are exceptional by reason of our large and intimate commercial intercourse, and by reason of the numerous social ties that have sprung up in all these years between a people so situated and our own. We can not close our ears or our eyes, if we would, to what is going on with a neighbor so near as that, nor can we steel our hearts or stifle our sympathies when we hear the sad stories of the sufferings of that people which they have been undergoing for these many, many years under the control of the Government of Spain.

Mr. President, I understand that a government must go somewhat slower than the people would have them go sometimes. I understand that those who have the responsibilities of government must exercise a check upon the outbursts of sympathy or of passion or of interest that will ofttimes excite a whole people, and that the duty of preserving our relations with those countries with whom we are at peace and in relations of amity must at all times be observed. But in regard to this unfortunate island we must not forget that our history is a peculiar one; that our interests are peculiar and exceptional; and even in this high place or in the executive branch we can not ignore those peculiar conditions out of which a large part of this popular sympathy springs.

Indeed, Mr. President, we have but to look back very cursorily over our diplomatic history to find that that sympathy has not been confined in all these years to popular meetings or to the press of the country, but that it has found diplomatic expression, and executive expression, and expression in the Halls of Congress time and time again. We have preserved all the time our neutral obligations. We have not thought it inconsistent with those obligations that we should know what was going on in the domain of this our near neighbor, affecting so intimately the peace, good order, and interests of the citizens of our own country. We have but to recollect that in almost the last message, and I believe it was the last message, that President Grant sent to Congress in 1875 he called attention to the then condition of Cuba in the throes of the revolution that was then devastating that poor island, and he told the Congress of that day—

It is understood also that renewed efforts are being made to introduce reforms in the internal administration of the island.

Showing how nearly their affairs concern from necessity the people and the Government of the United States.

Persuaded, however, that a proper regard for the interests of the United States and of its citizens entitle it to relief from the strain to which it has been subjected by the difficulties of the questions and the wrongs and losses which arise from the contest in Cuba, and that the interests of humanity itself demand the cessation of the strife before the whole island shall be laid waste and larger sacrifices of life be made, I shall feel it my duty, should my hopes of a satisfactory adjustment and of the early restoration of peace and the removal of future causes of complaint be unhappily disappointed, to make a further communication to Congress at some period not far remote, and during the present session, recommending what may then seem to me to be necessary.

Thereby demonstrating what in his view was the peculiar and exceptional relation of this Government and this country to the Island of Cuba and to its condition under the Government of Spain.

Not only so, Mr. President, but we find by reviewing our diplomatic history that it has never been thought inconsistent with the character and genius of American institutions or of American citizenship to express sympathy for those who were struggling to maintain, preserve, or achieve the right of self-government which we so happily by a revolution had won for ourselves. Even the conservative, sedate, self-contained Washington did not find himself constrained from expressing sympathy for a struggling republic, for when addressing a note to the agent of revolutionary France he used this remarkable language:

Born, sir—

Said Washington while he was President—in a land of liberty; having early learned its value; having engaged in a perilous conflict to defend it; having, in a word, devoted the best years of my life to secure its permanent establishment in my own country, my anxious recollections, my sympathetic feelings, and my best wishes are irresistibly excited whensoever, in any country, I see an oppressed nation unfurl the banners of freedom.

That was Washington, Mr. President, and surely no citizen of the United States, where he has just cause to express his sympathy for struggling patriotism anywhere on the face of God's green earth, need refrain from giving expression to that feeling after such an example as that.

Now, there was a very notable episode in our diplomatic history growing out of the struggle of Hungary for freedom more than forty years ago. The then President of the United States, General Taylor, sent an agent by the name of Mann to Hungary with instructions that he should carefully consider the condition of the conflict then raging; that he should examine all the evidence that bore upon the probability of the success of the patriotic cause, and should, if he considered the time and occasion to be ripe, execute a treaty of amity and peace and commerce with the nation then expected to be born into the family of nations. That struggle unfortunately ended in the overthrow and suppression of the gallant attempt of those sons of Hungary to establish their independence.

But the Austrian Government took umbrage at some expressions that were used in the message of the President, or in the published correspondence of the State Department in regard to that struggle, and gravely remonstrated with the Government of the United States, finding fault in a tone that was taken exception to, and to which reply was made by Mr. Webster when he came in as Secretary of State under Mr. Fillmore. It is a long dispatch to Mr. Hülsemann, and known as the Hülsemann correspondence, Mr. Hülsemann being the minister accredited by the Austrian Emperor to the Government at Washington. Mr. Webster says, in speaking of that revolution:

> They possess—

That is, the Hungarians—

> They possess, in a distinct language, and in other respects, important elements of a separate nationality, which the Anglo-Saxon race in this country did not possess; and if the United States wish success to countries contending for popular constitutions and national independence, it is only because they regard such constitutions and such national independence not as imaginary but as real blessings. They claim no right, however, to take part in the struggles of foreign powers in order to promote these ends. It is only in defense of his own Government, and its principles and character, that the undersigned has now expressed himself on this subject. But when the United States behold the people of foreign countries without any such interference spontaneously moving toward the adoption of institutions like their own, it surely can not be expected of them to remain wholly indifferent spectators.

Mr. President, I read those passages from our diplomatic history for this purpose. The resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate does undertake to express sympathy with the struggling patriots in the Island of Cuba. Much more, the resolution submitted as a substitute, Mr. President, by yourself on yesterday [Mr. WHITE in the chair] and now printed and lying upon our desks, gives utterance in emphatic language to that sympathy. That feeling can not be repressed; it can not be and ought not to be stifled, and as I have shown you, sir, from so great an authority as Mr. Webster, when Secretary of State, there is nothing in the expression of such sympathy which is inconsistent with the neutral obligations which the United States undertakes to perform to the letter toward all the powers with whom she is at peace. You can not expect that this island—I was going to say little island, but island of magnificent proportions, right within stone's throw of our Southern borders—inhabited by a people with whom we are so closely connected, should not claim and receive from us the sympathy and interest and that active manifestation of interest to which its sufferings entitle it.

Mr. President, we might as well be ashamed to own our own mothers as to attempt to deny or conceal the origin of our own free institutions. They sprung from revolution; they were achieved by our fathers with arms in their hands, and from that day to this there never has been the suggestion that the flag of freedom had been unfurled anywhere that the hearts of the American people did not go out in sympathy and encouragement to the people struggling to uphold it. Therefore it is becoming in us, and entirely within all the proprieties which should govern a great nation like this, which, I admit, should in its foreign relations and in the conduct of its diplomatic intercourse be moderate, self-respecting, and self-restrained—that we should give expression, dignified and proper expression, to the sympathy of the American people for the struggling patriots who are now upholding the cause of self-government in that fair island on our southern borders.

No one has a right, no nation has a right, to call us to account for such expression. If we recognize the fact of belligerency, it is not a casus belli; it does not mean war. No question of the power of Congress to declare war is involved in the consideration of these resolutions. Spain within three months after the breaking out of our civil war acknowledged the belligerency of the Confederate States. We have never been at war with Spain in all our history, and we have always, as all our diplomatic intercourse shows, entertained toward her none but feelings of national amity and peace, and which I trust will continue.

Mr. MORGAN. And we recognized the belligerency and sovereignty of the South American States.

Mr. GRAY. As the Senator from Alabama says, not only did Spain recognize the belligerency of the Southern States without interfering with the peaceable relations between the two countries, but we recognized in 1822 the independency of all the colonies which were struggling to free themselves from Spanish rule and Spanish control; and yet never was it suggested, so far as I know, at least seriously suggested, in any quarter or on either side of the Atlantic, that that recognition was a casus belli or gave Spain any just cause to hold the United States Government to account therefor.

Mr. Everett, when he was Secretary of State for a little while after Mr. Webster's death, had occasion to refer, as every Secretary of State since in our history, it seems to me, has had occasion to refer, to the troubled condition, the unnatural condition, of that island, its unhappy people, and the burdens of misgovernment under which they were living. Mr. Everett in 1852, in discussing as Secretary of State with our minister to Spain our relations to Cuba, says, among other things:

> Spain, meantime, has retained of her extensive dominions in this hemisphere but the two islands of Cuba and Puerto Rico. A respectful sympathy with the fortunes of an ancient ally and a gallant people, with whom the United States have ever maintained the most friendly relations, would, if no other reason existed, make it our duty to leave her in the undisturbed possession of this little remnant of her mighty transatlantic empire. The President desires to do so; no word or deed of his will ever question her title or shake her possession. But can it be expected to last very long? Can it resist this mighty current in the fortunes of the world? Is it desirable that it should be so? Can it be for the interest of Spain to cling to a possession that can only be maintained by a garrison of twenty-five or thirty thousand troops, a powerful naval force, and an annual expenditure for both arms of the service of at least $12,000,000?

Mr. President, the question asked by Mr. Everett forty years ago is still asked to-day, How long can this unnatural condition last? How long are we to listen to the cries of outraged humanity that every southern breeze wafts across the straits that separate Cuba from Florida? Are we, as I said awhile ago, to close our ears to those cries? Are we to forget our own revolutionary lineage and trample upon our own history by closing our hearts and refusing our sympathies to a people who are resisting a Government far more oppressive than that which drove our fathers to arms?

Mr. President, it can not last forever. You may, as the great Latin poet said in another connection, throw nature out with a pitchfork, but she will reenter and reassert herself when opportunity is given for that self-assertion. You can not stifle human feeling, you can not repress human sympathy.

What, then, is the duty of Congress? What, then, is the duty of the Executive of this country? Bear in mind this history of ours in relation to these islands. With almost every President of the United States, at some time during his incumbency, referring to our peculiar relations to Cuba, and calling the attention of Congress to the necessity of considering the exceptional condition of things existing between us and that island, with a war recently waged for ten years, and then, with an interval of so-called peace, breaking out again, how can we refrain from giving expression to American feelings upon this subject in the Halls of this Congress?

The attitude and position of a country in the family of nations is not unlike that of a well-conducted and law-abiding citizen of a law-governed country. He may for a long time endure that his next-door neighbor should make his habitation miserable and uncomfortable by reason of his disorders and by reason of his lawlessness. For a long time will he continue to endure rather than give expression to that intolerance of wrong conditions, which it is natural he should feel, but such conditions can not go on forever, and if law itself does not apply the remedy, then that law-abiding citizen is entitled to suppress the nuisance which makes his own life unsafe, uncomfortable, and unendurable.

Mr. President, Spain governs this island, 3,000 miles away from her shores. It is a segregated portion of the earth's surface. It has all the geographical and physical features going to support a separate nationality or a separate State. Its territory is bounded by the ocean. It is there separated by this long waste of water from the parent and governing country. It is true that this fact does not of itself give our Government the right to interfere with the lawful title of Spain to her colony, yet it does contribute to increase the difficulty of the situation.

Spain ought to recognize the fact that she can only maintain her rule and possession by so governing that island that its people shall be at peace and reasonably contented with the government which she gives them. It can not be that she can forever maintain, by the rude hand of her soldiery, that control which ought to come from the willing consent of happy and contented subjects. It is an unnatural condition which can not last, and I believe will not last much longer. Unless the governing country of Spain finds it to her advantage, and finds it consistent with her sense of honorable obligation to a colony, to give it such government as shall produce those advantages to which every people on on the face of God's green earth are entitled of right, and that is to pursue their own happiness and their own well-being, governed by equal laws and by a just ruler, Cuba will seek and obtain these blessings free and independent of Spanish control.

I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, to invade any title or right which Spain has to Cuba; I do not propose to question the lawful authority of that Government over her colony; but as the neighbor of those people that she attempts to govern and fails to govern, I have a right to protest that she must either so govern them that peace and ordinary prosperity shall come to that people or that she shall cease to govern them at all. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. President, it will not be forgotten that at several times during the last half century it has been at least more than once proposed that the United States should open negotiations to buy the Island of Cuba from Spain, in order that we, by that sacrifice of money taken from the pockets of our people, might assist peacefully and with the consent of Spain in giving to that unhappy people what they so long have sought in vain, the right to establish a government for themselves and create a free and independent state. Nothing has come of that, and I only cite it now as one of the instances which go to show the peculiar relations which this Government bears to that island. to the constant strain upon the Government and people of the United States, which has been created by conditions which can not be ignored. Say that they were produced by misgovernment or by the character of the people themselves, if you choose. If Spain should assert that they are so turbulent, that they are so wrong-headed that they can not be governed except by force, nevertheless the condition exists and confronts us, and remains to be dealt with, and we can not drive it from our minds or our thoughts. Our pulses will quicken, all that we can do, as we hear of men shot to death because they held up the banner of their country when she was fighting for what we fought for and obtained. Our hearts will throb when we listen to the tales of wrong which are being perpetrated by the authority of a distant and governing people over a colony like this.

Mr. President, it is not becoming to utter a threat in this Chamber, or that Congress or the Executive should be made a party to any threat against Spain or any other country with whom we have relations of amity. But we do have the right to call her attention to a condition of things that concerns us almost as much as it does her, that here, right by our side, contiguous territory, separated by some convulsion of nature which caused that strait or sea to pass between us—that here, right by our side, are these people, who are constantly holding out their hands to us in supplication for an interference that we refuse, begging for succor that we deny, and requesting aid that we can not find it within our conception of duty to give. That produces a strain upon us that Spain must recognize. We are performing our duty toward her; we have sedulously in the past adhered to the letter of the law imposing upon us neutral duties and international obligations; but, sir, it is calling upon us to do too much that we should always, and to the crack of doom, continue to steel our hearts and turn away our faces from those for whom we have undeniable sympathy.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator know of another instance in the world where there is so large a colony, or a dependency so populous and so wealthy, that is governed from the home government without any participation of the people of the colony?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not know that I know of any such country. I certainly know of no land in the world that is so entitled to be called a land of sorrow as that Island of Cuba. It seems to me as if Providence by some strange dispensation had pointed it out as the object of His wrath; it does seem sometimes as if that little island had been selected as an example of what misgovernment could do for a people.

We are entitled to criticise that Government. We are proposing no governmental interference on our part; we are not proposing to break the spirit or the letter of our international obligations; we have the right now, and it has been exercised in the past by Executives and by Congresses, to say what we think about this abnormal condition of things, which has lasted so long and seems likely to continue so much longer.

Mr. President, this resolution does not accord belligerency. If it did, and we were competent to accord it here in Congress, I should vote for it; but it seeks, as I conceive it, to not——

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator repeat that last sentence?

Mr. GRAY. If it did, and we were competent to accord it, I should vote for it.

But it seems to me that the committee has carefully guarded its action and the action it proposes the Senate to take by keeping within our constitutional power, by not trespassing upon the power of another department, carefully observing what seems to me to be the proper scope of Congressional activity in this regard.

I do not believe there is a better opportunity than this for us to define and scrupulously differentiate the sphere of authority between the Executive and Congress. Although it is a question not entirely free from difficulty, I can not find anywhere, after somewhat careful consideration, authority for Congress to declare belligerency in any case whatever. The power to declare war, from which I suppose it would be derived, is a Congressional power; but that power can only be exerted in the form of legislation. Some order, resolution, or other proper expression of Congressional will must be passed by both Houses and submitted to the President, as every such order, bill, or resolution must be submitted, so as to have any effect at all.

I make that statement the more guardedly in the presence of my distinguished and honorable friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who has taken a different view; and a difference of opinion with him upon a subject like that has made me more careful in expressing my own view in regard to it. I do not believe that there is any such distinction anywhere as the honorable Senator argues between the power to declare war and the other powers granted by the Constitution to the Congress of the United States. He has argued that the power to declare war is one which may be exercised by the two Houses of Congress without the consent of and independently of the President of the United States. I can not find any warrant for that interpretation of the war powers of the Constitution. It is found in section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, where the powers of Congress are enumerated.

All the powers Congress possesses, I believe, are enumerated in that section. It has no other powers than those so enumerated. But we find the power to declare war and grant letters of marque and reprisal right along with and in the same connection, the same sentence, separated only by a semicolon, with the power to lay and collect taxes, to define and punish piracies, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, etc. None of those powers can be exercised except in the mode which is pointed out by the Constitution itself. You can not support armies without passing an appropriation bill or a bill providing for the enlistment of men and the appropriate division of them into companies, regiments, etc., without the sanction of the President. The bill which is passed to support an army must go to the President; the bill which is passed to lay taxes and to defray the expenses of the military establishment must go to the President. The power to declare war can only be exercised in the same way. If anything more were needed, there is a positive provision of the Constitution in the same article in section 7, preceding the enumeration of the powers of Congress, which reads in this way:

> Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment)—
>
> Thereby making it exhaustive—
>
> shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or being disapproved, etc.

Mr. President, the inconvenience of it being required that the President should approve a declaration of war is no greater than that he should approve a bill to raise and support an army. The Senator from Alabama has discovered, he thinks, a great inconvenience, which overwhelms his judgment, in the suppositious difference between the President and Congress on a question of declaring war. If he disapprove, he can veto it, and then, like every other order, resolution, or bill, Congress would have to pass it by a two-thirds vote in order that it should become operative. So it would be with a bill to lay and collect taxes; so it would be with a bill to raise and support armies. I think that is a question, though, which is aside from this matter, and it is only because the Senator from Alabama has given his distinguished authority to such an interpretation of the Constitution that I thought it proper for me to allude to it.

The power to declare belligerency is nowhere spoken of in any part of the Constitution or in any statute that I know of, nor am I aware that it has ever been attempted by Congress to accord belligerency to any people who were under arms against their government. Therefore, I am constrained to believe that the Executive of the United States, to whom has been committed so largely our foreign relations, has the sole power to initiate any action binding upon the Government of the United States, declaring or according the status of belligerency to a people who are struggling against their own government. I can not find anything directly upon the subject; but I think it is worth while to call the attention of the Senate to an expression of Mr. Clay in a report made by him from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations in the Twenty-fourth Congress, in 1836, in regard to Texas. He says in the course of that report:

> The Senate alone, without the cooperation of some other branch of the Government, is not competent to recognize the existence of any power.
>
> The President of the United States by the Constitution has the charge of their foreign intercourse. Regularly he ought to take the initiative in the acknowledgment of the independence of any new power, but in this case he has not yet done it, for reasons which he, without doubt, deems sufficient. If in any instance the President should be tardy, he may be quickened in the exercise of his power by the expression of the opinion or by other acts of one or both branches of Congress, as was done in relation to the Republics formed out of Spanish America.

In the recognition of independency in an instance so conspicuous as that of the Republics of South America, which were said to be recognized in 1822, I find that the resolutions introduced and passed in the House of Representatives in regard to their independency were in these words:

> Resolved, That the House of Representatives concur in the opinion expressed by the President in his message of the 8th of March, 1822, that the American provinces of Spain which have declared their independence and are in the enjoyment of it ought to be recognized by the United States as independent nations.
>
> Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill appropriating a sum, not exceeding $100,000, to enable the President of the United States to give due effect to such recognition.

That is the recognition which the resolutions, I take it, assumed that he had made. So that so far as the precedents go, and I do not pretend to have made an exhaustive search for them, they seem to support the view which I took as an original question, of the distribution of powers under the Constitution, that it is by the Executive, with whom our foreign affairs are placed, that the initiative must be taken in any proceeding to recognize the independency of a country struggling for existence, or to accord to it the status of belligerency.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me, I will state that I do not disagree at all with the proposition that the President of the United States, as a diplomatic representative of this country, has the right to recognize the independence of a foreign country. But that is a very different matter from recognizing an existing state of belligerency, which imposes upon our own people the duty of neutrality. In the recognition of belligerency we change the attitude of our people as to the belligerent powers from a condition of communication or association in time of peace to that of communication regulated by the laws of nations in time of war.

I dispute the power of the President of the United States, of his own motion and without the assistance of Congress, to recognize belligerency between two foreign Governments, because the President of the United States has no right by his proclamation to change the commercial and other relations between the people of this country and the people of a foreign country. But being the representative of the United States in virtue of its sovereignty as affects foreign countries, he has the right to recognize the independence of a foreign country, because that recognition has no effect upon our own people. It does not change our relation to that country in the slightest degree. It does not compel us to pursue commerce under laws which regulate war instead of laws which regulate peace.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] permit me to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] a question, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me? Do I understand the Senator from Alabama to deny the power of the President, without the concurrence of Congress, to recognize the belligerency or to issue an effective proclamation of belligerency as to the contending parties?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. GRAY. It would seem certainly at first blush that the act of recognition of independency of a nation that had freed itself or endeavored to free itself from the parent country is one of much more importance and more far-reaching in its effect than any mere declaration of belligerency could be. To welcome a new member to the family of nations, to take her by the hand and say, "You are entitled to a seat at the council board of independent powers," is an act, it seems to me, that affects very seriously the relations of the citizens of the United States to that power. It in fact creates new relations; it brings into being a new power, so far as our own citizens are concerned, with whom we have to have relations, whereas theretofore there was only one power to deal with.

But, Mr. President, it seems to me that only a short time ago we settled by a sort of acquiescence, so far as the Senate is concerned, perhaps so far as concerns both Houses of Congress, the question of the right of the Executive to recognize the independency of a new government. When the new Republican Government, so called, of Hawaii, sent its diplomatic messengers to the United States they were received and recognized by the President of the United States upon a recognition that has stood, so far as her relations to this Government and this people are concerned, ever since. It has never been questioned and it has never been, as I can recollect, asserted anywhere that that recognition by President Harrison of the diplomatic agents of the new Government of Hawaii was not binding, so far as it went, upon the Government and upon the people of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me, I again distinctly admit and assert that the President of the United States has the exclusive right to recognize the independence of a foreign country, because that affects our people not at all, but in the case of Hawaii, to which the Senator referred, we already had representatives to that Government and had recognized the independence of that Government many years ago. That recognition was a mere change in regard to the personnel of the Government and the form of it, as in the case of the recognition of Spain as a republic and of France as a republic, which recognitions were communicated by cablegram directly from the President without the interference of Congress at all, and the recognition of Brazil, where we concurred with the President of the United States in the recognition of the independence of that power. The cases are not analogous at all.

Mr. GRAY. It seems to me that the reasoning is entirely analogous. There is nowhere in the Constitution any provision which in so many words gives the power to the President of the United States to recognize the independency of a people who are struggling for freedom. As a result, if it has that power at all——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. One moment. It results, if it has that power at all, from the committal into his hands, according to the whole scheme of that instrument, of the foreign affairs of the country.

Mr. MORGAN. And the special power given to him in the Constitution to receive ambassadors from foreign countries.

Mr. GRAY. Undoubtedly there is the special power to receive ambassadors. I said there is no express power, in so many words, to recognize the independency of a country, but under the power to receive ministers under the general committal of the foreign affairs of this country into his hands he has, exclusive of Congress, the power to recognize the independency of a nation.

So, Mr. President, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States in regard to the status of belligerency or the recognition of that status. It is as a doctrine an outgrowth of a general international law of the world, and being that outgrowth, and being a condition which modifies the relation of one country to another, it belongs in this country, under our Constitution, where all matters of a similar and an analogous nature do belong, and that is to the Executive. That, in short, is the argument which convinces me that we have no right to accord the status of belligerency, even if this were a joint resolution.

But at the best the contention of the Senator from Alabama would compel us to recognize these people by a bill, not by concurrent resolution, unless he applies the same reasoning to this that he does to the power to declare war, and says that the two Houses of Congress can declare war and affect the rights and obligations of their respective citizens without the formality to which every other act of Congress, order, or resolution of these bodies is bound to conform.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon. The Senator from Delaware will indulge me for another interruption. I did not in my remarks awhile ago state fully what I think to be the origin of the power on the part of the Congress of the United States to recognize a state of belligerency between two foreign powers. It is a part, as I understand, of the power to declare war. The power to declare war applies to this country and to all other countries, and if that power can be exerted alone by Congress, as I contend it can be and must be, then it includes of course the power to declare that public war exists in another country.

Mr. GRAY. I do not wish to prolong the discussion at this late hour, but so long as the honorable Senator from Alabama has placed his contention for the power to recognize belligerency upon the same ground that he has placed his contention for the power of Congress without the assent of the President to declare war, it seems to me the argument in which I submit that I disposed of the first proposition will dispose of this one.

Clearly if it results from the power to declare war, from what I have already said, that power must be exercised by the Congress in such form that it shall receive the assent of the President of the United States, and must take the only form which an act of Congress, whether a resolution, order, or bill, can take in order to be effective or mean anything, and that is the expression of the will of Congress.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Delaware contend that the Congress of the United States could not by amendment make this a joint resolution declaring belligerent rights, which joint resolution should be signed by the President, and that that would not recognize belligerency?

Mr. GRAY. I have just said that at the best the only thing that could be contended for under the position taken by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is that Congress should exercise its power in the mode pointed out by the Senator from Maine. But I am not prepared to assent to his proposition—that the proper way in which belligerency should be declared by this Government is other than it should be declared by the Executive of the United States. Committed to his hands under the Constitution is the power not only to recognize the independency of a nation struggling for independence, but also the power to modify the relations of the Government of the United States and its citizens to another people who are at war by recognizing a state of belligerency in a people who are contending against a parent Government. That is my view, the view to which I am impelled by my reading and reflection in regard to the powers of Congress in a matter of this kind.

If we can declare belligerency by a joint resolution I look in vain in the Constitution for the express warrant, and I have not been able to find or to have pointed out to me where the implied warrant for such power exists. If it is under the power to declare war, as insisted here, or is contained within the power to declare war, then perhaps there might be something to be said for the proposition of the Senator from Maine.

But, Mr. President, what the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations intends to do is not to accord belligerency to the insurgents in Cuba. It is to express the opinion of the two Houses of Congress by a concurrent resolution as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

The concurrent resolution as it came from the committee was not altogether satisfactory to me at the time, although I assented to its being reported. I like better the resolution that was offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] as a substitute for the concurrent resolution reported from the committee, which, if the Senate will bear with me for a moment, I will read. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We trust that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been committed, will, at as early a date as the facts will warrant, recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent government of her own choice.

This resolution not only is one to quicken the Executive and to give him the support of the opinion of Congress, but it seems to me it expresses in sufficiently restrained and proper language the feeling of the American people. It expresses it in a way which Spain, though she may not assent to it, though she may not take any pleasure in it, has no right to take umbrage at. She has no right to call the Government of the United States or the people of the United States to account for the expression. Resting there, with the President stimulated to make the inquiry which will be the basis of his action, we may wait until events have so shaped themselves that either order is restored by the might and power of the arms of Spain, her control thoroughly reestablished throughout the length and breadth of the island, or until perchance the God of Battles has given to the insurgents such success and such victory as will insure to them a place among the family of the nations of the world.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we have gone as far in this resolution as our power warrants us in going. It seems to me that we have gone in the direction in which our sympathies and our feelings and our judgments would properly lead us. The President of the United States has means and opportunities to investigate that this Congress and the Senate have not. We can not know except at secondhand what the condition of things is in the Island of Cuba. He can send his agents there. He has means, through the consuls and the ministers of the United States abroad, to find out, as we can not except by inquiry from him, what is the probability of the issue of the contest there.

If we ask him to lay before us the correspondence that he may have to throw light upon the unhappy condition of things, he can withhold a portion of it, if in his opinion the interests of the United States require it. We always ask him "if not incompatible with the public interests" to give us such information. So the Executive is armed by the Constitution with the means of knowing what we can not know except in a very inperfect way and at secondhand. He can send his agent, as General Taylor sent Mr. Mann to Hungary, or as President Monroe, I think it was, sent Mr. Rodney and the other representatives to South America, in order that they might report to him what the condition of those struggling colonies was and what the prospects of a termination of the war in their several countries might be.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that with the passage of such a resolution as I have just read we will have discharged our duty so far as we can now see it, and the President of the United States will have the support of the two Houses of Congress, or at least of the Senate of the United States, in any inquiry he may make, and be stimulated to the performance of that duty, if indeed he needs any stimulus, which the Constitution of the country has devolved upon him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to take the floor for to-morrow. I suppose the Senate does not care to stay here this evening.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate at this time except for a moment in order to put into the RECORD a translation of an interview which General Weyler had before he left Spain. On his departure from Cadiz, General Weyler had a conversation with the civic authorities who came to bid him farewell, which appears in El Liberal, of Madrid, of the 29th of January. It is as follows:

"We come to bid you a last good-bye," said the officials. "The last * * * in the present campaign," answered the General. Everybody expressed hopes of a speedy termination of the campaign.

WEYLER'S WORDS.

"It will not be easy," said the General. "to realize what you and all the Spaniards desire. I would be content to finish the war in two years. In the last war, which was of less importance, ten years were necessary. I go now in the worst conditions. After the reenforcements which will be sent in February it will be impossible to send more troops until next winter, unless the reserves are called out. A great deal of money is also needed and the country is already making the last sacrifices. The question requires special study, so that public interests will not be further injured. I am encouraged by the reaction in public opinion and by the attitude of the Cuban families who leave for Tampa at the mere announcement of my going to Cuba. I suppose they must have some motive for leaving. I desire to be in Cuba, because what is upon my shoulders weighs upon me as it would weigh on a religious fanatic. I will not rest until I have satisfactorily accomplished my work, and I do not fear the future. I remember the prophecies made me before I went to Catalonia. Then they told me the anarchists would finish with me. The contrary has happened, for I even gained the love of everybody. This is proven by the farewell they gave me in Barcelona, which moved me as I have never been before. On arriving in Cuba I propose to exterminate the filibusters: first in the provinces of Habana, Pinar del Rio, Matanzas, and Las Villas. Of course it is to be understood that I refer to the large groups that invade them. Afterwards the small parties of bandits will remain, which I will slowly exterminate. At all events, great activity is needed in the present circumstances."

What I wish to call attention to in this interview is that after General Weyler reached Cuba it was given out that he was going to end the war before the rainy season, which begins in May, and yet in his last words before leaving Spain he says that it will take at least two years. So, on the statement of the general in command, we are to have two years more of bloodshed and useless slaughter and destruction in Cuba.

Mr. SHERMAN. And extermination.

Mr. LODGE. The language is that he proposes to exterminate them; and he rejoices in the fact that the mere news of his coming is driving Cuban families to fly to the United States. It is a commentary, Mr. President, on the processes which he means to employ and on the desperate condition of the Spanish cause.

Mr. GRAY. What is the authenticity of that paper?

Mr. LODGE. I took it from a Spanish paper, El Liberal. It was published in El Liberal, of Madrid. I have the Spanish paper at my room from which it has been translated. These are his own words, a statement which he made to the civic authorities of Cadiz on board ship just as he was leaving. It is reported verbatim in El Liberal, and this is a translation from it. It is, I think, important, as showing how long the struggle is likely to continue.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is not for us to consider what the views of Spain are in regard to this matter. It is for us to consider what the duties of the United States are, the duties that they owe to themselves, to humanity, and to freedom. I think their first duty is to bring the war in Cuba to an end.

I do not care, personally, to enter into the constitutional discussion which has arisen as to the various powers of the different Departments of the Government or as to the question of a concurrent or a joint resolution. It appears to me that if we are to put a stop to this war, as I believe the people of the United States with hardly an exception desire and demand, our course is simply to pass a joint resolution giving the opinion of Congress as to the recognition of belligerency. The actual recognition by proclamation must come from the President; everybody understands that; but the opinion of Congress embodied in a joint resolution which goes to him for his signature or his veto is such as the seriousness of this question demands. To that I would add the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] in favor of our Government taking immediate steps to mediate between Spain and her revolutionists with a view to securing the independence of the island or such reforms as will content the people, if there are any that they would accept after the way previous promises have been broken.

That, Mr. President, is doing something effective. I am very happy to vote for resolutions of sympathy; kind words are all very well, but this bloodshed and slaughter and this useless war has been going on now for a year. It is clear that that island is lost to Spain, and, as I said the other day, it seems to me the duty of the United States, looking at its duty to humanity and the responsibility that it owes to that island and to its own people, is to do something that shall amount to something and take a step that will lead to stopping the war. I think the course which I have suggested is a practical measure, something better than mere words, something that is needed and that will receive the cordial approval of the people of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, as I do not intend to make a speech on this subject, I simply want to say now that I fully concur in the sentiments uttered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I do not believe we are discharging our duty to humanity and to liberty if we stand by and allow the bloody murder which has become chronic in Cuba to be longer continued. I do not believe that in any proper sense Spain has any title to the island. She has lost it by her inability to maintain law and order and good government. If there ever was a case where a great Government was called upon to interfere in behalf of humanity it is this case. A slaughter-house for half a century at our doors, made so by a country wholly incapable of governing Cuba, is something that we ought not to tolerate. The responsibility arising from our situation and for the maintenance of institutions that we love and maintain for ourselves, the propagation of those institutions, the propagation of freedom throughout the world, call upon the United States in language that can not be mistaken to abate this national nuisance, this violation of law and order, this violation of humanity, this violation of every principle of just government.

I say situated as we are we are called upon to take some effective action. I do not propose to discuss the mode now, but such action should be taken as will put a stop to the terrible sacrifice of life, the terrible mockery of government which is at our borders. We have the power to stop it, and we should do it and do it at once. If we mean to be respected by other nations we will take notice of this matter in a manner that will secure to the people of Cuba local self-government, government that shall give them peace and secure for them prosperity. We can not stand by longer and permit the existing condition to continue without receiving and deserving the reproach of all mankind.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate more than a moment. I hold in my hand a list of the forces, by regiments and brigades, which have been sent by Spain to Cuba since the commencement of the present war. I desire to have it placed in the RECORD for the information of Senators who may wish to have knowledge on the subject. They amount to 190,472 men. During the existence of the war and within the last two months Gomez and Maceo have traversed the entire extent of the island, even up to the very gates of Habana, and Martinez Campos, the celebrated general of Spain, has retired, acknowledging the impossibility of accomplishing the subjugation of those people.

THE SPANISH ARMY IN CUBA.

According to the report of the secretary of war at Madrid, the reenforcements of soldiers sent to Cuba from the beginning of the insurrection till the retirement of Campos were as follows:

Sailed from March 8 to 12, 7 battalions		8,302
From 1st to 19th of April—
1 battalion marine infantry	900
6 battalions regulars	6,352
		7,252
From April 24 to May 8—
2 provincial battalions	2,075
1 battalion marine infantry	900
1 battalion regulars	856
		3,831
From May 20 to June 10—
10 cavalry squadrons	1,600
1 battalion marines	900
Sundries	208
		2,708
From June 18 to July 21—
10 infantry battalions	8,652
Sundries	437
		9,089
From July 31 to September 30—
20 infantry battalions	19,311
8 cavalry squadrons	1,280
1 fix artillery battalion	767
2 field artillery battalions	381
1 engineer corps battalion	971
Sundries	2,083
		24,793
From October 5 to November 30—
21 infantry battalions	18,871
1 battalion marines	835
Sundries	3,873
		23,579
To this must be added—
2 infantry battalions organized in Cuba	2,000
Sent from Puerto Rico	1,400
2 battalions organized in Cuba	1,800
Guerrillas organized in Cuba	5,325
3 cavalry squadrons organized in Cuba	393
		10,918
On the way from Spain		8,000
In service in the island on February, 24, 1894		12,000
Total of regular Spanish troops		110,472
Total of volunteer forces in the island, doing mainly garrison duty		80,000
Grand total		190,472

The above forces were commanded by the following superior officers:

Captain-general and commander-in-chief: Martinez Campos.

Lieutenant-generals: Marin, Pando, and Valera.

Generals of division: Arderius, Suarez Valdez, Lachambre, Jimenez Castellanos, Jimenez Moreno, Gonzalez Muñoz, Pin, Mella, Navarro, and Fernandez Lozada.

Generals of brigade: Barraqué, Garcia Navarro, Bazán, Loño, Echague, Luque, Canella, Linares, Oliver, Alonso Gasco, Aidave, Garrich, Godon, Obregon, Norfuma, Del Rey, Toral, Ordoñez, Suero, Serrano, Altamira, Aldecoa, Mena, Inaz, Aizpúmay Cornell.

Total: One commander-in-chief, 3 lieutenant-generals, 10 division generals, and 25 brigadier-generals—39 generals.

The information contained in this pamphlet, published by the Cuban Junta and certified by the correspondent of the New York World, is to the effect that children and women in the most delicate condition, prisoners by the hundred, are daily being slaughtered and murdered in that island, and that the proclamation of Valmaceda, which we know to be authentic, has been revived for the extermination of the people of that island.

SPANISH BRUTALITY.

Two days after the engagement of General Linares and the Cuban Rabi, in Descanso del Muerto, an officer of the column of General Linares took as prisoners four peaceful citizens whom he met near the sugar estate of Hatillo, and then notified the general of their arrest. The general, angered by the defeat he had received in his encounter with Rabi, ordered the men to be shot immediately. Three of them were shot. The other, who is the uncle of a well-known lawyer in the city of Santiago, escaped because he screamed so loud that he attracted the attention of Lieutenant-Colonel Tejeda, who was acquainted with him, and assured the general that the prisoner was a peaceful man.

An 11-year-old boy whom the Spaniards captured on November 19, having been wounded on the road leading to Cartagena, shortly after the engagement with Aniceto Hernandez's band (according to La Discusion of the 14th of that month), was tried at Mantanzas by court-martial on the 12th and sentenced to life imprisonment and perpetual chains.

Gil Gonzales, a rebel leader, who was captured by the Spaniards, was shot on December 4, in Matanzas, having been condemned by court-martial.

Yet, Mr. President, we sit here and talk about resolutions of sympathy and about appealing to Spain, when Spain has declared that under no circumstances will she ever permit the United States to have any influence in her domestic affairs.

Mr. President, I am tired of hearing of resolutions of sympathy. Let us act like men. If it be true that there is no longer a Senate and a Congress of the United States, but that this is an imperial Government with a Chief Magistrate possessing absolute power, I am in favor of this Congress establishing a different construction of the Constitution and reestablishing a Government of the people and of the representatives of the people.

So I shall offer a resolution for the recognition of the independence of the Island of Cuba. I want none of this idle, cowardly state policy, which means nothing and accomplishes nothing, while murder and outrage of every kind are being perpetrated within our very hearing. I desire Senators to understand that I at least shall ask that something practical and positive and becoming the character and power of this people shall be done. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 26, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 25, 1896.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander George A. Bicknell, to be a commander in the Navy, from the 5th of January, 1896, vice Commander Louis Kingsley, deceased.

Lieut. Nathan E. Niles, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 5th of January, 1896 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. Commander George A. Bicknell, promoted.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) John A. Dougherty, to be a lieutenant in the Navy, from the 5th of January, 1896, vice Lieut. Nathan E. Niles, promoted.

Ensign Theodore C. Fenton, to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, from the 5th of January, 1896 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. (Junior Grade) John A. Dougherty, promoted.

P. A. Engineer Stacy Potts, to be a chief engineer in the Navy, from the 29th of January, 1896, vice Chief Engineer Henry Herwig, retired.

Asst. Engineer Charles H. Hayes, to be a passed assistant engineer in the Navy, from the 29th of January, 1896, vice P. A. Engineer Stacy Potts, promoted.

P. A. Engineer Henry T. Cleaver, to be a chief engineer in the Navy, from the 20th of February, 1896 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Chief Engineer Robert R. Leitch, retired.

Asst. Engineer Horace W. Jones, to be a passed assistant engineer in the Navy, from the 20th of February, 1896, vice P. A. Engineer Henry T. Cleaver, promoted.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6249.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the section pertaining to the so-called Ogden land claim, being lines 1 to 11 inclusive, on page 45, be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 1 to 11 inclusive, on page 45.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear it read.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the so-called Ogden Land Company's claim.

Mr. PITNEY. This is the section on which I reserved the point of order, the proposed appropriation for the extinguishment of the right and title of the Ogden Land Company.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not care for the reading, as I know what it is.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say one word about it. I am perfectly content that it should go out; but I want to say this, that if it ever comes back into the bill it would be required to consider it in Committee of the Whole, whatever its merits or want of merit may be, for two or three hours; and I hope if it comes back in the bill that an opportunity will be given for the consideration and hearing, because there is much to be said on each side of the case.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of this bill that should an amendment covering the clause to be stricken out be put upon the bill in the Senate there should be no agreement to such amendment until the House shall have had an opportunity to consider it independently of other amendments. We do not wish the amendment to come back to the House in the form of an agreed report.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, before any action is taken upon this request of the gentleman from New York, in view of what has been said about the supposed action of the Senate, I would like to hear from the chairman of the committee, because if this is to be simply stricken out this morning to be put back by the Senate, with the consent of the committee, I think we had better have an expression of this committee on the matter now.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We had better fight it out now.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir; but if it is stricken out in good faith, and the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the committee of conference that will be appointed proposes to carry out the action of this committee on the amendment, why then I am entirely content, but otherwise I would object to his request.

Mr. CANNON. Just a word. I understand that the gentleman moves to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. He asks unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. Or asks consent that it go out. Now, then, parliamentarily, if the Senate should put a similar amendment on this bill, and it should come back, I suppose that the point of order that it should first be considered in the Committee of the Whole could be made against it, and it would have to be considered in Committee of the Whole. That is not always fully satisfactory, because sometimes these things happen in the closing days of the session when the House is cramped for time, but that probably will not be the case in this instance.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois this further difficulty, that the conference report comes as an entirety; and while by agreement we can often do this, there is more difficulty in getting at the consideration of any particular item when it has assumed conference form than any other.

Mr. CANNON. I will say in reply it can not assume conference form until it comes in the shape of a Senate amendment, and comes back to the House, and when it comes back to the House it will be subject to the point of order that it should first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would like to know from my colleague now what makes him think that the Senate is going to put an amendment on?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know.

Mr. HOPKINS. For forty years we have had these Indian appropriation bills, and they never put it on.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the section on which I made the point of order last night. Before giving consent to its being now struck out I should like to have an understanding with the gentleman in charge of the bill, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], to this effect, that the matter shall not be taken up for consideration if the bill comes back from the Senate with an amendment of this character upon it without notice to the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why should the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations have notice, rather than other members of the House?

Mr. PITNEY. For the reason that the gentleman has given the subject careful consideration.

Mr. HOPKINS. So have forty other gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will request gentlemen to take their seats. Business can not proceed until order is obtained.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will request the stipulation in a different form if more agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. My reason for asking for the stipulation is this: My attention was directed to this item and I have made some investigation of it, and when that provision of the bill was reached in Committee of the Whole yesterday, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] being in the chair, the gentleman who is in charge of the bill [Mr. SHERMAN] asked unanimous consent that the matter be laid over until a later hour. I, before giving consent, requested the privilege of reserving the point of order upon that provision. That privilege was granted to me. The matter then went over, and it is now taken up for the first time. I desire to have it in such shape that it can not be passed through this House without fair notice to those who desire to oppose this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition before the committee is the request of the gentleman from New York that this matter go out of the bill by unanimous consent. Is there objection to that request? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, in that connection, before the matter is finally passed upon, I am informed that the gentleman from New York, Judge DANIELS, has a report which was made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on this subject and which has also received the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee, but I ask unanimous consent that that report be printed in the RECORD, so that we can have the benefit of it in connection with this subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall object to that. The report will be printed as a House document.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman is willing for this subject to be considered on its merits I do not see what foundation there is for his objection; but of course I have to yield to his desire in that regard.

Mr. SHERMAN. The report will be printed as a House document.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But if it is in the RECORD it will be accessible at all times.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter has gone out of the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK and Mr. DINGLEY addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman gives way for a few moments that I may call up a bill which is unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and which ought to be passed immediately—a bill relating to the fur-seal fisheries.

Mr. BABCOCK. One moment, Mr. Speaker. By unanimous consent of the House yesterday it was agreed that the District of Columbia business should have the right of way after the passage of the Indian appropriation bill——

The SPEAKER. It is for the gentleman from Wisconsin to say.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to call up that business for consideration to-day, but I am willing to yield temporarily to the gentleman from Maine in order that he may ask consideration for the bill indicated by him, provided the District Committee does not lose its right to the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman yields, with the understanding that after the consideration of the bill which I desire to call up business from the Committee on the District of Columbia shall be in order. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R.

3206) relating to fur-seal fisheries. The bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

FUR-SEAL FISHERIES.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to conclude negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, Russia, and Japan, or any of them, for the appointment of a joint commission, to consist of not more than three members from each nation, to investigate the present condition, habits, and feeding grounds, both on land and sea, of the fur-seal herd in the North Pacific Ocean and in Bering Sea, from the American to the Asiatic shores, and the methods of slaughtering the same, and to consider and report what further regulations, if any, on land and sea are necessary for its preservation.

If such commission shall deem it necessary to visit the shores on the American and Asiatic side of the North Pacific Ocean, Bering Sea, Pribilof Islands, Commander Islands, Kurile Islands, and Robben Island, or any other places on or near the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, the President may detail a ship of the United States to convey any or all of said commissioners, with the ships of either of said other nations.

The members of said commission for the United States shall be appointed by the President. In addition to their necessary expenses, they shall each receive compensation at the rate of not more than $5,000 per annum; a secretary and a stenographer may also be appointed for said members of the United States, at such compensation, in addition to their necessary expenses as may be determined to be reasonable by the President. In addition thereto the United States shall bear its proportion of such general expenses of the commission as the respective Governments may agree upon as necessary. The said commissioners for the United States, and other employees as aforesaid, shall serve until the completion of their report, hereinafter referred to. They may be removed by the President at any time, and he may appoint their successors whenever any vacancy shall occur by death, inability to act, resignation, or other cause. They shall report to the President the results of their investigation.

SEC. 2. That pending the investigation and report of said commission the President of the United States is hereby authorized to conclude and proclaim a modus vivendi with said Governments, or any of them, providing for new regulations or suspending or altering the existing regulations established by the Paris Tribunal, or limiting the catch on the Pribilof, Commander, Kurile, and Robben islands, or any of them, in any manner that may be deemed expedient for the preservation of the fur-seal herd. Said modus vivendi, and the terms of said commissioners, shall expire by limitation, unless previously terminated, on the 1st day of January, 1898.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act approved April 6, 1894, providing punishment by fine, imprisonment, and forfeiture of vessels for violation of the articles of award of the Tribunal of Arbitration, are hereby made applicable to all violations of the modus vivendi herein provided for; and it shall be the duty of the President to make known by proclamation the provisions of said modus vivendi.

SEC. 4. That all needful expenses incident to the appointment, investigation, and report of the said commission, as herein provided for, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, which amount is hereby appropriated.

SEC. 5. That if the modus vivendi authorized by section 2 of this act be not concluded, and regulations under the same, effectual in the judgment of the President for preserving the Alaskan seal herd, be not put into operation for this year's sealing season, then the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to take and kill each and every fur seal, male and female, as it may be found on the Pribilof Islands; the skins of said seals to be sold by him to the best advantage with regard to time and place of sale as he may elect, and the proceeds thereof covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That all needful expenses incident to the thorough performance of this work of killing seals, preserving and transportation of skins, erection of necessary buildings, employment of labor, care of the Sea Island and Pribilof natives, incurred by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be paid by him out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, which amount is hereby appropriated: Provided also, That nothing in the Revised Statutes, sections numbered 1960 and 1961, contained shall prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from exercising the authority herein conferred upon him to take and kill said seals, but otherwise said sections shall remain in full force and operation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask that this bill be considered in the House instead of in Committee of the Whole, because in the last House it was passed unanimously and is well understood by a large proportion of the members of this House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to read the brief report of the committee, which explains the necessity for immediate action. Before the report is read I may say that the necessity arises from the fact that next week the pelagic sealers will begin to sail from the port of Victoria, and it is quite important that some notice be given immediately by action of Congress in this direction.

The report (by Mr. DINGLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, and for other purposes," have considered the same, and beg leave to report:

In order to prevent the extermination of fur seals, which will soon take place unless prompt measures can be taken to prevent pelagic sealing, this bill authorizes the President to invite Great Britain, Russia, and Japan, or any of them, to unite with the United States in the appointment of a joint commission to investigate the present condition and habits of the fur-seal herd in the North Pacific Ocean and in Bering Sea, and the method of slaughtering the same, with the result of such slaughter, and report what further regulations, if any, are necessary for its preservation, with a view to their adoption and enforcement by the countries uniting in creating such commission.

Pending this investigation the President is authorized to conclude a modus vivendi with said Governments, or any of them, providing for such new or additional regulations as may be deemed expedient for the preservation of the fur-seal herd, said modus vivendi to terminate January 1, 1898.

If, however, the President finds himself unable to secure the cooperation of Great Britain especially in securing the modus vivendi authorized by this bill, so as to protect and preserve the Alaskan seal herd for this year's sealing season, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to take each and every fur seal on the Pribilof Islands and to sell the skins of said seals as he may elect, and to cover the proceeds into the Treasury.

The necessity for this course arises from the fact that the Alaskan fur-seal herd is being rapidly exterminated by pelagic sealing vessels—mainly Canadian—which follow the seal herd as it moves along our Pacific coast in the spring and enter Bering Sea at the end of the close season in August, when they are free under the ineffectual regulations adopted by the Paris Tribunal to use the spear—more deadly than the shotgun—in killing, outside of the 60-mile zone, the seals that frequent these waters in pursuit of food. As these seals are mainly females that have brought forth their young on the Pribilof Islands, the killing of the mother seals results in the starvation of the young upon the land and the inevitable rapid extinction of the fur-seal herd.

The rapidity of the decline of the valuable herd which annually resorts to the Pribilof Islands of Alaska, mainly on account of pelagic sealing, will be seen when it appears that in 1874 this herd numbered about 4,698,000. In 1890 the herd had been reduced to 1,039,000, and at the close of the season in 1895 to about 175,500—44,000 seals, mostly females, having been killed during the last season by pelagic sealers, and about 30,000 pups having died of starvation in consequence of the killing of the mother seals.

One year ago it was the estimate of experts that if all killing of seals had been stopped then it would take five years to restore it to its former numbers. It is now estimated that if regulations can be secured before the next season opens the herd can be restored in ten years. If, however, the pelagic sealers are permitted to avail themselves of another season's opportunities for slaughter under the ineffectual regulations of the Paris Tribunal, it is believed by experts that the herd will be so nearly exterminated as to make it very difficult to restore it; and that if pelagic sealing continues, within five years not only the Alaskan herd but also the Russian and Japanese herds will be well-nigh extinguished.

When it is borne in mind that our Government received almost $2,000,000 between 1870 and 1890 from the lessees who were given the exclusive privilege of annually killing 100,000 male seals above 1 year of age, and in 1890, under the new lease, $269,673, but in 1891 only $46,749, in 1892 only $23,972, and since 1892 it has received nothing (notwithstanding $550,000 is due) because of a claim of the lessees for a reduction of rental which awaits determination by the courts, it will be seen that the Treasury is being deprived of a very valuable source of revenue by the operations of the pelagic sealers.

Not only this, but the Government expended in 1894 about $450,000 in a vain attempt to prevent the killing of seals in Bering Sea by enforcing the inefficient regulations of the Paris Tribunal.

It will be seen, therefore, that unless Great Britain can be persuaded to unite with this country in so modifying and enlarging the regulations adopted by the Paris Tribunal—for Russia and Japan are ready to join us—the Canadian pelagic sealers will within five years completely exterminate not only the Alaskan but the Russian seal herds, and deprive this country of a valuable source of revenue and the world of a great boon. And inasmuch as all these seal skins go to London to be prepared and dyed, giving employment there to nearly 50,000 persons, even Great Britain herself will be deprived of a valuable source of income for her own people.

It is believed that it is Canada that is standing in the way and holding back Great Britain from cooperating with us in the preservation of the seal herd, and that when Canada sees that we propose to take summary measures to end not only the inhumanity that consigns thousands of young seals to slow starvation, but also the farce by which we are expending large sums of money to police Bering Sea practically to aid her pelagic sealers in the work of exterminating seals, she will no longer endeavor to prevent England from uniting with us in efficient measures to save the seal herds to the world.

If, however, we fail in this, as we have failed under present conditions, notwithstanding we have been urging Great Britain for more than a year to unite with us in measures to preserve seal life, then considerations of mercy as well as of economy and justice demand that we should stop the further cruel starvation of thousands of seal pups by taking what seals are left and disposing of their skins and covering into the Treasury the proceeds, which would probably reach $5,000,000.

Your committee therefore unanimously recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TITLE OF MARGARET SHUGRUE AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, is recognized to call up business from that committee.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to sell, grant, and convey unto Margaret Shugrue, of the District of Columbia, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and unto all that tract of land in the District of Columbia hereinafter described; to Caroline Lochboehler, of the District of Columbia, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and unto all that certain other tract of land in said District of Columbia, also hereinafter described; and to John R. Scott, of the District of Columbia, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and unto all that certain other tract of land in said District of Columbia, also hereinafter described, at prices to be determined by the Secretary of War upon consideration of all the circumstances of the cases, which prices shall be exclusive of the values of the improvements on said tracts of land: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that the said sales will in nowise be detrimental to the Washington Aqueduct: Provided further, That the encroachments thereon were not fraudulent, and that the said Margaret Shugrue is the bona fide proprietor of the land adjacent to the tract hereinafter described that is to be sold to her; that Caroline Lochboehler is the bona fide proprietor of the land adjacent to the tract hereinafter described that is to be sold to her; and that John R. Scott is the bona fide proprietor of the land adjacent to the tract hereinafter described that is to be sold to him.

Description of land to be sold to Margaret Shugrue: Beginning at a stone marked "W. A. 126," on the line of the northerly boundary of the United States land, near culvert 24 of the Washington Aqueduct, and running thence on said boundary north 16 degrees and 38 minutes east 128.2 feet to boundary stone 28—K. 11; thence south 52 degrees and 30 minutes west 103.9 feet; thence south 37 degrees and 30 minutes east 75 feet to the place of beginning, containing 3,896 square feet, or about 0.089 of an acre.

Description of land to be sold to Caroline Lochboehler: Beginning at a stone marked "W. A. K. 3," on the southerly side of the United States land, near culvert 26 of the Washington Aqueduct, and running south 40 degrees and 25 minutes east 20.2 feet; thence south 57 degrees and 15 minutes west 145.6 feet; thence north 63 degrees west 23.1 feet to a stone marked "W. A. K. 2"; thence north 57 degrees and 15 minutes east 154.5 feet to the place of beginning, containing 3,001 square feet, or about 0.069 of an acre.

Description of land to be sold to John R. Scott: Beginning at a point on the easterly boundary line of the United States land pertaining to the Dalecarlia reservoir, 39 feet from a stone at the intersection of the southerly and easterly boundary lines of said land, and running thence along said easterly boundary line north 12 degrees and 42 minutes east 266.75 feet; thence leaving said boundary line and running south 75 degrees and 17 minutes west 82.75 feet; thence south 2 degrees and 35 minutes east 234.24 feet; thence south 64 degrees and 46 minutes east 11.58 feet to the point of beginning, containing one-fourth of an acre, more or less.

The Committee of the Whole House, to which the bill had been referred, was discharged from its further consideration; and the House proceeded to consider it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to ask one or two questions of the gentleman in charge of the bill. As I understand, the bill has been prepared by the War Department.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it has the approval of the District Commissioners?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. And full and ample safeguards are provided in reference to the appraisement of the land?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. About how much land is involved?

Mr. BABCOCK. A little less than half an acre, embraced in three different descriptions.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the probable value of the land in question?

Mr. BABCOCK. The value is not very great. It is out by the aqueduct.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the bill provides that the Secretary of War——

Mr. BABCOCK. That the Secretary of War shall fix the value of the land.

Mr. DOCKERY. These parties, I understand, have been in undisturbed possession of the land for more than twenty years without fraudulent intent?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say in explanation of the bill that it provides for the conveyance of three small tracts of land on the Washington Aqueduct, adjoining premises that have been occupied by these parties for over twenty years. By a recent survey made by the War Department it is found that their buildings encroach upon the Government land. The Secretary of War has submitted this bill authorizing him to sell to these parties this land encroached upon, amounting in the three descriptions to less than half an acre, and of very small value.

Mr. CANNON. Will the United States have any use for this land?

Mr. BABCOCK. The engineers say not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I should be glad if the gentleman will have the report printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask that the report of the Committee of the District of Columbia upon this bill be published in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. BABCOCK) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5159) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue and Caroline Lochboehler, having fully considered the same, report a substitute therefor, with the recommendation that it do pass.

On February 19, 1895, the Secretary of War transmitted to Congress a report from Col. George H. Elliot, Corps of Engineers, in charge of the Washington Aqueduct, inviting attention to certain encroachments by Margaret Shugrue and Caroline Lochboehler upon Government land pertaining to the aqueduct, which letter and report were as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 19, 1895.

"SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report dated the 15th instant, from Col. George H. Elliot, Corps of Engineers, the engineer officer in charge of the Washington Aqueduct, inviting attention to the fact that certain buildings, the property of Margaret Shugrue and Caroline Lochboehler, encroach upon the Government land pertaining to the aqueduct, plats of the encroachment and correspondence bearing on the subject being inclosed with said report, and recommending that in view of the facts recited by him action be taken by Congress permitting the sale of the land involved to the parties named, and to which end he submits the accompanying copy of a bill authorizing such sale.

"I concur with the Chief of Engineers in the views of the engineer officer, and accordingly submit the matter with recommendation for favorable action.

"Very respectfully, DANIEL S. LAMONT,
"Secretary of War.

"The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES."

—

"OFFICE OF THE WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT,
"Washington, D. C., February 15, 1895.

"GENERAL: Before my retirement from this office and from active service I desire to invite attention to the encroachments of buildings belonging to Margaret Shugrue and Caroline Lochboehler on the Government lands pertaining to the Washington Aqueduct.

"The encroaching buildings of Margaret Shugrue consist of a small frame dwelling, which is partially, and a cow stable, which is wholly, on Government land. The place is on the Conduit road, about 3 miles from Washington, near culvert 24, and about half way between the upper and lower reservoirs.

"The encroaching building belonging to Caroline Lochboehler is a small brick dwelling house, a portion of which is on Government land. It is on the Conduit road, near culvert 26, about 2¼ miles from Washington, and just above the distributing reservoir.

"These encroachments were developed by a survey that I caused to be made in 1890 of the lands pertaining to the aqueduct between the two reservoirs, the result of which survey I reported to the Department November 5, 1890.

"I inclose appended hereto plats of the encroachments and copies of letters addressed to me, stating the circumstances under which the encroachments were made. They are—

"A letter from the late Michael Shugrue, husband of Margaret, dated September 26, 1890;

"A letter from Margaret Shugrue, dated February 3, 1895; and

"A letter from Mrs. Caroline Lochboehler, dated September 19, 1890.

"From several years' knowledge of these persons, and of the absence of boundary stones on the boundary lines of the aqueduct land pertaining to the Conduit road that existed for many years, I am satisfied that the statements of these letters are essentially correct, and that the encroachments were innocent and not fraudulent or with any evil intent.

"Sales to them of the small tracts described containing the improvements of these persons would not in the slightest degree be detrimental to the Washington Aqueduct, and I recommend that a bill in the form herewith be submitted to Congress at this session with recommendation for favorable action. This bill is substantially in the form of an act authorizing the sale of title of the United States to a tract of land on the Conduit road near Cabin John Bridge to William H. and George Bobinger, approved January 26, 1895.

"An inspection of the plats will show that the land proposed to be sold to Mrs. Shugrue is only the portion of her house lot that is on Government land, and does not include the land covered by her cow stable. She is willing and will be obliged to move the latter to her own farming land in rear of her house.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"GEORGE H. ELLIOT,
"Colonel of Engineers.

"Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
"Chief of Engineers, U. S. A."

Besides the above report, the Secretary of War also transmitted plats showing the encroachments, and the draft of a bill authorizing the sale of the land, and the correspondence was printed in House Executive Document No. 327, Fifty-third Congress. The bill was introduced, but, owing to the lateness of its introduction, no action was taken thereon by the Fifty-third Congress.

On January 11, 1896, the Secretary of War transmitted to Congress a letter containing the past correspondence of an official nature and that of the parties in interest, and included the draft of a bill which your committee substitute for bill H. R. 5159. This bill differs from H. R. 5159 in that it is framed to include the case of John R. Scott, which is precisely similar to those of Margaret Shugrue and Caroline Lochboehler. The situation of the parties may be fully understood by reference to the above-mentioned letter and the plat appended, which are printed as House Document No. 135, Fifty-fourth Congress.

The encroachments in the three cases of Shugrue, Lochboehler, and Scott extend back for twenty years. The officials who have inquired into the matter are satisfied that there has been no fraudulent intent in any of the encroachments, but that they have been occasioned through the absence or misplacement of boundary marks on boundary lines.

The parties are all poor, and your committee believe that favorable action on the accompanying bill should be taken by the House.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REASSESSMENTS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill (H. R. 3281) to authorize assessments for improvements and general taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in all cases where general taxes or assessments for local improvements in the District of Columbia may hereafter be quashed, set aside, or declared void by the supreme court of said District, by reason of an imperfect or erroneous description of the lot or parcel of ground against which the same shall have been levied by reason of such tax or assessment not having been authenticated by the proper officer, or of a defective return of service of notice, or for any technical reason other than the right of the public authorities to levy the tax or make the improvement in respect of which the assessment was levied, to reassess the lot or parcel of ground in respect of such general taxes or the improvement mentioned in such defective assessment, with power to collect the same according to existing laws relating to the collection of assessments and taxes: Provided, That in cases where such taxes or assessments shall be quashed or declared void by said court, for the reasons hereinbefore stated, the reassessment herein provided for shall be made within ninety days after the judgment or decree of said court quashing or setting aside such taxes or assessments: And provided further, That the reassessments herein provided for shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date the original tax or assessment should have been paid had it not been quashed or set aside.

The following amendment reported by the committee was read and agreed to:

At the end of the bill strike out the words:

"And provided further, That the reassessments herein provided for shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date the original tax or assessment should have been paid had it not been quashed or set aside."

Mr. RICHARDSON. Without asking that time be taken in explaining the bill (which I presume members understand), or in reading the report, I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. RICHARDSON) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia have considered the bill (H. R. 3281) to authorize reassessments for improvements and general taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and report same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment, striking out the last provision in the bill, including part of line 24 and all of lines 25, 26, 27, and 28, on page 2. The committee do not think the reassessments provided for in the bill should bear interest.

The necessity for this legislation is set forth in the letter of the District Commissioners to the chairman of the District Committee hereto attached. It is as follows:

"OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"Washington, January 3, 1896.

"DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit herewith a draft of a bill to authorize reassessments for local improvements and general taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with request that you will cause the same to be introduced into the House.

"The amount of revenue lost to the District for technical grounds through the rulings of the courts and the inability of the District authorities to reassess the charges so invalidated is so great as to threaten serious embarrassment to the municipal interests involved. Unless Congress shall interpose the legislation proposed in this bill or some other enactment to the same effect, the evil will not only continue, but will indefinitely expand. The Commissioners prepared and submitted to a former Congress a draft of a bill to provide for the reassessment of taxes and assessment judicially declared void for such technical errors, but that bill, which was retroactive as well as anticipatory, failed to receive the favorable action of Congress. Whatever hardship or embarrassment the proposed legislation might entail on property owners with regard to taxes and assessments heretofore judicially declared void, because of the bearing reassessment might have upon interests innocently acquired by owners succeeding to the property subsequent to such judgments, the Commissioners can imagine no reasonable objection in justice or equity to the enactment of the bill herewith transmitted, which is designed to provide against future losses, on similar grounds, of assessments and taxes to which the municipality may be justly entitled.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN W. ROSS,
"President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

"Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
"Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives."

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that this bill was coming up this morning. I wish to move an amendment to strike out, in line 6 of the first page, the word "hereafter."

The amendment of Mr. ABBOTT was read.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I understand upon inquiry into the question that certain assessments made against property in the District of Columbia have been declared by the courts to be void. But in my judgment the fact that such assessments have been declared void does not relieve the property of its liability to reassessment and taxation. This bill provides that hereafter where assessments have been declared void the property may be reassessed, implying that where reassessments have heretofore been made and declared void the property is not to be reassessed. Without some such amendment as that which I offer, it seems to me we shall have in this District a large amount of property upon which, by reason of the decision of the courts, no taxes will be paid, while other property owners who have not resorted to the courts will have to pay taxes.

Now, the decision did not affect the validity of the taxes assessed against the property in any way, but it was simply with reference to the assessment, by reason of the misdescription of the property, and I think it unjust and unfair to those who have not resorted to this course heretofore and have paid their taxes that those who have resorted to the courts because of the informal and irregular assessment should escape the payment of taxes altogether. They should be compelled now to pay a proper tax upon the property. It is not just to the other citizens of the District, and not just to the people of the United States, who have to pay one-half of the taxes of the District, that they should be allowed to escape in this manner.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I regret very much that my colleague on the committee has seen fit to offer the amendment. The committee were unanimous in opinion, as we thought, that the bill ought to apply only to future cases.

Mr. ABBOTT. No; I took the same position in committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas shall prevail, it will upset land titles—titles that have been acquired where there have been judicial decisions in favor of the parties—and will go back to an indefinite time, and it seems to me that it would be very unwise legislation and work great hardships. The taxpayer has gone to work, filed his petition in court, had the assessment quashed fifteen years ago, perhaps, and since that time the land has changed hands perhaps a number of times, with the decision or judgment of the court as to the assessment and in favor of the innocent purchaser who now holds the title to the property.

It seems to me that it is very unjust to require a present holder of property, who purchased the property with the judgment of the court in his favor—a judgment adjudicating the fact that the assessment was improper—to compel him now to come in and pay two assessments. It would impose a hardship on him and enforce him to pay a tax assessment of probably fifteen or sixteen years ago. He could not go upon the original holder of the property, the party from whom he purchased and upon whom the assessment was originally made, because he has been discharged by the judgment of the court, and the effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas would be to reverse the judgment of the court.

The Commissioners say in their letter to the chairman of the committee, in reference to this very question:

Whatever hardship or embarrassment the proposed legislation might entail on property owners with regard to taxes and assessments heretofore judicially declared void, because of the bearing reassessment might have upon interests innocently acquired by owners succeeding to the property subsequent to such judgments, the Commissioners can imagine no reasonable objection in justice or equity to the enactment of the bill herewith transmitted, which is designed to provide against future losses on similar grounds of assessments and taxes to which the municipality may be justly entitled.

So it seems to me to be entirely wrong to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. HULICK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. Is it not true that a portion of the landholders have been assessed and paid the taxes while others resorted to the court and are now clear of the assessment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There have been a few cases of that kind, I think.

Mr. HULICK. Now, if the Commissioners have not the right to make an assessment on the lands that have been relieved by the judgment of the court, would it not be an injustice to those who have already paid their assessment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have said already that there may be a few instances in the last few weeks or months of that kind, but if you strike out the word "hereafter," as proposed by the gentleman from Texas, there is no knowing how far back the operation of this provision will go. It may extend back twenty years.

Mr. HULICK. The inquiry is, have you the data to give the number of those who have paid and those who have been released?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There have been very few cases of that kind, I think; as I understand it is only lately that there has been any quashing; but I have not the data to give the gentleman the full information as to the number of persons affected by this provision.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to state that when the assessments were made on the property in the District for the years past some of the parties, as suggested by my friend from Ohio, paid their taxes. Because of an informality or irregularity in the assessments some of the citizens of the city resorted to the court, asking the court to set aside the assessment on the property. They did not attack the validity of the law which imposed the tax. No such question was decided by the court that it was unconstitutional or wrong, but because of negligence or carelessness on the part of the officers who assessed the property, there were numerous claims to set aside the informal or improper assessment. As an illustration that has come to my knowledge, there were certain blocks of houses assessed as "one-half of block numbered" so and so, when there were numerous parties owning interest in the block. Therefore that was an illegal assessment, because it did not describe or define the property. Now, they resorted to the court to declare the assessment illegal, not for the purpose of declaring the law itself illegal that authorized the assessment of the taxes, but only the assessment.

My friend from Tennessee complains that the property may have passed into the hands of innocent third parties, and now that the assessment has been set aside by reason of irregularity or informality of the assessment by the judgment of the court, that these parties should not be called upon to pay. Does not he know, as a lawyer, that the parties he speaks of as "innocent purchasers" have had notice of the claim as far as the tax is concerned by the very fact that the judgment of the court was rendered? The judgment of the court that the assessment was improper was a notice to purchasers of the fact that the taxes had not been paid. Why should a large number of persons, therefore, who resorted to this expedient of escaping the paying of the taxes be relieved and their property have no assessment upon it, while others who paid the taxes, who did not resort to the court, should have no corresponding relief extended to them? The very record of the court is notice of the fact that the taxes had not been paid, and therefore the purchasers of the property purchased with due notice of that fact.

The amendment I have offered is simply to correct what would be otherwise a great inequality in the operation of this law.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. The argument as to the hardship that will be imposed upon purchasers amounts to nothing when you consider what the law is upon this subject. Every man who sells property having upon it an impending incumbrance of this kind is liable under his warranty of title to his vendee in case the incumbrance actually exists. Not only that, but, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT], the party purchasing this property has no right to claim that he is an innocent purchaser as against these incumbrances. It was a matter known to the records of the court of this District. Every man who purchased any of that property, if he took legal advice, would know that these assessments were liable to be validated, and therefore it was his duty to take a warranty from his grantor or vendor, and if he failed to do it it was his own negligence. Now, see the attitude that this bill would put it in. Men who went forward like good citizens and paid their taxes have had to bear the burden. The shirkers of taxes go scot free.

Now, I submit further, Mr. Speaker, that it is a common practice in legislation not only to authorize reassessments, but in some cases to expressly validate assessments that have already been made. We are not asked to do that here. There is nothing more common, though, in the law of municipal corporations than to authorize the validation of defective assessments. These men who avoided the payment of these taxes upon technicalities ought not to escape on account of the assessments having been set aside. The bill expressly provides only for those cases where assessments may be set aside for some technical reason other than the right of the public authorities to levy the tax or make the improvement. So it really relates only to technical matters which have defeated the claims of justice, and there is no reason why they should continue to escape the demands of justice. It is not only an imposition upon the taxpayers of this District, but it is an imposition upon every citizen of the United States, for the whole people are called upon to bear a part of the burdens of the government of the District of Columbia. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] is adopted, it would require another amendment in the proviso to carry out the spirit of it. I think the amendment ought to be adopted. There is no good reason why it should not be. The argument of hardship is a mere bugaboo.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to avail myself of this opportunity to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. BABCOCK], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, whether it is the purpose of that committee to report, at an early date, some bill which shall provide for regulating and reducing the cost of gas and electric lights and of telephone service in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Missouri that the committee have had two hearings on the matter, that they will have another hearing next Thursday, and that it is the intention to frame a measure of some kind, covering the entire subject, which will be presented to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. At an early date?

Mr. BABCOCK. At an early day; yes.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, the argument of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] would undoubtedly be valid in most jurisdictions, but unfortunately it does not properly apply in the District of Columbia. In the first place, the deeds of the District of Columbia, which are said to be warranty deeds, are virtually little better than the ordinary quitclaim deeds known in the States, and consequently a grantor in the District of Columbia, if the tax was not assessed at the time the deed passed, but was subsequently assessed upon his property conveyed by that deed, would not be liable for the payment of the tax, but the then owner of the property would have to pay the tax without any recourse to the grantor.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] if there is not a law here providing what time a tax lien will attach in this District?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The law and the practice here is that the lien attaches to the property so far as it is of record in the office of the District Commissioners, and if there was no tax assessed at the time of the passage of the deed, then if the tax were subsequently assessed, it would run to the property and not against the owner of the property. And more than that, by an act of Congress purchasers of real estate in the District of Columbia are permitted to call upon the collector of taxes—now the assessor of taxes by an amendment of the statute—for a tax-lien certificate; and upon the payment of 50 cents the person making the application gets a certificate from the District authorities showing the unpaid taxes; and if he buys under that certificate the property is exempt from all taxes not included therein, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, by authority of Congress, always cancel any taxes which were omitted to be shown by it, and a subsequent assessment would be inoperative under that certificate.

Mr. TERRY. That is certainly a very loose system.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Whether it be loose or not, it works well in actual practice, and is conclusive in my mind against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT].

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT].

Mr. BABCOCK. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. This measure was submitted by the Commissioners in the last Congress, and this word "hereafter" was not in the bill. That fact caused the defeat of the measure. I think if gentlemen fully understood the intention and object of the bill they would not insist upon this amendment.

The Commissioners prepared and submitted to a former Congress a draft of a bill to provide for the reassessment of taxes and assessments judicially declared void for such technical errors, but that bill, which was retroactive as well as anticipatory, failed to receive the favorable action of Congress. They also advise the committee that under the present law——

Mr. TERRY. I will ask the gentleman if that did not include some old railroad assessments and was defeated on that account?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not.

Mr. TERRY. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. BABCOCK. The Commissioners advise the committee that the District is suffering a loss of about $150,000 a year. This is simply intended to correct imperfect and erroneous descriptions; that it shall not go back ten, fifteen, or twenty years, but simply apply to the future; and I hope, Mr. Speaker, this amendment will not be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I offered does not accomplish the real purpose I designed to accomplish by the amendment, and I therefore desire to amend the amendment I offered by having the bill read in this way: In line 6, after the word "Columbia," insert "has been or may hereafter be quashed." I find on examination that striking out the word "hereafter" in line 6 will not accomplish the object which I sought to accomplish when the amendment was offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT. I would like to modify it in that manner.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have the amendment read from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 6, after the word "Columbia," "has been or may hereafter be quashed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 85) granting to the county of Cole, Mo., permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo.;

A bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month;

A bill (S. 281) for the relief of F. M. Vandling;

A bill (S. 1409) providing for the construction and equipment of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Great Lakes; and

A bill (S. 1716) for the relief of W. H. Ferguson, administrator of the estate of Thomas H. Millsaps.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of the time within which suits may be brought to vacate and annul land patents, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

STORAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person, firm, association, or corporation lawfully engaged in the business of storing (for hire) goods, wares, merchandise, or personal property of any description shall have a preference lien thereon for the agreed charges for storing the same, and for all moneys advanced for freight, cartage, labor, insurance, and other necessary expenses, such lien to include all legal demands for like storage and expenses against the owner of said property. Said lien for such unpaid charges, upon at least one year's storage and for the aforesaid advances in connection therewith, may be enforced by sale at public auction after thirty days' notice in writing mailed to the last-known address of the person or persons in whose name or names the said property so in default was stored, and said notice shall also be published for three days in a daily newspaper in the District of Columbia.

Said property may be sold either in bulk or in separate pieces, articles, packages, or parcels, as will in the judgment of the lien holder secure the largest obtainable price: Provided, That if the person or persons storing said property shall have assigned or transferred the title thereto and have duly recorded said assignment or transfer upon the books of the storage warehouse, the written notice of sale shall also be mailed to said transferee or assignee.

SEC. 2. That whenever the title or right of possession to any goods, wares, merchandise, or personal property on storage shall be put in issue by any judicial proceeding, the same shall be delivered upon the order of court after prepayment of the storage charges and cash advances then due, and unless the person, firm, association, or corporation so conducting a storage business shall claim some right, title, or interest in said stored property otherwise than the lien hereinabove authorized, he, it, or they shall not be made a party to said judicial proceedings.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the report of the committee be read for information.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill

(H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia, make the following report:

There are a large number of persons, firms, associations, and corporations in the District of Columbia engaged in the business of storing for hire goods, wares, merchandise, or other personal property. The business is of considerable volume, and the District derives valuable revenue therefrom by way of licenses, direct taxes, etc. Much confusion and inconvenience has, however, resulted from the fact that the parties mutually interested in such business as bailors and bailees have been kept entirely to their common-law relations and remedies. The object of the bill presented by the committee is to regulate this business in a manner just both to the bailor and to the bailee.

Heretofore in cases where storage charges have become in default, or where advances for freight, cartage, labor, insurance, or other necessary expenses have not been repaid, forced sales of the stored property could be made, and often have been made, at very short notice, and even without notice, under conditions necessarily harsh to the owner, who might be sick or temporarily absent from the city. On the other hand, if the warehouseman was liberal and did not resort to forced sale, accumulation of the expenses necessarily ate up the value of the property and left nothing to either party. The bill reported gives advantage to neither party. It recognizes the right of the bailee to be secured and to be paid for his services, and the obligation of the bailor and of the goods to pay him therefor. It provides a method whereby, after ample personal notice to the bailor and of subsequent published notice in a Washington daily newspaper, unpaid advances and storage charges overdue for not less than one year may be enforced against the property. It thus fully protects owners of stored property against snap proceedings, while making the property responsible for the lawful expenses of its custody.

While making the property stored responsible for advances and agreed storage charges, it also guards the warehousemen from being made a party to suits involving the title to the stored property. The bill is recommended by the attorney for the District, is indorsed by the District Commissioners, and is satisfactory to parties in interest. It is likewise in entire harmony with similar legislation in the States of Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In section 1, line 16, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six," thus giving a longer period for publication of notice of sale. And at the end of section 1 add the following:

"And, after deducting all storage charges, advances, and expenses of sale, any balance arising therefrom shall be paid by the bailee to the bailor of such goods, wares, merchandise, or personal property, his assigns or legal representatives."

As so amended the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I simply rose, Mr. Speaker, to inquire about the question. As I understand, it is on the committee amendments. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say in connection with this bill. It was prepared and recommended by the District attorney, considered by the District Commissioners, and by them unanimously recommended for passage. The bill was carefully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, on which there are several very good lawyers, and by that committee unanimously recommended for passage with the amendments.

There are in the District of Columbia a large number of firms, persons, and individuals engaged in the business of storage for hire. There is no law now in the District of Columbia regulating that business except the common lien law, under which it can readily be understood that a person's property may be sold on short notice, and thus a rank injustice be done to the property owner or bailor. The object of this bill as presented by the committee is to regulate this business in a manner just both to the bailee or the proprietor of the warehouse, as well as to the owner of the property or the bailor. The lien protects the owners of the property against snap proceedings and at the same time makes the property responsible for the lawful storage charged. The bill is in exact harmony with the laws of a majority of the States. It is considered especially necessary here, by reason of the large number of persons engaged in the business, and from which business the District of Columbia derives considerable revenue in the way of licenses, taxes, etc.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have some amendments I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has amendments to offer, they should be offered now.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I have several amendments which I will offer in course. I send up one now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4, page 1, after the word "storing," the following words: "(for hire)."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 6, page 1, after the words "have a," the word "preference" and insert the words "first, except for taxes."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire offered an amendment, which was read as follows:

Insert in line 8, page 1, after the word "expenses," the word "thereon."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 8, 9, and 10, page 1, after the word "expenses," the words "such lien to include all legal demands for like storage and expenses against the owner of said property."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment to strike out the language just read for the reason, in the first place, that it seems to be impossible to understand just what it means, and in the second place, as far as I have been able to discover its intent, that intent is wrong. It not only includes in the lien legal demands against the property, but also claims for "expenses" against the owner of said property. Now, these expenses might be of various kinds with relation to the person and without any relation to the property. As I understand the language of the bill, it seems to me that a party could be held, if the warehouseman were so disposed, for personal expenses not necessarily incurred in connection with the stored goods, and even for a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in this District for general demands or on a promissory note. My purpose is to make the meaning of the bill absolutely plain and to provide that the lien shall apply only to the goods in the warehouse. If the gentleman in charge of the bill can explain this provision of the bill satisfactorily or will agree to so modify it that the lien shall apply simply and solely to the goods in storage, I shall be happy to acquiesce.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there was some confusion in the minds of some of the members of the committee with reference to this language when the bill was considered. The provision, however, was explained to the satisfaction, I believe, of every member of the committee, and if the gentleman from New Hampshire will give me his attention I will endeavor to explain it as it was explained to the committee. The business of storage in this District seems to take a wider range than in most other cities of the size of Washington. For example, warehousemen here are often required to visit the houses of their customers to take up the carpets and clean them, and then to place them in their warehouses. Again, it often happens that the owner desires to withdraw from storage a portion of the goods.

Now, the object of this provision of the bill is that, in case expenses or charges have accrued upon the goods so withdrawn, the remaining goods left in storage shall be responsible for such charges accrued upon the whole. That is the explanation made to the committee, which seemed to be satisfactory. One other word, Mr. Speaker. This bill has been considered by the Senate committee and recommended for passage with precisely the same provisions that are contained in the House bill. I understand that in the Senate committee also there was at first some confusion as to the scope of the language criticised by the gentleman from New Hampshire, but that on explanation it was accepted as satisfactory. The House committee were unable to see how it would be possible for them to express the intention any more clearly than it is expressed in the language used by the framer of the bill.

Mr. RAY. Is it your purpose by this bill to give a lien on the goods not only for the storage charges, but for any claim that may exist against the owner of the goods for taking up, cleaning, and caring for them before they are put in storage?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The provision was explained to the committee in this way: Very often storehouse keepers are required to send their men or their teams to the house of a customer for goods, and the object of this provision is to include in the lien any legitimate charges that have arisen in connection with the storage. Owing to the manner in which the storage business is conducted in this District there are, occasionally, small charges of this character for the handling of the goods.

Mr. RAY. My question was whether this bill as now drawn purports to give a lien upon the goods stored not only for the storage, but for any claim against the owner of the goods for taking up, cleaning, or caring for the goods before they are put in storage. Is that the purpose of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Let me read the language of the bill to the gentleman, and I think the object will be clear to him:

Personal property of any description shall have a preference lien thereon for the agreed charges for storing the same and for all moneys advanced for freight, cartage, labor, insurance, and other necessary expenses thereon.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Why is that not enough?
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. We believe that to be enough.
Mr. RAY. Read further.
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The gentleman can readily see that in the event of the removal from the warehouse of certain parcels of the goods stored the warehouseman or bailee will have released his claim upon the goods so removed, and certainly he should be entitled to have a lien upon the goods remaining for the total charges upon the goods, including those removed. Now, the bill provides for that in this language: "Such lien to include all legal demands for like storage and expenses against the owner of said property"—that is, expenses for storage. Those are the expenses referred to.
Mr. BABCOCK. The point is that if half the goods have been removed the lien is to stand upon the remaining goods for the charges on the whole.
Mr. RAY. There would be no objection to that, I think, provided the lien is limited to those goods, but let me put a case. Suppose that last year a man stored with me certain goods and did not pay the bill, and I permitted him to take the goods away. This year he comes and stores other goods. Now, would I be entitled under this bill to hold the goods stored this year for the claim of last year's storage.
Mr. BABCOCK. Not at all.
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].
Mr. RICHARDSON. We understood that there are cases of this kind. A great many persons residing a part of the year in Washington City leave it in the summer—members of Congress, for illustration. Such persons may go to one of these bailees or warehousemen and say: "Here is my key; I want you to go to my house with your employees, take up my carpets and remove my property and store it until I call for it." Now, the provision in the bill was designed simply to cover cases of that kind, so that outside expenses incurred in that way may be like the storage charges, a lien upon the goods stored. That is all there is in this provision.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I apprehend the language which will remain after the adoption of my amendment covers all that gentlemen say these other words are intended to cover.
The bill, without the words which I propose to strike out, will provide—

That every person, firm, association, or corporation lawfully engaged in the business of storing goods, wares, merchandise, or personal property of any description shall have a first lien thereon, except for taxes, for the agreed charges for storing the same, and for all moneys advanced for freight, cartage, labor, insurance, and other necessary expenses.

Gentlemen who oppose this amendment have not named a single item of expense which will not be covered by that language. The words which I propose to strike out are confusing and of doubtful meaning. For instance, it is proposed that the lien shall cover "expenses against the owner of said property," not expenses chargeable upon the property itself, but "expenses against the owner." Now, I do not believe that there is any court in the land that would be able to explain the meaning of that language.
Mr. RICHARDSON. While the language is "expenses against the owner of said property," it is limited to "all legal demands for like storage"; and the sense is the same as if it read, "like expenses against the owner." It refers simply to the handling of that particular property.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But it does not say so.
Mr. RICHARDSON. It does.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am in favor of giving these warehousemen every proper lien, but I do not think these words which my amendment proposes to strike out will make the bill any plainer or will make it a particle stronger in the interest of the warehousemen. If my amendment be adopted, the bill, I submit, will be cleaner and straighter.
Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, if this amendment be adopted, one result which the committee intended to effect will not be fully accomplished. The warehouseman will have his lien for all ordinary storage expenses and for the labor in putting the articles in storage; but the language which the gentleman from New Hampshire proposes to strike out is necessary in order to cover such cases as those alluded to by my colleague on the committee. Where there is storage of a large amount of property consisting of various articles, and some of those articles are afterwards withdrawn, the warehouseman, without such a provision as the bill contains, would have no lien upon the articles remaining for the storage of the articles withdrawn. This provision is intended as much for the convenience of the storer as for the protection of the warehouseman. A man who has various articles stored in a warehouse may send for one, two, or three articles for his present use. The warehouseman sends them to him upon his order. Now, in such a case there would be a good deal of unnecessary trouble if, upon such a partial withdrawal, the storer should be required to pay a part of the price agreed on for storing the whole. It would be much better to let the section stand as reported.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The lien is for the agreed charges on the whole.
Mr. COBB of Alabama. Exactly. You agree for the storage of the whole amount of the goods.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And the whole amount of goods is liable for the storage charges.
Mr. COBB of Alabama. Take the case put by my colleague on the committee. The occupant of a house goes to a warehouseman, gives him the key, and says: "Here, I want you to take everything in my house, put it in proper condition for storage, and store it until I call for it; and I will pay you your charges, whatever they may be." That is done. Then there is a lien fixed upon the whole amount of the goods for the agreed price of the storage. After a month or two, we will suppose, the owner of this property sends to the warehouseman a request to send to him one, two, or more articles which have been stored. In such a case there might arise at the end of the term of storage the question whether there was any lien upon the remaining goods for the amount due for the storage of the goods which had been withdrawn. It was to meet cases of that kind that this language was inserted in the bill; and it certainly ought to remain. It can do no possible harm.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The bill absolutely says that in such cases the warehouseman shall have a lien upon what is left with him.
Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; it does not. There is at least doubt about that point. I do not think it does. I think it is very gravely doubtful whether a lien would be fixed upon the goods remaining to cover the storage charges upon goods which had been withdrawn. As I have said, it was to meet cases of this kind that this language was inserted. It can do no harm; and it makes plain what would otherwise be at least doubtful.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. My objection is that it is not at all plain now, but the other amendment, striking out the word specified, makes it clear.
Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I ask a vote on the amendment.
The amendment was rejected.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer another amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 11, page 1, after the words "charges," the words "upon at least one year's storage."

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer another amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 13, page 2, after the word "auction," the words "at any time when not less than two years' storage are overdue."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The object is simply to preserve the rights of those who may be beyond the sea, or who may be for that length of time otherwise absent from the District. The inhabitants of the District of Columbia, it is generally believed, do more traveling than the citizens of any part of the country. Many of them are away a considerable share of the year, and it is necessary that their rights shall be preserved more than any other citizens in the country in respect to which the amendment applies.
Now, of course goods that would not bear the price of two years' storage would not be stored, and it goes without saying that this does not destroy any of the rights of the warehousemen while preserving the rights of others.
Mr. COBB of Alabama. The House has just refused to strike out one year, and that is the limit put on by the committee, and therefore it would hardly be willing to insert two years, leaving one in. It would be confusing. Besides, under the language now used, if any man expects to be away longer than that he can make provision for it. I ask a vote.
The amendment was rejected.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer another amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, page 2, strike out the words "lien holder" and insert the word "auctioneer."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. As the bill now stands the lien holder has the whole procedure in his hands. I do not think it is entirely right. Although the safeguard, by substituting the word auctioneer, does not give as much right to the owner of the goods as he ought to have, yet it is the best word I can think of in connection with the matter, and therefore I offer that amendment.
Mr. COBB of Alabama. You do so to the prejudice of the owner of the goods stored. The lien holder is the man responsible, more than the other, and he is the man with whom the storer is dealing, and his rights would be more protected than by an irresponsible auctioneer.
Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The auctioneer is always under bond.
The amendment was rejected.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I call up for consideration the contested-election case.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], if he had been present this morning, as he intended to be, desired to make a few remarks on the bill for the protection of fur seals, which was passed by the House to-day. I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to print in the RECORD the remarks which he would have delivered if an opportunity had been offered.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 281) for the relief of F. M. Vandling—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1409) providing for the construction and equipment of two steam revenue cutters for service on the Great Lakes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1716) for the relief of W. H. Ferguson, administrator of the estate of Thomas H. Millsaps—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. R. 85) granting the county of Cole, Mo., permission to use certain rooms in the United States building at Jefferson City, Mo.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—VAN HORN VS. TARSNEY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the contested-election case of Robert T. Van Horn vs. John C. Tarsney, from the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri, and ask that the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John C. Tarsney was not elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat in the House.

Resolved, That Robert T. Van Horn was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, and that he be admitted to his seat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I move the adoption of the resolutions reported by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Clerk to read the resolutions reported by the minority of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the case of Robert T. Van Horn against John C. Tarsney be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 2 for further consideration.

Resolved, That additional evidence be taken in said case, under such rules and in such manner as shall be adopted and prescribed therefor by the said committee, such additional evidence to be confined to the condition and custody of the ballots cast in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and fifty-second precincts of Kansas City in the Congressional election of 1894; to the segregation of the illegal from the legal ballots in such precincts, and to the recount of the legal ballots cast in such precincts for Representative in Congress, and to include also duly certified copies of all poll books of such precincts not now in evidence.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions accompanying the minority report as a substitute for the resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. TAYLER. I would suggest to the gentleman from California the addition of the words "second" and "twenty-seventh" in the resolution proposed by the minority, in order that the scope of the testimony proposed to be taken may be somewhat widened.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I have no objection to that, and will amend the substitute in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of the resolution on the part of the committee will be opened by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE], to whom I now yield time.

Mr. BAILEY. Has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] any disposition now to try to fix a limit within which the debate shall be closed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be a little unwise to undertake to fix a limit at the present time. There are several gentlemen who desire to be heard on this side, and I am informed that there are several gentlemen who desire to be heard on the other side. There may come a time in the debate when it will be advisable to fix a limit. If so, I shall advise with the gentlemen on the other side before making any motion or taking any action upon that subject. I think the debate should be allowed to proceed in the usual manner under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the case of Robert T. Van Horn against John C. Tarsney be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 2 for further consideration.

Resolved, That additional evidence be taken in said case, under such rules and in such manner as shall be adopted and prescribed therefor by the said committee, such additional evidence to be confined to the condition and custody of the ballots cast in the second, fifth, sixth, seventh, twenty-seventh, and fifty-second precincts of Kansas City in the Congressional election of 1894; to the segregation of the illegal from the legal ballots in such precincts, and to the recount of the legal ballots cast in such precincts for Representative in Congress, and to include also duly certified copies of all poll books of such precincts not now in evidence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE] is recognized.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I think there is nothing involved in this case that requires any special knowledge of the law in order to determine it correctly. The facts, which must finally determine what the decision of this House shall be, seem to the majority of this committee not to be fairly in dispute. There are three reports on file, one from a majority of the committee, one from a single member of the committee, and one signed by three Democratic members of the committee.

In order that the House may fairly understand the case, it becomes necessary that a statement of the provisions of the law of the State of Missouri should be made. Unless you have read the record in this case or the briefs, you probably can not understand why the majority of this committee have decided that this case should not be reopened and further testimony taken.

If the House will indulge me, and I may be somewhat tedious in my presentation, I shall attempt to lay the law and the facts of this case before you so that you may more clearly understand and apply the arguments of other members of this committee who shall follow me.

I think that all the members of this committee, minority and majority, agree upon one fact, and that is that at the election in November, 1894, in the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, there were outrageous and enormous frauds perpetrated. The minority, and also the single member who has signed a report, propose to open up this case and take further testimony, and try to purge the vote cast in that district of the fraudulent votes. The majority of this committee do not believe that this is feasible under the circumstances and the facts surrounding this case. So that the issue that is presented here for this House to determine is simply this: Shall this case be opened up, and shall the contestee be allowed to take further testimony? That is the only issue that is presented for this House to decide. I think I may safely say that the minority will admit that if the majority are right in their claim that there were such frauds perpetrated in certain precincts in this Congressional district within the city of Kansas City that they should be thrown out and entirely disregarded in making up the returns of this election, then the contestant is clearly entitled to his seat in this House. Of that, it seems to me, there can be no dispute. So that the question to be determined here is, ought this case to be opened up and the contestee allowed to take further testimony?

The law of Missouri in force and effect in 1894, when this election was held, provided that in cities of the first class there should be a recorder of voters; that his office should be open at all times for the registration of legal voters within cities of the first class, and Kansas City was within that class. The recorder of voters in 1894, and for three or four years prior thereto, was a gentleman by the name of Owsley. The majority of this committee are of the opinion that there was a conspiracy to carry on fraudulent elections in Kansas City, not only at the election in 1894, but at prior elections, and that this recorder of voters was one of the chief conspirators in the commission of frauds committed in that city. This register of voters was required, whenever a legal voter presented himself, to enter his name upon the registration list kept in his office, putting upon the registration list his place of residence and a description of the voter—that is to say, a statement whether he was white or colored.

The record in this case is a voluminous one. The testimony taken covers nearly a thousand pages of closely printed matter. I think that any member who will take this testimony and carefully review it can not arrive at any other rational conclusion than that this register of voters was one of the conspirators who helped to perpetrate the frauds that are admitted by all parties to have been perpetrated in 1894.

The law in force at that time required this register of voters to prepare a poll book giving a list of names of all the legal voters in each voting precinct in Kansas City, and to send these poll books to the places where the elections were to be held upon the morning of the election, or prior to that time, so that they might be there at the polls at the time of holding the election. This recorder of voters controlled almost absolutely the machinery of elections in cities of the first class in the State of Missouri. He was given power to appoint all the judges of election, all the clerks of election at all the precincts in cities of the first class—that is, the recorder of voters of each city of that class. The law required that he should appoint an equal number from each of the two leading political parties; or, in other words, that there should be an equal number of Democrats and Republicans upon the election boards in each of the voting precincts.

The ballots were prepared by this recorder of voters and sent to the election precinct, if I remember the law correctly. The judges of elections were divided into three classes; two of them were distributing judges—that is, judges who had charge of the ballots and marked upon the ballots their initials and handed them to the voters as they presented themselves to vote. Two of them were receiving judges. When the voter came into the polling place and received his ballot, he went into a booth and there prepared his ballot, brought it back, and gave it to two receiving judges. It was their duty to deposit that ballot in the ballot box. The other two judges were what are known as counting judges.

Two ballot boxes were provided for each voting precinct, and every hour they were required to open the ballot box and count the votes cast up to that time, and as they opened one ballot box the other was substituted and the ballots placed in it during the next hour. Two clerks kept the poll list. When a man presented a ballot they looked upon the poll list and found his number—that is, his registered number. That was marked upon the ballot. Beneath was drawn a line, and under that line was placed his voting number; and the voters were numbered in the order in which they presented themselves at the polls. After the voter had cast his ballot, "Voted" was written opposite his name, and his voting number also. The law required that the ballots should be strung as they were counted during the day, and after the polls were closed they were to be placed in a ballot box, sealed up, and two judges, one of each party, were required to take this ballot box and one of the poll lists that was put in the ballot box and return them to the recorder of voters; also another poll list that was not to be placed in or sealed up in the ballot boxes.

The law required this recorder of voters to carefully care for and preserve these ballot boxes, allowing no one to have access to them, for the period of one year, or until there should be an order of court in a contested-election case which might require them to be opened for examination.

The majority report was prepared by the chairman of the committee, and is full and concise, and I trust that every member of this House may carefully read it before this case shall be finally submitted, for I believe that it is a fair, open, full, and candid statement. I say that the majority of the committee believe that there was a conspiracy to commit fraud at this election, and they believe that Owsley was the leader in that conspiracy.

This conspiracy was formed not for the purpose of this particular election. And here I digress to say this: That so far as this record discloses there is nothing to show that the contestee, Mr. Tarsney, had any part or parcel in this conspiracy; and we only contend that he is the beneficiary of the frauds that were perpetrated at this election. This conspiracy was formed for the benefit of the Democratic party in Kansas City. It is true that in the election of 1894, the election in which this contest is involved, there were a few Republicans embraced. Two or three local Republican candidates, a candidate for justice of the peace, and a candidate for constable in one of the precincts, entered into the conspiracy with these Democrats to perpetrate frauds at the election in 1894. But prior to that time, in 1893, the registration lists had been "stuffed"; in other words, there had been entered upon the registration lists in the Second Ward of Kansas City, in which there were not more than 1,000 legal voters, some 800 or 900 names of persons who never had resided in that precinct and who were not voters of that precinct. The object of entering them there by this register of voters was to perpetrate Democratic frauds; and that this House may understand more fully what some of these frauds consisted of, I will send to the Clerk's desk the record of the testimony taken in this case, and have read as a part of my remarks that portion which is marked on pages 690, 691, and 692. By paying close attention to this testimony, I think the House will be fully convinced how these registration lists were "stuffed," how fraudulent names were entered upon them; and I trust that every member of the House will listen to the reading of this testimony.

Mr. MAGUIRE. What testimony is it that the gentleman is having read?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. It is the testimony of Mr. Bradbury, which is found on page 690 of the record. One word more, Mr. Speaker, before that testimony is read. This man Bradbury had charge of a gang of men who were working upon the streets in Kansas City. Another man, by the name of Pierce, I think, had charge of another gang. The men were negroes, and it was these two gangs that went week after week to the registration office and registered themselves under different names, and when the examination speaks of "your gang" it is intended to distinguish Bradbury's gang from Pierce's gang, because both gangs went and registered repeatedly.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was this done in 1893?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. This registration was commenced in August, 1893.

Mr. HENDERSON. And did the same registration form the basis for the fall election in 1894?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. This same registration list was used in the election of 1894. The particular object of padding the registration lists in August, 1893, was to prepare for the city election which was to occur in the spring of 1894, and the lists having been so padded, they continued it and used it at the Congressional election in November, 1894. I now ask that the Clerk read the testimony, and I hope gentlemen will give it their attention.

The Clerk read as follows:

Q. This was done by you with your gang?
A. Well, both these gangs would go together.
Q. Well, how many were there?
A. Well, he had six or seven and I had about the same number, and all those boys at those sporting houses, we would all go together, say about twenty-five or thirty.
Q. What day of the week?
A. Regular every Saturday.
Q. Regular every week?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. From what time to what time?
A. Well, from about the 25th of August, 1893, up to very near the spring election, almost every week.
Q. Spring of 1894?
A. Yes, sir; spring election.
Q. Well, were they given any particular instructions as to what precinct to register in, whether the fifth, sixth, or seventh?
A. Well, we had a certain number of votes Mr. May wanted in the fifth precinct, and then afterwards he had some put in the seventh precinct. He did not put any in the sixth. Andy Foley had charge of that, because he named the judges and clerks in that precinct. In the seventh precinct and in the fifth precinct I recognize some names there, at 23 East Third, 7 East Third, 9 East Third, and 11 East Third, all those was done during this registration.
Q. Well, who was Foley?
A. Well, Andy Foley was alderman at that time, representing the Second Ward, and you know Mr. May was very cautious, and he knew that some time he and Mr. Foley was going to split, so he would not put any votes in that precinct Andy Foley was supposed to control; that was the sixth precinct. So he put all the votes in the fifth and seventh precincts.
Q. This was all done before the spring election?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you remember who it was conducted the ward registration before the spring election?
A. Before the spring election?
Q. Yes.
A. I do not know his name, but I know there was a gentleman appointed there had charge of the ward registration, and some of this illegal registration was done while he was there. At first he objected to it.
Q. Where was that?
A. At the Metropolitan Hotel.
Q. How long before the election?
A. Not very long.
Q. That was just before the election, when they have the ward registration?
A. Yes, sir; and just before the election I went to see Mr. May and told him this man would not do it, and he went down to see Mr. Owsley, and Mr. Owsley was late coming, and I telephoned Mr. Owsley——
Q. Where did you telephone?
A. I telephoned Fifth and Broadway, I think, and he came down and he saw this man, and after that the men were registered.
Q. Well, what do you know about transfers of names that appear on the books of the spring election being made this fall from one precinct to another in the Second Ward?
A. I remember them saying to me one time that there was too many votes in the fifth precinct.
Q. There had been too many put on?
A. There was about 800 or 900 votes on there; they could not handle all of them, it would be too much of a give away, and they said they was going to strike off some of the names; so one day George A. Pierce saw me; he works in the county surveyor's office; Democratic committeeman he was then and is now; he was canvassing the ward for the recorder of voters——
Q. Do you mean to say he was a Democratic committeeman and also one of Owsley's canvassers?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who was Mr. Owsley?
A. Recorder of voters.
Q. He was appointed by Owsley for the purpose of striking off illegal names from the fifth precinct and other precincts in the Second Ward?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, how do you know he was a canvasser?
A. He told me so. He told me he was going to be a canvasser before he was. I met him at Fifth and Broadway—John Moran's saloon. He told me he wanted me to go over to Krueger's drug store——
Q. When was that?
A. I think it was in October, 1894; I think the board of revision was in session, and these canvassers were out finding out about these names. I think it was in October, and he said to me he wanted me to call off about 200 names to him. He had a book similar to yours; he wanted some of those names called off; he wanted some of those illegal names stricken off; so I called off a great many of those names that were registered at the northwest corner of Second and Wyandotte and First and Wyandotte. I called off a great many names for him from 311 West Sixth street, and from other numbers in that precinct I do not remember. I remember those particularly; I thought there was too many at 311, and I thought we had better get those names from the northwest corner of Second and Wyandotte and First and Wyandotte; and so a few days after that I saw Pierce; he said to me that Bristow could not find those names. I said, "What names?"——
Q. For what purpose did he want this list from you?
A. I said, "What names?" and he said, "Those names you called off," speaking to me; and I said, "Bristow didn't need those names if they were to be stricken off," and he explained to me that they were not to be stricken off, but they were to be transferred out of the fifth precinct into the other two precincts; that is, the sixth and seventh precincts in the Second Ward.
Q. Why did they want this done?

A. Because there were too many names registered in that precint, 800 or 900; they had better put them in the other precincts; you see at that time Andy Foley was off the committee; at that time Pierce, being committeeman, would have the naming of the judges and clerks in all three precincts; being committeeman, there would not be any trouble with Andy Foley.
Q. Foley wasn't in the campaign this last fall at all?
A. No, sir; Pierce took his place.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Now, Mr. Speaker, the testimony just read explains how this false registration was made. It shows that certain men who had charge of gangs who worked upon the streets took them every Saturday night, together with gangs of men gathered from dens of prostitution and other disreputable places in Kansas City, and in gangs of from 25 to 30 at a time, took them to the office of the recorder of voters and had their names placed on the registration list, not their own proper names, but any names that occurred to them. These names were placed upon the list and voted at the election in the fall of 1894. Now, I call attention to the fact that the testimony of the witness Bradbury, just read, stands in this record wholly uncontradicted in any particular. It stands uncontroverted by the facts or by the witnesses who have testified in the case. Mr. Owsley and his clerks who helped him to make this false registration were in the city, I think, when this testimony was given, but the contestee did not see fit to call them or any other witnesses to the stand to contradict a single statement made by Mr. Bradbury.

Not only that, but the witness's testimony is borne out by an examination of the records. When you go to these registration lists and examine the dates when these names are entered upon them, you find that they were entered on Saturdays and in large groups, just as this witness has testified, and that in that way the registration lists were stuffed and prepared for the spring election in 1894. This state of facts pertains, so far as Bradbury's testimony shows, to three precincts that are involved in the reports made by the majority and the minority of this committee—the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward in Kansas City. There is also another precinct involved. The majority of the committee insist that the evidence in this record standing uncontradicted, or at least unsuccessfully contradicted, shows that in the fifty-second precinct such frauds were committed as that that precinct can not and ought not to be counted in the determination of the result of that election.

Following this election there was great excitement in Kansas City. The citizens realized the fact that there had been enormous frauds committed at the election and they called a public meeting composed of all parties, and the leading men, Democrats, Republicans, and Populists, selected a committee of safety. Within two weeks after the election had been held that committee of safety appointed canvassers, who immediately entered upon a canvass, having with them lists of all the voters in the suspected precincts in Kansas City. Those canvassers went from house to house and made a thorough canvass, and they found that there had been large numbers of men fraudulently entered upon the registration lists not only in the precincts I have mentioned, but in other precincts also.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was that after the spring election or after the fall election?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. This was right after the Congressional election in 1894. When the result of the election was published in the daily papers of Kansas City, on the 7th day of November, I think it was, people immediately discovered that enormous frauds had been perpetrated. Then this public meeting was called and canvassers were appointed, who went from house to house, made the most perfect and complete canvass they possibly could make, as the record shows, and they found that in each of these precincts there had been from 250 to 350 or more names of persons who never had been voters in those precincts entered upon the registration lists. They went, as I have said, from house to house and inquired of the tenants and found that in many instances no such persons as those whose names appeared upon the lists had ever lived in that vicinity. In fact, the registration lists showed that many of these names had been registered from places which were vacant lots, railroad yards, and houses that had been standing idle for months prior to the election. Testimony in this case shows, and it is uncontradicted, that this recorder of voters, Mr. Owsley, entered a large number of these names upon the registration lists himself. That is shown by Bradbury's testimony, a portion of which has just been read.

The county Republican central committee were suspicious that frauds had been committed in the spring election of 1893, and so prior to this election in 1894 appointed canvassers to go into the suspected precincts, 45 in number, there being, I believe, 63 in all in Kansas City. These canvassers made a canvass from house to house. They entered the names of all the voters they could find, as is shown by the testimony, in each of these precincts. They then went to the office of the recorder of voters; they checked from his list all the names that had not been entered upon their lists, in alphabetical order, as found. They went back into the precincts and tried to see how many of those that they had failed to find the first time that had been entered upon the registration lists could be found. They found some of them—a few of them. When they had completed this careful recanvassing they found that in those 45 precincts there were 4,500 names fraudulently entered upon the registration list—at least that many names of persons that they could not find.

The Republican county central committee then took their books made up from their canvass and from the registration lists in the office of the recorder of voters. They went to that officer and showed him their books and asked him to strike off or have the board of revision strike off those names; for the law provided that before the election—twenty days, I think, before the election—there should be a board of revision appointed for the purpose of purging these registration lists.

Mr. HENDERSON. Appointed by whom?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Appointed by the recorder of voters. As I have said, this law gave into the hands of this recorder of voters absolute power to perpetrate fraud in the State of Missouri in cities of the first class. He appointed these persons who were to revise the registration lists—presumably one-half from each political party.

This board of revision was then in session. The county Republican central committee went to the recorder of voters and showed him this list and asked him to take it and purge it. They then went to the board of revision and presented it to them, and asked that the board of revision and the recorder of voters should appoint canvassers, one canvasser to go into each precinct with a canvasser to be selected by the Republican county central committee, and if possible purge these registration lists. This was refused. No canvassers were appointed to act with canvassers selected by the Republican county central committee.

But this board of revision undertook to purge this list. Upon that board there had been appointed men pretending to be Republicans. The board found that only 200 out of the 4,500 names to which the Republican county committee had called attention should be stricken from the list. So that the list as made up by the board contained the names of 4,300 persons unaccounted for in those 45 precincts in Kansas City.

I have said that this recorder of voters was empowered to appoint all the officers of the election. He appointed the six judges and the two clerks that were to serve at each of the voting precincts. The Republican county central committee made up a list of reputable, honest, competent Republicans whom they desired to have appointed upon the boards of election in the different precincts of Kansas City. They submitted that list to this recorder of voters. He took it, looked at it, and said, "I can not appoint the men that you have asked me to appoint; there are a great many applications here." Finally, however, he promised that he would publish the list of his appointees, and that when the committee saw it they would be satisfied with it. He did make the appointments, selecting very few indeed of the men who had been recommended by the Republican county central committee for appointment upon the election boards.

When his list was published there was indignation all over Kansas City. Immediately the Republican county central committee went to him and protested against the appointment of the men whom he had named to act as judges and clerks of election. The county central committee then sent out canvassers to see if they could learn where these judges and clerks of election were located. There were numbers of them, large numbers—aye, a large majority of them—who could not be found at all. The fact is, as this record shows, that Mr. Owsley, Street Commissioner May, and others who were in this conspiracy had been colonizing illegal voters in those precincts to act as judges of election. Those that the committee did find that had been appointed as Republicans were found to be disreputable people, men unfit to serve as such officers.

There was, as I have said, indignation all over the city. Immediately a committee called upon the recorder of voters. An agreement was entered into that they should submit a list of those who should be selected as judges and clerks of election to a committee of four—two Democrats and two Republicans. Mr. Owsley agreed to that. The next morning after making this agreement he published a card in the newspapers renouncing his agreement and declining to make the appointments in the manner agreed upon.

This was upon the eve of the election. There was no time to remedy the wrong that it was apparent the recorder of voters intended to commit. And so the judges and clerks thus selected, over the protest of the Republican county central committee, were allowed to act as such at the different precincts.

Mr. RAY. The gentleman will allow me to ask him a question. As I understand from him, Mr. Owsley appointed men as judges and clerks of the election who did not reside in the precincts where they were to act.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Men who had been colonized, who had rented rooms for the sole purpose of acting as such at the election.

Mr. RAY. Then they were not bona fide residents?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. No; they were not.

Mr. BAILEY. We should like to hear the colloquy which is going on between the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE].

Mr. RAY. I asked the gentleman from Nebraska whether or not Mr. Owsley appointed as judges and clerks of election in certain precincts men who were not bona fide residents of the precincts; and he has replied that Mr. Owsley did so. The question I now ask is this: Does the law of Missouri demand or require that these judges and clerks shall be bona fide residents of the precincts in which they act?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I think the law so requires; in fact, I am positive that it does require that these officers shall be bona fide residents of the precincts in which they act.

Mr. RAY. And also qualified voters.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. And qualified voters in the precinct.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, with his permission.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. With pleasure.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to know whether any of the names recommended by the Republican county central committee as judges of the election, recommended to Mr. Owsley, the recorder of voters, were appointed in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward, or in the fifty-second?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Not one. And only a few were appointed in any of the precincts within the 63 voting precincts of the city. Wherever the appointments were made as recommended by the central committee of the Republican party, it is not shown by the evidence in the record that any frauds were there committed. It was only in those precincts where they had absolute control under the appointments made by this recorder of voters, Mr. Owsley, that frauds were committed. When they canvassed the list of judges and clerks, they found that the men appointed as Republicans were, many of them, in fact Democrats. For instance, in the fifty-second precinct a man by the name of Frenkle had voted as a personal matter for the Republican candidate for mayor at the city election, 1894. He said that he had always been a Democrat; that he had always voted the Democratic ticket on all occasions, except in this one single instance; yet he was appointed by Mr. Owsley as one of the Republican judges of election in the fifty-second precinct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has stated that some of the election officers were nonresidents of the district in which they acted?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice in the brief of the contestant this allegation:

> Not only were they nonresidents, but no information concerning them, their residence, character, or politics could be obtained.

Was that established by the evidence taken before the committee?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, sir; witnesses were called who substantiated that fact. It was shown by the witnesses who were put upon the stand that they had gone out under the direction of the county Republican committee and canvassed the different precincts to find the men who were to serve the next day at the election as the judges and clerks, and they were unable to find out who they were, where they were from, or their politics; and among the few they did find who had been appointed as Republicans, as I have already stated, were some Democrats, and those found who were Republicans were barkeepers and men of a disreputable class, as well as men of doubtful Republican politics.

Mr. HENDERSON. If my friend will allow me a further interruption—I do not wish to consume his time, but I think the House ought to understand the case.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I am glad to yield to interruptions, because I wish the House to understand it fully.

Mr. HENDERSON. You have stated that of the 4,500 fraudulent names on the poll list there were 200 erased by the reexamining board or the board of revision. Can the gentleman state, from the evidence, what method was pursued by that board of revision in striking off the 200 names? Were the citizens' committee of the Republican county central committee or any other persons selected, or any method adopted by which they could trace out the names, or was it done by force of arms, so to speak, without any known method to the citizens? I would like the gentleman to make that point clear.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I am not certain, but I think the testimony shows that the board did it as they saw fit, and that there was no concert of action between the board of review and the county central committee in striking off the 200 names from the list.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was done, then, in sort of a star-chamber proceeding?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, sir. However, the names were published in the paper after they had been stricken off, but the list of names was not published in alphabetical order; there was no systematic arrangement of them, and it was exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for the Republican county committee, in the short time before the election, to have investigated how or from what precincts they were stricken off.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If my colleague will allow me, I would like to ask him if it is not true that the testimony shows that, despite the protest of the Republican central committee, the election was held with 4,300 illegal names on the registration list; that this occurred after the attention of the recorder of voters had been called to the matter by the Republican county committee?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That is a fact that I have already stated; that there were 4,300 names on the list which the Republican county committee had shown to be fraudulent; that is to say, most of them. There might have been here and there occasionally a man who was properly on the list. The chairman of the Republican county central committee was upon the witness stand, and was asked in cross-examination by contestee's attorney about certain men who were on the list, and he said that he thought the 4,300 was in the neighborhood of being an accurate statement of the total number; that a few might have been properly registered, but in the main that the list was correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand you, then, that the fraudulent names reported were found upon the poll list after the election as having voted?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, sir. In these precincts, as I have said, the majority of the committee find from the testimony that nearly all on this list of names were marked as having voted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was there any evidence taken after the election touching the 4,300 fraudulent names to verify the charges of the Republican county central committee made before the election?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I think not, name by name. That is my recollection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is it not true that the committee of safety which canvassed the various wards right after the election reported numerous fraudulent registrations to have been made there?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes; but whether they undertook to verify them by the same lists or not, I do not know.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not like to complain, Mr. Speaker, but it is impossible to hear the questions propounded to the gentleman from Nebraska, and we should like to hear them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The question I addressed to my colleague was this: Is it not true that a canvass made in certain of these wards by what was known as the nonpartisan committee of safety, within eight or ten or twelve days after the election was held, disclosed a vast number of names in each ward of persons registered and marked on the poll books as having voted, a great number of whom could not be found, and who were registered from vacant lots, tenantless houses, and other impossible places?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That is true. I have already stated that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Did those names correspond with the list of which they had notice before the election?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Some did and some did not.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I had already stated what the gentleman from Indiana states, but as to whether they were compared and found to be the identical names or not I am not prepared to state.

Mr. RAY. With the permission of the gentleman, I desire to ask him, does the record show positively that any man or men did, in fact, vote twice in the same precinct, or vote in one precinct and then go and vote in another precinct?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. There is some evidence tending to prove that fact, that there was repeating in some precincts, but we confine ourselves more particularly to those four precincts.

Now, this law of Missouri also provides that there shall be a challenger allowed at each voting place and a witness to the count. Remember, they counted every hour. The challenger would be there only when the votes were being cast.

The Republican county central committee sent to this recorder of voters a list of names out of which they desired him to select the challengers and witnesses at the respective precincts in Kansas City. Mr. Owsley, the recorder of voters, prior to the election, when that list was submitted to him, decided that they were not entitled to have challengers and witnesses, so they made up a test case and submitted it to three of the circuit judges of Kansas City and acquired from them a judicial opinion, which opinion is printed in the record, in which it was decided, or at least by two of them, that the Republican county central committee were entitled to select their challengers and witnesses for these respective voting precincts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And each party had that right?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Each party had that right to select their challengers and witnesses. Mr. Owsley, however, having made up his list of election judges and clerks, instructed them, notwithstanding this judicial decision in a case to which he was a party—instructed these election boards that it was within their discretion to allow the challengers and witnesses to be present at the election for the purpose of exercising the duties which they were allowed under the law to exercise.

The county central committee prepared credentials and placed them in the hands of their witnesses and challengers, and sent them to the respective voting places, and in all the polling places where these election boards had been made up for the specific purpose, as we claim, of perpetrating frauds, these challengers and witnesses were ejected, were thrown out and not allowed to act. The excuse given by some of the election boards was that their credentials were not signed by the recorder of voters. These challengers and witnesses went to the office of the recorder of voters to have him sign their credentials. They found the office locked. They remained there and tried to get in. Finally, after some persistence, they secured an opening of the door and found that Mr. Owsley was not there; but some of these challengers and witnesses encountered Mr. Owsley later at a polling place, and presented their credentials and asked him to sign them, but he refused to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman from Nebraska desire further time?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How much further time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. It will take me thirty minutes to present the case as I desire to present it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for thirty minutes longer.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is the better way. Let him conclude his remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Very well; I have no objection to that. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE] be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the challengers or witnesses were ejected from every one of these precincts where these frauds were afterwards shown to have been perpetrated. Had they been allowed to be present and exercise their duties, and to witness what was going on in these different polling places, I doubt not that there would have been different returns from the different voting precincts in Kansas City where it has been proven that great frauds had been perpetrated by the election boards.

Now, I desire to call the attention of this House to some of the frauds that were perpetrated. The majority of this committee say that the returns, the ballot boxes, and everything connected with the election held in the fifty-second precinct and in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts were so tainted with fraud that they are unworthy of being considered as evidence in arriving at a conclusion in this case. The resolution reported by the minority is that we open up this case and permit the contestee to take further testimony for the purpose of trying to purge these election returns of fraud. Now, in the fifty-second precinct——

Mr. RAY. In that connection—because it seems to be pertinent, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. I read here in the report made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], a member of your committee, in which he suggests the propriety of reopening and having a recount of the ballots; and he suggests that the ballots are still in existence and might be found and actually recounted, and these fraudulent votes thrown out, and so ascertain what the correct result should be. Now, it occurred to me, as I understand the gentleman's remarks and the evidence that I have looked at, that this same Owsley, who was the father of all these frauds that have been conducted, and who seems to have been the schoolmaster in this concern—that he was the same man who has had charge of these ballots ever since the election. I want to know whether or not that is true? Has he been the custodian of those ballots?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I think I have stated that, and if not I intended to do so.

Mr. RAY. I did not hear you state that.

Mr. CROWTHER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska the question, if in local contests that have taken place it has not been a matter of proof that not only have the ballot boxes been opened and the ballots tampered with, but also that the returns have been changed?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I intended to reach that further on.

Mr. CROWTHER. That is the fact.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That is the fact, as shown by the evidence. The gentleman from New York asks me if the returns were not made to the register of voters. I had stated when the polls closed that the ballots should have been placed in one of the ballot boxes, and also one of the polling lists, and then the ballot box sealed and returned to the office of the recorder of voters; and as I stated—I think I stated it—they should have been safely kept there and no one allowed to open the boxes or examine their contents for the period of one year, unless by order of court in a contested election; and after these elections were held all of these returns were taken to this office of the recorder of voters, and he was the custodian not only of the ballots, but of the poll books and of all the election returns after the election was held.

Mr. RAY. And that is the same man Owsley.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That is this man Owsley that I have been talking about.

Now, as to this fifty-second precinct. To those who are familiar with the election laws of this country it is not necessary for me to state what the law is in reference to election returns which are so tainted with frauds that it is impossible to separate the honest from the dishonest votes. I will admit, as is stated by my colleague from Ohio, a member of this committee [Mr. TAYLER], that it is a serious thing; that it is a most drastic measure to disfranchise an entire precinct; but when you undertake to count a precinct and by the counting of it you are liable to perpetrate great fraud in effect, it is better to disfranchise all the voters of that precinct than be a party to the perpetration of fraud by counting it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will my friend allow me right there on that proposition? Where would he draw the line? Shall it be 1 fraudulent ballot, 50, or 100——

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I can not tell you where the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] would draw the distinction.

Mr. HENDERSON (continuing). That would justify throwing out all the other votes in the district?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I can not tell you where he would draw the line.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where would you draw it?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I would say that there were certain ballots deposited on election day, as I will show you further on, which were the votes of honest voters, but that fraudulent ballots were substituted for those honest ballots, and no man can tell how many honest ballots are in this box to-day, nor how many dishonest ones, and it is utterly impossible for this committee or for any power on earth at this time to discover and determine how many of these ballots are honest and how many are dishonest in the ballot box.

Mr. HENDERSON. What I want to get at is the rule of safety for throwing out a whole precinct. Suppose you and I should vote honest ballots and C and D voted dishonest ones. If you count this out because of dishonest votes, then you and I are disfranchised. I want to get at a rule upon which we can act safely.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman's own hypothesis is that you can not find out.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have stated a case that is not yet proven.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. The only way, in my judgment, under God's heaven to purge the polls in these four precincts would be to go back to Kansas City and call every voter up, and ask him how he voted, showing him the ticket that is found in the ballot box bearing his voting and registration number and asking him if that is his ticket, and that is not what is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio; it is not proposed by the minority of this committee; it is not proposed by the contestee himself. It is the only way it can be done, and it is absolutely impracticable at this late day to do that. It is sixteen or eighteen months since the election was held, and it would be impossible now to find all the voters who cast their votes at that election and to ascertain how they did vote.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska that the minority of the committee did not make any such proposition as that, because the majority of the committee would not even agree to go back and look at the ballots, and, of course, if they would not agree to look at the ballots they certainly would not agree to summon the voters.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That, I suppose, is a part of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will ask my colleague if it is not a fact that the majority of the committee, to whom the gentleman from Texas refers, spent a great deal of time in discussing the question as to whether there was any method whereby they could safely purge these precincts before they resolved to throw them out?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That was a matter of long and tedious discussion by the members of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will ask him also if various propositions were not made looking to an attempt to purge these precincts, and fully and fairly discussed in the committee, before a conclusion was finally reached?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Several propositions were made and were fully and thoroughly discussed by the members of the committee when it was in session.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to this fifty-second precinct in Kansas City; there was not a judge nor a clerk appointed that the Republican county central committee had asked to have appointed. One T. J. Canney acted as one of the Republican judges at that precinct. He says that a day or two before the election one Findley, a gambler in Kansas City, sent for him, had him come to his house, and interviewed him. In that interview he says Findley revealed to him that they desired and intended to perpetrate certain frauds at the election; he said that they intended to cast 700 fraudulent votes in the First Ward of Kansas City; 1,500 fraudulent votes in the Second Ward, and I forget how many were to be cast in other places, including the fifty-second precinct.

Findley told Canney that it had been left to him to select the Republican judges at that precinct, and that he wanted him to act in that capacity, promising that if he would consent and would act in concert with the other judges he should have the sum of $50, and after the election he would be appointed to a position in the city government, where he would draw $125 a month. Canney agreed to this, and Findley told him to present himself to Mr. Owsley, who would appoint him as one of the judges of election in the fifty-second precinct and would give him his credentials. Canney did so, and he was appointed and acted as a judge.

After the excitement in Kansas City had reached a high pitch he came to the conclusion that he had better make a clean breast of the whole affair, and he telegraphed to the governor of Missouri that enormous frauds had been perpetrated, and requested him to withhold certificates of election from certain officers in Jackson County, this Congressional district being composed of two counties, Jackson and Lafayette. He went to Jefferson City and interviewed the governor, and the governor withheld the certificates of election and positively refused to issue them. The governor went to Kansas City, if I remember correctly, and made some investigation upon his own account, and so great was the demand that there should be an extra session of the legislature to repeal this vicious election law that the governor granted the request and called an extra session, and the legislature repealed the law.

The governor believed Mr. Canney, and, upon investigation, withheld the certificates of election and positively refused to issue them, a thing which in law he probably had no right to do. Nevertheless, he did positively refuse to issue the certificates to the men who, upon the face of the returns, had been elected as prosecuting attorney and as marshal in that county. Now, this man Canney says that after getting his appointment from Owsley he presented himself early in the morning, about 5 o'clock, certainly before 6.30, at the polling place; that he soon thereafter saw Findley and others there, who it has been shown were active participants in the perpetration of these frauds.

This same gambler that had told Canney that Owsley would appoint him by his request was there, and he dictated how the board should be organized at that precinct. He had there a man by the name of Morrison, alias Moses. The man appears by both names in the record, but I do not know which one is correct, or whether either one is his real name. He was there as the chief manager after the board was organized, but before the board was organized this man Morrison took from his pocket a cake of soap and went to the window and soaped every window in the little wooden building where the election was held, so that no one could see into it from the outside. It was a small building that had previously been used as a kind of warehouse, and it had bins for storing grain.

These bins were open. There was a door and a large glass window in front, and a window and door in the rear of the building. The building was some 20 or 30 feet long, a little wooden structure. Morrison carefully soaped all the windows. Canney says that after the polls had opened he noticed Findley coming and holding secret conversations with this man Morrison in the polling place. He also noticed other ward heelers doing the same thing. Other members of that election board have sworn that Findley and other men came there and held whispered conversations with Morrison. All of which appears in the record.

Canney says that the counting judges took the table and the ballot boxes from which they made the count back into one of these bins and did their counting there. Canney says that he went to dinner at the noon hour, and was gone about forty minutes, and that when he came back he found these counting judges had taken from the ballots that had been counted 115 straight Republican tickets, and had 115 straight Democratic tickets, which they proposed to substitute for the others, with the initials of the judges of election written on them, and with the registration numbers and the voting numbers which had been transferred from the straight Republican votes to the straight Democratic votes; that the Republican votes which had been abstracted from the ballot box were placed in a lunch basket and covered up; that the Democratic votes were strung upon a string and returned with the ballot box as a part of the returns of that election precinct, and that the tally sheets were made to correspond therewith.

Not only that, but later in the day they removed 55 more straight Republican votes from the ballot box and substituted 55 straight Democratic votes and returned them also. Not only that, but about the time the polls were closed they had prepared some twenty-five or thirty more straight Democratic votes which they proposed to substitute, but somebody objected and said they did not believe the box would stand it; and consequently they did not put those 25 Democratic votes in, but removed some twenty-five or thirty Republican votes; and these, with the Democratic votes, were rolled up in a bundle and thrown aside; and after the count was completed and when the board were about leaving the place, this man Morrison put those votes in his overcoat pocket and carried them away.

Now, it is important to remember here the 25 votes that were prepared at that time to be substituted, but which were not. How easy it would have been after the vote had been returned to the recorder of voters for this man who was the chief leader in this conspiracy to commit fraud and have those votes substituted. Canney says that these votes, which were placed in a lunch basket, were afterwards carried away; that a man, whose name I forget, came to the door and called for the lunch basket; that it was handed out to him, and that he took it away.

I know that the minority of this committee and that the contestee will claim upon the floor of this House that there is no evidence to corroborate Canney; that his statements are unworthy of belief because he is wholly uncorroborated. But the testimony of some of these very Democratic judges that were appointed in that election does show that a man did come there and carry away that lunch basket just as Canney testifies. Canney says that when the 55 votes were taken out they were rolled up in a bundle. The Australian ballots were cast there, and if I understand aright, the vote made quite a large sheet of paper. If I am not right the gentleman from Missouri who sits near me can correct me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You are correct, sir.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. The vote made a paper half the size of an ordinary newspaper, or nearly that.

Mr. JOY. More than that.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. The testimony of Canney is that they rolled them up together and put them in the stove and burned them up.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit a question? I understood him to say that the testimony of this man Canney was not corroborated.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I said the minority of the committee and the contestee will claim that it is not.

Mr. BRUMM. I want to ask the gentleman whether it was contradicted.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, it was contradicted by certain members of the election board; the contestee called some of them, who denied that these things took place. But some of the very witnesses whom they called admitted that this basket was taken away; admitted that they saw paper put in the stove; that they saw the judge of election whom Canney named putting that paper in the stove; they do not pretend to say what the paper was; but they saw him putting a small bundle of paper in the stove, and I believe, though I am not sure that I recollect it correctly, that one of the judges looked around and complained of the heat made by the burning in the stove of those 55 ballots.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will my colleague on the committee permit me a moment? Does he not remember that there is ample corroborative testimony and that one of the witnesses swears that he say Morrison stuff the ballot box there?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I have not come to that. If the gentleman from Indiana will bear with me in patience I will reach that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I thought the gentleman from Nebraska was about to pass that point.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. No, sir; I have not passed the fifty-second precinct. I am now only showing wherein Canney was corroborated.

Now, another witness came to this polling place. By some accident somebody had removed a particle of the soap from the glass and left a portion of it transparent. This witness looked through that place in the glass and saw this man Morrison grinding votes into the ballot box. They had in Kansas City a kind of device—I do not know whether it is patented or not—by which they grind the votes into the box with a kind of geared machine, the votes, I believe, being stamped "Kansas City" when they go in. This man looked into the polling place. Not a voter was in there. The judges and clerks of the election stood there and saw this man Morrison grinding those votes into the ballot box. The record shows that. It stands here uncontradicted, Morrison himself, I believe, not taking the witness stand to deny it.

Not only that, but a man named Frenkle, who was appointed as a Republican judge, but who had never voted a Republican ticket, except that at the spring election he had voted for the Republican candidate for mayor, took the witness stand. He says he recollects that the distributing judges kept upon their table a very large pile of tickets marked with their initials; that he went to his dinner; was gone a while, and when he came back he noticed that that pile was greatly diminished in size. Canney tells how this was done. They were substituting 115 votes at that time. I ask whether that is not a corroboration of Mr. Canney, positive and direct? So I say that the frauds of that board in that precinct are such that it would be utterly impossible to tell from the ballots themselves by an examination of them whether they were cast honestly or dishonestly; and there is but one way to treat the returns that are made from that voting precinct, and that is to throw them entirely out because of fraud, unless you could call the voters who voted and ask each one how he voted.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman, in that connection, a question with reference to the reports. It seems, upon a hasty reading of the several reports accompanying this case, that there has been a contest of some kind growing out of that election, in which these ballots have been reexamined. It seems to be suggested that the witnesses who examined them could testify as to their condition and number. How about that?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. So far as I know, there has been no examination of the ballots with reference to the election for Member of Congress. It was not a public canvass, but one made by order of the court, and it was made with reference only to the particular office then in controversy before the court.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to what I have already said, Mr. Canney testifies that they also took certain scratched Republican tickets which were cast in that precinct and had certain names scratched from them; that they took these very ballots and scratched off other names. He did not say whether the name of the candidate for Congress was scratched or not, but that they made other scratches than the ones that had been made by the voters themselves upon the tickets. So I say to you gentlemen that it seems to me the frauds perpetrated at this precinct were so glaring at this election and by this particular election board that no man at this time can tell how the people of that precinct voted. The only way you can possibly arrive at it would be to call every man who voted at the election and ask him how he voted. At this time it is not asked for by the other side, and it could not be done with safety.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman allow me just there to ask him if the returns show that more votes were cast at that precinct—that is, that more votes purported to be cast at that precinct—than there were honest, legitimate voters in the precinct?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Well, I do not remember exactly as to that, although I think it is summed up in the report. I am unable to answer as to this particular precinct accurately. In fact, we do not claim so much padded registration in this particular precinct as in the other precincts.

Mr. RAY. Well, did that appear in the other precincts?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, sir.

I will say, however, Mr. Speaker, that in this particular precinct, as I now recall it—the fifty-second precinct—that this board of canvassers found that 90 persons had voted that could not be found in the precinct. They could not find them at all immediately after the election was held.

Mr. HENDERSON. I dislike to interrupt my friend, but hope he will indulge me with another inquiry.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I am very glad to have the gentleman ask me questions.

Mr. HENDERSON. Your very clear presentation of the case is what encourages me to ask further questions with reference to matters of which I am ignorant.

I want to know if there was any sealing of the ballot boxes at the hands of the election officers, as required by law, and before they were turned over to this man Owsley? Was that sealing done the in presence of witnesses or not?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. They are required to seal up the returns and return them to the recorder of voters. I do not know whether the evidence shows that they were sealed or not in this particular precinct.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the law require it to be done in the presence of anybody? Did the evidence show that fact, or was testimony taken upon that point?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I think the judges of election are required to do so by the law. It should be done by the election board; that is my recollection.

Mr. KYLE. That is correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. You do not know how it was done, or the fact that it was done at all?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I think there was no particular inquiry made in regard to that point, because in most instances they would have had to call the men who perpetrated the fraud themselves and who were under indictment for participation in the conspiracy.

Mr. HENDERSON. If they were sealed they might have been sealed after the election, and the ballots changed then?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was there evidence on this point beyond what you have already referred to?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. I will refer to that later on, after getting through with a review of these different precincts.

Now, with reference to the seventh precinct in the Second Ward: This committee of safety found 270 names registered that could not be located. The vote at this precinct in 1892 for Congressman, when the contestee was a candidate in this precinct, was 243, and of this number Mr. Tarsney, then a candidate, received 53 majority. In the spring of 1894, at the city election, when they voted for mayor, the Democrats had a split in their party, and they nominated two candidates. There were cast in that election, in that precinct, 246 votes, the Republican candidate having a majority of 2 over both the Democratic candidates. At the fall election, the one in controversy here, instead of 246 votes being cast at this precinct, there were 514 votes cast. The contestee received 392 majority over his competitor, the contestant.

Now, I have called your attention to the manner in which this election board in that precinct was constituted. Not a single man whom the Republican county central committee had asked to be appointed was allowed to enter that voting place. Not a challenger or a witness that the Republican county central committee had named was allowed to be within that voting place, but all had been ejected forcibly from it.

One witness, Mr. Corum, says that he went to that polling place about 9 o'clock, that he received from the distributing judges his ballot, that he went into the booth and marked it, came back, and presented it to one of the receiving judges, keeping his eye upon it. He had suspicions of fraud. He watched the ballot and made up his mind he would keep his eye upon it until it went into the ballot box. He noticed that the man who received the ballot was not near the ballot box, but that, sitting off to one side of him, was a man by the ballot box with a ballot in his hand, folded up ready to be cast; that he stayed and kept his eye particularly upon that ballot until the judge who had received it from his hand to put it into the ballot box turned his back to him.

What he did with the ballot this witness does not know, but he looked over to the other man and saw him putting a ballot into the ballot box that he had not received from the judge to whom the witness gave his ballot. He says that he waited a while, and they finally told him, "Your ballot has been cast; get out of here," and ordered him to leave the place, because under the law nobody was allowed to remain except when they were casting their votes excepting the challengers and witnesses and the members of the board of election. They told him to leave, and he did leave without ever having seen his ballot put into this ballot box.

After the election was over Mr. Olson, who, I believe, was chairman of the county central committee, found a ballot under the wooden sidewalk in front of this voting place. They took that ballot, went to the poll book, and found out whose name was opposite the registration number, and the voting number indorsed on the back of the ballot. They found that it was one Peter Green. They showed the ballot to him when he was upon the witness stand, and he said, "That ballot is marked exactly as I marked my ballot." He told how he marked it, giving the particular description of his marks, and he said, "If that is not the ballot that I marked, it is marked exactly as I marked mine."

How did that ballot come under the sidewalk after the election, if it had been honestly cast and kept in that ballot box and counted?

Now, gentlemen, I come to one feature of this case that is admitted by all the members of this committee, and that is that in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts in Kansas City—in each of them—there were 200 fraudulent votes cast. The precincts are all numbered irrespective of the wards, but these precincts numbered 5, 6, and 7 are all in the Second Ward. Nobody disputes but that there were 200 fraudulent ballots put into each of these ballot boxes, and when this committee of safety began to investigate one of the first things they discovered was this fact.

I will ask you to turn to the contestant's brief, because that is more convenient to handle than this big fine-print record. On page 27 you will see how this voting was done. Bradbury tells you that he and Pierce, who had charge of the street gangs of colored men, took them on Saturday night, week after week, and registered them at Owsley's office. Bradbury also tells you that he went to one of the wards at one time when they were registering in the wards—because the law provides that at certain times the registration shall be carried on at the wards—Bradbury says that at one time, when he took his gang to register them, the clerk there objected. Bradbury sent for May, who was the street commissioner and one of the chief conspirators in these election frauds. May said that he would see Owsley about it. Bradbury says that he telephoned for Owsley. Owsley came down there, and he explained to him that his deputy, or clerk, refused to register these men. They were being fraudulently registered, as Bradbury knew, and as this clerk knew. Owsley had a conversation with his clerk, and then the men were registered all right, and from that time on he had no trouble in getting his men registered at this registering place.

This brief shows you on page 27 how these names that had been fraudulently entered upon the registration lists were voted. They had registered from vacant lots, from railroad yards, from empty buildings, and from places occupied by people who came on the witness stand afterwards and swore that no such people had ever been in those places. You will see that in the seventh precinct, or at least in one of the precincts—in the fifth, I believe—after they commenced to vote, it was a very accommodating election board, if these were true voters, and that the voters were the most accommodating class of people that ever attended an election, because they arranged themselves in alphabetical order.

Fifty-nine of them came up in the first place, and No. 1 upon the registration list was John Alexander. John Alexander, Frank Allen, Albert Anderson, Charles Anderson, Leo N. Armeston, George Atchison, Frank Basil, James Beard, Henry E. Bell, John Beverly, Edward Black, Charles Blakey, William Boone, William Bradley, Samuel Brosius, James Brown, James W. Brown, John W. Brown, Samuel Brown, James Buchanan, Robert Burchy, and so on, down until we reach the letter "P," when 59 of them had voted in regular alphabetical order, and every one of them colored men, and so they are marked upon the poll books.

A similar course was pursued in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts in the first 200 names presented there to be voted. So I say that, under the evidence in this case, this ballot box is so polluted with fraud that you can not tell anything about how many honest votes are in it or how many dishonest. A man swears that he stood there and saw them substitute another vote for his. Another vote that was intended to be put in the ballot box there was found under the sidewalk, and 200 votes had been stuffed into this ballot box of men who did not present themselves at all at the election; so that it is so tainted with fraud that it is absolutely impossible to know what this election board did, or to separate the honest from the fraudulent votes.

Not only that, but there is testimony in this record showing that, in addition to these 200 names, they took the registration list, and when they found the name of a man who had not voted they put a straight Democratic ballot in the box and marked the word "Voted" opposite his name. When some of them subsequently presented themselves they looked at the registration list and told them they had voted. Even this man Bradbury was treated in that way. He was a colored man, the editor of a Democratic newspaper, employed by or at least under the supervision, I believe, of the Democratic State central committee in that election, and made speeches in the State of Missouri in the interest of the Democratic party. He says he went to vote, and when he got there and asked for a ticket they looked at the registration list and said, "You have voted." He said, "I understood it and went away, knowing that they had voted my name." Just so with others when they presented themselves at these different precincts. So I say that it is utterly impossible to separate the fraudulent from the honest votes in this precinct, and the only way to treat it is to throw it all out and call the voters, and that is not proposed by contestee.

Now, as to the sixth precinct. You remember that in the testimony of Bradbury that has already been read he said there were certain names—nearly 200 of them—transferred from the fifth to the sixth precinct. Now, gentlemen of this House, aye, gentlemen of the minority of this committee, do you believe that Mr. Owsley or his clerks could sit in their office and transfer nearly 200 names—I believe it is 190, or something like that—from the fifth precinct to the sixth precinct without knowing that there was something fraudulent about it? Bradbury tells you they came to him at one time for the names of the men who had registered, as he kept a list of them in a book. He gave them these names and found they were transferred. He swore that he gave the names, I think, of 190—I do not remember the number, but a very large number of them at least—that were transferred from the fifth to the sixth precinct. They had not padded this precinct at the time, when they were making up this registration list, prior to the city election in 1894, because there was a councilman in that precinct that they were afraid of, and so it only affected the fifth and seventh precincts.

Then it appears from the evidence that the canvassers that went out under the committee of safety found 341 men marked as having voted in this sixth precinct who could not be found within two weeks after the election. Persons who had lived long in the community where they were registered knew nothing about many of such men. Others had been dead for months and years. Some of them had removed and been absent from the precinct a long time. Others were marked "voted" who were not present; and you can take the testimony in this case and find men who swore that they were not at the election at all and never did vote. That was true also in the seventh precinct. Seven or eight men, I believe it was, from the seventh precinct, opposite whose names "voted" was placed, stated that they were not at the election. I may be wrong as to the number, but they said they were not at that election and did not vote.

If these election boards were organized for the purpose of perpetrating these frauds in the interest of the Democratic party, the presumption, it seems to me, must be that they cast these votes for Mr. Tarsney. I ask you, gentlemen, if you can separate the honest from the dishonest votes in that ballot box? In this sixth precinct in the fall of 1892, when the contestee was a candidate for Congress, 155 votes were cast. Of this number, Mr. Tarsney had a plurality of 62, I believe. In the spring of 1894, when there were two Democratic candidates for mayor, there were cast 188 votes. One of the Democrats received but a few votes, and the Republican candidate carried the ward by a plurality of 16.

In the fall of 1894, at the election now in controversy, there were cast in that precinct, where two years before there were 155 votes and where in the spring of 1894 there were 188 votes—in that same precinct, at the Congressional election in 1894, there were cast 509 votes, of which Mr. Tarsney received 420 and Mr. Van Horn 84 and the Independent candidate 5; and Mr. Tarsney's plurality over Mr. Van Horn was 336. In this precinct the same kind of alphabetical voting was done to the extent of 200 votes. They also substituted votes, as shown by the record.

Take, now, the fifth precinct. There were cast there at the election of 1892 for Congressman 351 votes—that is the total vote for all candidates. In the spring of 1894 there were cast 371 votes. At the Congressional election six months later there were cast 621 votes, or nearly twice as many as were cast at the spring election. Of these 621 votes Mr. Tarsney received 413, Mr. Van Horn 201, and the Independent candidate 7. It is claimed that in this precinct Mr. Van Horn got a portion of the fraudulent votes, which we do not deny. There were probably 100 or 101 of these alphabetical votes that may have been cast for Mr. Van Horn, but the only evidence we have of that is testimony put in here by the contestee in the form of an affidavit without an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses.

Mr. MAGUIRE. We want to give you an opportunity, though.

Mr. RAY. I will ask the gentleman if there is any evidence that the population in that precinct had not doubled up during those six months?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. There is no evidence showing that there is any increase in population, but, on the contrary, I think the evidence shows, by the testimony of the man who now fills the place of the registrar of voters—he is not the registrar, but one of the commissioners who has charge of the election—his testimony, I think, shows that there was no particular increase of population during this time.

Mr. RAY. No increase in voters, but a doubling up of votes. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes. Now, Mr. Speaker, I find that I can not go further because I am worn out; but let me say, in conclusion, that it seems to me that the condition of things which existed in these four precincts shows beyond all controversy that it would be utterly impossible to separate the honest from the dishonest votes that were cast in those precincts, and that to open up this case, as is asked by my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], who files a minority report, and by the Democratic members of the committee, would be simply useless. They do not pretend to say that opening up the polls and purging them would show that Mr. Tarsney had a majority of the votes.

Throwing out these four precincts alone shows conclusively that Mr. Van Horn was elected by between 300 and 400 majority over Mr. Tarsney; but these four precincts are not the only ones where fraud was committed. Since the testimony in this case closed the contestant has gone to the poll lists and he finds as to other precincts where Mr. Owsley refused to allow Republican challengers or witnesses and refused to appoint any of the Republicans selected by the Republican central committee for judges or clerks, that there were in some of those precincts, or at least in one of them, 80 votes voted alphabetically——

Mr. MAGUIRE. Does that appear in the evidence before the House?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That appears from the evidence submitted for the purpose of opening up the case to take further testimony.

Mr. MAGUIRE. In what form?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. In the form of the certified records themselves.

Mr. MAGUIRE. In the form of an affidavit, is it not?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. No; not in the form of an affidavit; in the form of the certified records themselves, though, of course, there may be some question as to the admissibility of that evidence.

Mr. MAGUIRE. They do not now constitute any part of the evidence in this case except upon an ex parte showing.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Only upon the question of opening up the case again.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Nebraska. They are a part of the evidence in this case.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. They were submitted as docu mentary evidence to the committee?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. TAYLER. They are not in the case.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. They are in the case.

Mr. PAYNE. They were submitted to the committee in response to the affidavits submitted by the contestee for reopening the case?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. That is right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I beg the gentleman's pardon, for we do not want to have any misunderstanding. They were all offered as evidence in the case, and claimed as such by the counsel of the contestant who offered them.

Mr. PAYNE. It is sufficient for me that they were admitted for the other purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I call the attention of the gentleman from California to this fact: There was a question raised whether or not they were proper to be submitted at that time; it was stated that there was a difference in the authorities upon that question, some holding that they ought to have been offered when the evidence was taken and others holding that documentary evidence might be offered at that time.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I am perfectly satisfied to adopt the rule suggested, if you will allow documentary evidence for Tarsney to be introduced in the same way as that for Van Horn. If you are going to admit documentary evidence for Van Horn at this time, why not allow similar evidence to be presented by Tarsney?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. We are not proposing, as the gentleman appears to intimate, one rule for the contestant and another for the contestee. We are not willing to inflict upon Mr. Tarsney any disadvantage which is not also inflicted upon Mr. Van Horn.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I say that Mr. Tarsney desires now to go to the ballots which can be reached. They are documentary evidence. I can not understand why he should not put in his documentary evidence, if Mr. Van Horn is permitted to put in the poll lists.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There is no analogy at all. This evidence on behalf of Mr. Van Horn was offered as part of the original case. Mr. Tarsney now proposes to go down into the ballot boxes and offer their contents in evidence.

Mr. MAGUIRE. But when did Mr. Van Horn offer these poll books?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. He offered them before the committee.

Mr. MAGUIRE. When we took charge of the case here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What is the difference? They are competent evidence whenever introduced.

Mr. MAGUIRE. But Mr. Tarsney wanted to go to the ballot boxes after that, and it was held that it was too late for him to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There is no analogy at all between the two cases; I think if the gentleman will reflect a moment he will see there is none. One proposition was simply to offer the poll books, which are competent evidence at any time; the other proposition is to go down into the ballot boxes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I do not care to continue the discussion now; we are occupying too much of the time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE]. I will answer the gentleman when I come to occupy the floor.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons than those I have stated why these ballots, if they were examined, are unworthy of credit. There was a contested election in the month of March following this election; and these ballot boxes were gone into at that time under an order of the court.

A MEMBER. These same ballots?

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. The very same ballots. At that election candidates ran for the office of marshal in Jackson County and also for prosecuting attorney. The election for those offices was afterwards contested, I believe, and when the contest occurred in March, with reference to the office of marshal, that was the first time that these ballots were ever examined after the election. It was done under an order of court. It was not a public examination, but was made by persons appointed to make it. These ballots were examined. Mr. Owsley, I believe, had been removed from office at that time. I am not sure, but I think he had. He was out of office. Another person or board had been appointed, who took control of these election returns. When these ballot boxes were examined, one from the fifth precinct was found open, unsealed, the ballots unstrung, with perforations in them showing that they had at one time been strung, showing that somebody had tampered with the ballot box after the election. I read from the affidavit of Mr. Sloan, who was the contestant in that contested-election case:

Affiant further states that said Charles S. Owsley was recorder of voters a Kansas City for about four years prior to February 1, 1895, at which date he was succeeded by H. C. Arnold; that said forgeries were first made known to affiant and the public by publication in the morning papers on the day after the votes were officially canvassed, to wit, the 12th of November, 1894; that affiant at once went to the recorder of voters' office for the purpose of inspecting the returns so forged.

Remember, now, that one of the voting lists was to be locked up in the ballot box, and the other to be returned to the recorder of voters and to be open to the inspection of anyone who had a right to examine it.

Affiant further states that said Charles S. Owsley was recorder of voters at Kansas City for about four years prior to February 1, 1895, at which date he was succeeded by H. C. Arnold; that said forgeries were first made known to affiant and the public by publication in the morning papers on the day after the votes were officially canvassed, to wit, on the 12th day of November, 1894. That affiant at once went to the recorder of voters' office for the purpose of inspecting the returns so forged, but that the recorder of voters was absent from his office and continued so absent for several days, and his clerks and deputies refused to allow this affiant to inspect said returns, although the courts of the State of Missouri have frequently decided, and it was admitted by said recorder of voters and his deputies, that said returns were public documents and entitled to be inspected at all reasonable times by any person interested therein. That about the third day after the forgeries were exposed affiant was able to find said recorder of voters and demand an inspection of said forged and altered returns from him personally. That the said recorder of voters also then refused and declined to show the same to the affiant or his attorneys.

Not only that, but further on he says:

That in making such recount it was discovered that affiant's name had been stricken off the Republican ticket and the name of his opponent, Keshlear, written in its place on a number of tickets in five or six different precincts, and that these changes were all apparently made in the same handwriting, and the initials of the judges on these ballots where the changes appeared were apparently in a different handwriting from the initials of the judges on the other ballots, thus showing that these changes must have been made after the ballots were in the hands of the recorder of voters. That some of the changes were made in ballots purported to be cast by personal friends of this affiant, who have since told affiant that the changes were forgeries.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, if it will not consume too much of the time of the other members of the committee, I send to the desk and ask to have read, as part of my remarks, the affidavit of Wallace G. Miller, a clerk of election at the sixth precinct. Since that election he has been convicted or plead guilty, I forget which, and is under a penitentiary sentence. Since his conviction he made a confession, which was offered in evidence before the committee in opposition to the reopening of the case to take further testimony. If you will listen to that affidavit and consider the facts in the case as I have narrated them, and as they are found in the record, I have no doubt as to what your just conclusion will be in the case. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of Jackson, ss:

This affiant, Wallace G. Miller, being duly sworn on his oath, says that he was one of the judges of election at the sixth precinct of the Second Ward in Kansas City, Mo., at the election held November 6, 1894. That on the night before said election affiant was given a package containing about 600 to 800 official ballots by a then Democratic city official of said Kansas City, who was a very active supporter and partisan of the Democratic ticket, including the candidate for Congress, John C. Tarsney. Said city official instructed affiant to give said ballots to John May, who, he said, would know what to do with them. Shortly afterwards, on the same night, John May came to the drug store (Krueger's), where these ballots were delivered to affiant, and said ballots, together with the poll books of the sixth and seventh precincts of said Second Ward, were taken into a back room in said drug store, where about 400 of them were fixed up as straight Democratic tickets, except justice of the peace and constable, John C. Tarsney's name for Congress being upon all of them.

These ballots were all numbered, and then the poll books for these two precincts, the sixth and seventh, were taken up and certain names on them were numbered to correspond with the names on the ballots. We selected colored names in the sixth precinct because they were known to be mostly fictitious, and besides, if a genuine name should be marked, the fraud would not so likely be discovered, as colored men can not usually read or write, and they would not therefore discover that their names had been marked "voted" should they come in to vote. I attended to marking the names and fixing the ballots for the sixth precinct with the help of a man named Lewis, also a judge of the election. He left the country and went to Cuba immediately after the election. Delany and Ambrose Clark fixed the books and the ballots for the seventh precinct. We were the judges who were to put our initials on the back of the ballots. We were all there together in the back room. John May and George J. Pearce, the Democratic committeemen, were there with us superintending the job.

The fifth precinct was also fixed, but I know nothing about that. That was not fixed in the drug store, but Pearce took the necessary ballots and the poll books for this precinct over to a room above Moran's saloon, and the fifth precinct was fixed up there. I don't know how the ballots for this fifth precinct were marked, as I had nothing to do with that. We also had the lids to the ballot boxes with us and ran the ballots through the patent device in these lids, so as to make them show they had been through the box. The bogus ballots were all kept in Moran's safe the night before the election, and the next morning I got those we had fixed up for the sixth precinct. George Pearce got those for the seventh, and I don't know who got those for the fifth. I got to the polls a few minutes before 6 o'clock, and had these ballots with me, and shortly after the ballots were opened I slipped them into the box at two different times. I remained in the polling place all day, not even going out for meals.

During the entire day we kept fixing straight Democratic tickets except justice and constable and stuffing them in the box. John May came in as often as half a dozen times urging us to do this. He said for us to vote every name on the books, but I told him I was afraid it wouldn't do, so we left a few unvoted. We must have voted something over a hundred during the day, in addition to those fixed up the night before. There were no fraudulent votes for any Republican candidates except justice and constable. Some spoiled tickets were, during the counting, thrown away and straight Democratic tickets (except justice and constable) were put in the box in their place. The constable names was left off in many instances. Brennan was not on as many fraudulent votes as Kreuger. About a week or ten days after the election John May asked me if there were any unused ballots left over in the sixth precinct. I told him then that I thought there was. He told me to get them if I could. I went to the polling place and found some 200 or 300 unused ballots and took them and gave them to May. When I gave them to him he said he might need me in connection with these ballots; that he would let me know. In a few days I saw him again, and he said he did not need me, as my precinct, the sixth, was all right. He did not say what he wanted me to do, but as I am one of the judges who had put my initials on the ballots I inferred he wanted me to put my initials on some of the ballots, for the purpose of further fraud of some kind with the ballots in the recorder's office.

I was also a judge of election in the fifth precinct at the city election in 1894 and at the general election in the fall of 1892. At both these elections there was much fraudulent voting in the fifth precinct. Cooper's vote for mayor was largely fraudulent, and so was Tarsney's vote for Congress in 1892. It was done mostly by repeaters during the day, but we put some in after the polls were closed.

I have been convicted for my part in this business and I make this affidavit freely and voluntarily so as to repair if possible some of the evil I may have done.

Mr. TAYLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not long abuse the patience of the House by discussing the question that is now presented to it. It is with very great reluctance that I oppose, on the floor of the House, the action of my Republican colleagues on the committee in refusing to take certain testimony calculated to purge of their fraud the election returns from certain precincts in Kansas City. I am not one of those who prefer to be alone rather than with the majority, and the strength of my conviction is made especially manifest to myself by the mere fact that I am willing to stand here and assert it.

Now, I trust that this House has not been led away from the real question in controversy by the very lucid and satisfactory explanation of the facts surrounding the election in Kansas City to which we have just listened. For it will be borne in mind that it is but a narrow question that this House is first called upon to consider. It should be especially borne in mind that the report of this committee, by its specific bounds, limits its conclusions to an examination of the returns from precincts 5, 6, 7, and 52 in the city of Kansas City, and all that has been said relating to the character and scope of the fraud that prevailed in those precincts is, for the purposes of this inquiry, to be considered as relating only to those precincts.

Now, with respect to those returns, the majority of the committee in its wisdom has been compelled to resort to the drastic method of striking out the entire returns from those precincts and declaring that they are to be entirely disregarded. With their conclusion in that respect I find myself unable to agree, for I assert, after a most careful and conscientious consideration of the facts, especially as bearing upon the propriety of excluding these returns, that in my judgment there is nothing that can justify this House, that can justify especially a Republican House of Representatives, in throwing out entire precincts and disfranchising honest voters.

The question as to who shall or who shall not occupy a seat in this body is a very large and important question, but large and important as it is it is dwarfed into relative insignificance by the principle which is here sought to be expressed.

By what I make bold to call an unhappy provision of our Constitution, this House is made the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. This House, which in its very nature is a partisan body, is, under certain circumstances, created a judicial body. It is made a judicial body to pass upon questions which are, in their very essence, party questions. In the Constitution it is made a judge to sit in cases where, of all conceivable cases, it is least fit to sit as judge. This is a circumstance full of meaning and instruction. It means that a course of conduct which a purely judicial body may pursue with perfect propriety may, in a legislative body seeking to act judicially, degenerate into a mere partisan expression of partisan judgment; and this can never do justice or command respect.

This body, legislative as it is, undertaking at this moment to act judicially, owes itself the duty of exhausting every means within its power to present itself to the world as doing justice in a judicial way, and this majority owes to itself the duty of protecting itself, in so far as it may, from the demoralizing influence of its own partisanship.

The principle of law upon whose proper application this committee is divided is that where the returns from any election precinct are so tainted with fraud that a substantially true statement of the honest vote can not be made, then the entire return must be disregarded, even though it disfranchises honest voters. This is a bald statement of the naked principle. It is subject to many qualifications, and ought to be somewhat amplified.

For instance, if it be possible to determine the scope and character of the fraud, if it be possible to measure and appraise the fraud, if it be possible to separate the good from the bad, to determine the honest vote and eliminate the dishonest vote, then the return is said to be purgable; and it is the duty of the body charged with investigating that election to so purge the tainted return.

And it is not necessary that the judging body shall be able to declare to itself "it is absolutely certain that we can purge this return of its fraud." The legislative body owes itself a higher duty than that, which I will advert to in a moment. If it is possible to purge the return, that furnishes the test of the propriety of an endeavor by the body having it in charge to thus make the effort.

Now, while upon this case, as contained within the pages of this printed record, I can not withhold my assent from the judgment of the majority that the contestant is entitled to a seat in this body, yet I did indulge the hope that the conclusion of the committee might be founded upon a fuller development of the very remarkable facts that have come to our attention. It is indeed unfortunate that where the amplest opportunity was presented and is presented to this committee to obtain definite knowledge, yet that it saw fit to waive away the proffer of that knowledge and to decline the service of that knowledge. It is not enough for the committee to say, as it has said, that it can find, here or there, circumstances that seem to be unexplainable. It is enough to inquire whether or not there is an opportunity presented by means of which it can make an honest effort to determine whether or not this return can be purged.

I need only detain the House a moment by any reference to the facts. That fraud, widespread and far reaching, was committed in Kansas City as the fruit and result of a gigantic conspiracy is absolutely unquestioned by anybody who knows anything about this case. The only question, in my judgment, is whether this House will undertake to do a righteous thing in an unrighteous way. The peculiar point of contact, the remarkable circumstance of interest in connection with the case is this—that the scope and extent and character of the fraud are easily defined, necessarily easily defined, because the conspiracy was simple and uncomplicated in its character. I refer now to precincts 5, 6, and 7 with great brevity.

The bottom, the foundation of the whole thing was the padding of the registration lists. Persons entitled to register registered at one central office, and, the time for registration having expired, the recorder of voters or his deputies arranged in alphabetical order all of the registered voters who were entitled to vote in a particular precinct and when the election day came the judge of elections had this precinct registration roll; he had never had any other and never made any other. But when John Smith, for instance, came to vote he was given a ballot that was numbered with the registration number of John Smith and with his voting number. When he voted the number of that vote was placed opposite John Smith's name and the ballot was put into the ballot box.

In the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Seventh Ward the judges of election, disdaining the old-fashioned method of putting in illegal votes and of having repeaters and illegal voters come to the polls to cast their votes, simply took the ballots themselves and bodily projected them into the ballot box, and, by a similar process, marked "voted" opposite the names of those utterly fictitious voters, as the law required that the word "voted" should be so recorded. Now, this conspiracy was easy of execution under the plan which was adopted, with a corrupt recorder of voters, if you please, under a scheme whereby only complacent Republicans or Democrats masquerading as Republicans should be judges and clerks. With the exclusion of Republican watchers and challengers it was perfectly easy for these judges to carry out that conspiracy which they had organized to put into the ballot box as many illegal votes as they pleased. The whole basis and foundation, however, was the padded registration roll.

It was necessary that the conspiracy by its own limitation should end with the casting and counting of the illegal votes. If there was ever a ballot tampered with afterwards it was as an afterthought. It was not and could not have been a part of the original conspiracy, for the law of Missouri required that these ballots so cast, counted, marked, and identified, and always identifiable, with the poll book and tally sheet should be filed in a public office in that State, so that if a contest should ever happen the validity and honesty of an election could be determined by ascertaining whether or not there was fraud in tampering with the ballots while they were in the office of the custodian of ballots. So that necessarily the limit of this conspiracy was with the casting and counting of illegal votes corresponding to the fraudulent and fictitious registration.

Now, the proof before the committee showed, as has been stated by my colleague on the committee, that in these precincts the first 200 votes were not cast at all. They were the names of fictitious persons put on the registration list, corruptly voted alphabetically, and corresponding to the ballot numbers. There were perhaps as many as 600 in all in these three precincts whose names appear in alphabetical order on these lists. In addition to this, a thorough examination of the voting list for these three precincts uncovered every other illegal name for which a ballot was voted; so that to-day we have here in this House a record of the names of every illegal and fictitious voter in whose name or for whom a ballot was cast in these precincts in Kansas City in November, 1894. And more than that, we know, unless this contention of my friend that the ballots have been tampered with be true, that now on file in the recorder of voters' office in Kansas City are the votes, each one numbered to correspond with the voting number of those known illegal and fictitious voters, amounting to, say, 900 in these three precincts; and if we have the name of John Smith, who we know had no right to vote, and find that he was No. 251, on the tally list, and we go to the ballot and we find ballot 251 we know that was cast fraudulently by John Smith, and we know for whom that ballot was cast.

Now, the committee was confronted with this condition of things: Practically all the fraud perpetrated in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts was expressed, and necessarily expressed, in the way in which I have indicated; expressed by the padded registration list and by votes agreeing with those names in the book, and by counting those ballots honestly, because they had to be preserved and had to be turned in to the recorder of voters. I say that practically all of the frauds that were perpetrated in those three precincts were perpetrated in that way. So that, as I said a moment ago, the committee was confronted with all this evidence and with this question: Ought it to pursue the arbitrary, drastic method of throwing out the entire returns from the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts? This would have been absolutely unavoidable with an ordinary election law, under which the ballots were not preserved and identified. Or, did not the facts that these ballots were preserved, that substantially all the fraud complained of consisted in voting on the basis of this padded registration roll, and that we knew for whom each ballot was cast and by whom it was cast—did not these facts and circumstances present a case where the committee might, with reasonable accuracy, proceed to purge the returns of their taint and, separating from the honest vote the dishonest vote, record those that had a right to be cast and discard those that were fraudulent?

The committee decided against that. They said that was unwise. Why? Why, because, first, there were some other frauds. Well, there was some other fraud besides that which I have described; but no gentleman on the floor of this House will put himself on record as saying that the fraud perpetrated on election day in Kansas City, exclusive of that which pertained to the padded registration roll and the illegal voters, was sufficient to taint the entire return and compel us to disregard the whole vote. And yet if we can purge one thing, and all that is left is not sufficient to fatally taint the poll, then what is our duty? It is to purge so far as we may, and do as well as we can with respect to that which can not be purged.

The other objection is that these ballots, having passed through corrupt hands, are now fatally tainted. I want to address myself for a moment to that proposition. There is not a line of testimony in the record or out of it, by the oral evidence of witness or by ex parte affidavit here, that can lead any man to believe that the ballots to-day on file in Kansas City differ as regards the Congressional election in any respect whatever from the ballots which were fraudulently created and counted and turned in to the recorder of voters on the night of election. That is to say, the ballots, though speaking lies, speak to-day precisely the same lies they spoke on the night of the election. One reason for that conclusion I have already given, that the nature of the Kansas City election law placed its own limitation upon the scope and character of this conspiracy and of these frauds, and that the conspiracy did not contemplate passing an inch beyond the counting of the illegal votes, because no man intended to preserve and perpetuate the definite and damning proof of his own fraud. But, in the next place, we have here in testimony the confessions of I know not how many conspirators who have unbosomed themselves without stint, without limit; they tell us all that was done in so far as they have knowledge of it, and not one of them intimates, suggests, or raises a suspicion that any fraud of a character necessary to taint these ballots was contemplated or was carried out.

In the next place, I trust that gentlemen on this floor will not confuse the character of manipulation of ballots and tampering with them which is referred to in an affidavit or two here with the kind of manipulation or the kind of tampering with ballots that would be necessary to discredit the ballots that are now in controversy. Remember that in the cases referred to the tally sheets were changed, and the vote as promulgated on the night of the election was different from the vote as promulgated by the recorder of voters and his deputies. More than that, the peculiar, cumbrous, and awkward fraud that was perpetrated at that time, whenever it was, was promptly discovered. Now, it is insisted that, knowing what the vote was that was promulgated on the night of election, so far as the vote for member of Congress was concerned, the ballots must conform to that vote, and that among those ballots in the Second Ward there were over 900 illegal ones cast in the names of persons whose names we know—it is insisted that by some sort of jugglery, by some sort of legerdemain which would have done honor to Hermann himself, they were manipulated and a change was made on the face of those ballots by which an honest Republican Van Horn ballot was turned into a dishonest, fictitious vote for Van Horn, giving the honest voter's vote to Tarsney! I say that that involved such a cumbrous operation, not at all within the line of the original conspiracy, the like of which is not suggested or intimated by any other witness or by anybody who confesses to have taken part in these frauds, that it seems impossible to conceive that anyone has undertaken to carry it out.

Mr. HENDERSON. If these judges and the chief conspirator, Owsley, find themselves under attack by Congress, and I should suppose by grand juries, these men still having the control, would you feel safe, after a year has elapsed, they being under fire and being in control, to risk your rights upon the reopening of that box, even if the necessary fraud was a little cumbersome?

Mr. TAYLER. I am glad the gentleman has made that inquiry. I was about coming to a point that I wanted to make in answer to the suggestion that lies behind the gentleman's inquiry. In the first place, this corrupt recorder of voters went out of office about two months after the election and has not been in control of the ballots since that time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Owsley?

Mr. TAYLER. Yes, Owsley. He has not been in control of the ballots since that time. They have been in honest hands since some time in January, 1895. In the next place, while there was a good deal of talk there about fictitious voters and about the padding of registration lists, the proof of this padding and of this illegal alphabetical voting was unknown certainly until May, 1895, four or five months after Owsley had gone out of office; and therefore there was nothing serious in the atmosphere to suggest to Mr. Owsley—certainly not as to the Congressional matter—that he was likely to be soon in the midst of a storm center that would break upon his devoted head. Whatever thought of change would spring into a man's mind would not have come to it until after the public discovery was announced of the fact that there had certainly been illegal voting there.

Mr. CROWTHER. Was not the "storm center" around Mr. Owsley's office immediately after the promulgation of the vote on the 7th day of November?

Mr. TAYLER. Oh, there never was an hour from the day of the election down to the present hour when the storm center has not been brewing in Kansas City, and rightly so.

Mr. CROWTHER. Was not that the period of the organization of the committee of seventy?

Mr. TAYLER. The gentleman, I fear, has not read this record with care. There never was any excitement in Kansas City on the subject of the Congressional election. It was larger game, from their standpoint, that they were striking for. It was the election of a public prosecutor and of a marshal. They wanted nobody to have charge of the prosecution of criminals who would prosecute criminals.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. One question, with the gentleman's permission. From the investigation he has made of the evidence actually in the record, has he been able to come to any conclusion in whose interest this fraud in the election for Congress was perpetrated? If so, in whose interest does he believe it to have been committed?

Mr. TAYLER. All that I know with any degree of absolute certainty is this: That the only person for whom a special, defined, accentuated effort was made to cast illegal votes for Congress was the contestant, Mr. Van Horn. It is absolutely certain that Mr. Tarsney was the beneficiary of most of the illegal votes that were cast in Kansas City. That is incontestible.

A MEMBER. Do you mean Mr. Tarsney?

Mr. TAYLER. Yes, I mean the contestee. I retract nothing that I have said. I say that the only clearly defined evidence that any candidate for Congress got illegal votes by any special effort is that the contestant got them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. TAYLER. Now let me go on. I do not like to be interrupted when I am undertaking to explain a particular point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLER. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman in a moment. I have been interrupted upon this point and must first answer it. I must take the liberty of declining to answer the gentleman's question just now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I shall not interrupt the gentleman against his wish.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman answer me a question simply for information, because if he is right in his position I want to know it?

Mr. TAYLER. Certainly I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. To what testimony does the gentleman now allude?

Mr. TAYLER. I am going to talk about that at this very moment. The contestee, as I said a moment ago, was undoubtedly the beneficiary of practically all the illegal votes cast in Kansas City. We know that, not because he is the contestee or because he knew anything about it. Whether he did or did not, is not a subject that is worth inquiring about at this moment. But we know that the illegal voting was done in the main for the benefit of the Democratic ticket, and Mr. Tarsney, as one of the men on that ticket, received his share, save only in precinct No. 5 of Ward 2, where, out of a total vote of 201, given to the contestant, Mr. Van Horn, 137 were in excess of his party strength. Every other man on the Republican ticket got from 64 votes down. Every other Republican on the ticket received in the fifth precinct of Kansas City 64 votes or less, while Mr. Van Horn had 137 more than 64—that is to say, 201.

Now, Mr. Van Horn was undoubtedly entirely innocent of any knowledge as to how that was done or to be done, if it was prearranged. But the fact remains that he did get those votes in excess of his party strength, and that we have affidavits here to the effect that those votes were actually cast and counted for him. We have, I say, no other explicit, defined, accentuated testimony respecting the contestee of the same character as that relating to the contestant; but nevertheless the proof is just as satisfying that the bulk, and I believe practically all, if not every one, of the illegal votes cast in Kansas City were cast for Mr. Tarsney, save only about 137, which may have been cast for the contestant in the fifth precinct of the Second Ward.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, at this point will the gentleman permit a question? Is it not his belief that if his theory is carried out and these ballots examined they will demonstrate the election of Mr. Van Horn?

Mr. TAYLER. Does the gentleman mean if the ballots are counted?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I say, is it not the gentleman's theory that if these ballots are examined as contemplated by him they will show the election of Mr. Van Horn?

Mr. TAYLER. I believe that the momentum of the testimony already before the committee will result in the declaration of Mr. Van Horn's election if these ballots are counted. That is precisely my position. If we believe the testimony that is here, it has a certain drift and tendency from which we may infer certain results. But election-contest cases are not to be decided on inference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, pardon me, one further question.

Mr. TAYLER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It is, then, your belief that the examination of those ballots will reveal the very thing that the committee has reported—the election of Mr. Van Horn?

Mr. TAYLER. That is my hope and expectation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, there were, were there not, 200 fraudulent alphabetical ballots cast in the seventh precinct of the Second Ward?

Mr. TAYLER. Now, the gentleman will not be permitted by me to take new ground. I will not be put on the defensive. I am offensive at this moment. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, the gentleman has not given me any offense.

Mr. TAYLER. The gentleman from Indiana has simply called the attention of the House to a matter to which I referred at the beginning of my remarks, and has planted himself upon untenable ground. I will not take issue with him or undertake to discuss some matter which is not raised by the report of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then the gentleman declines to answer the question, as I understand?

Mr. TAYLER. I will answer any question that raises no fresh issue.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the fact to which I have called your attention with reference to these 200 alphabetical ballots will throw light upon them as to what is proven in the record. Does the gentleman deny that the election of the contestant——

Mr. TAYLER (interrupting). I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not seek to amplify that part of his argument at this time. He will have his own opportunity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the gentleman has stated what the evidence will show with reference to these ballots——

Mr. TAYLER. No, I simply expressed an opinion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. And my question now is, whether it has not been proven, and whether he believes it to be true that there were 200 fraudulent alphabetical ballots cast in the seventh precinct of the Second Ward?

Mr. TAYLER. The gentleman from Indiana knows and has always known that I knew that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Very well, now——

Mr. TAYLER. Well, I decline to be catechised by the gentleman from Indiana from one end of the alphabet to the other.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Of course, if the gentleman declines to answer the question, I will not interrupt him.

Mr. TAYLER. The gentleman understands that I have stated from the beginning of my discussion, and I venture to say with unrestful iteration before the House, that 600 alphabetical votes were illegally cast in the Second Ward, and it is not worth while to stand up here now and consume time or to enable the gentleman from Indiana for some ulterior purpose of his own to secure a repetition of the same statement which I have already admitted.

Mr. RAY. I wish the gentleman from Ohio would permit me a question just here.

Mr. TAYLER. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. I understand from the statements made that during the election while the voting was going on the discovery was made that some gentlemen having charge of the polling places deliberately took from the ballot boxes tickets which had been put in and put others in their places, and it was discovered that they were carried away and presumably destroyed. It was stated, I believe, that they substituted Democratic votes for those taken away. Now, if that was done in one place, presumably it may have been in others. How could you determine, then, by taking the boxes and opening and examining the votes, if your proposition should be adopted, how could you determine with any degree of certainty or fairness who was, in point of fact, elected under those circumstances?

Mr. TAYLER. We could not by any such examination of the ballots purge, in my judgment, the fifty-second precinct, in which the character of conduct the gentleman from New York refers to was carried on. We have the testimony of an eyewitness to that; and while I shall not go into that now, but will at a later period in the discussion, I will refer to it briefly for a moment. We have the testimony of the conspirators in the other precincts, and my discussion is based solely on the four precincts on which the committee bases its conclusion, eliminating and expunging all the others in their argument, and the findings which are embodied in the report, and if we had any such conditions in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts as were discovered in the fifty-second precinct we could not purge them.

Mr. RAY. Then I understand you to substantially concede that it is impossible to avoid throwing out the entire vote in the fifty-second precinct.

Mr. TAYLER. On the contrary, I would not throw it out, and I will convince the gentleman from New York inside of the next ten minutes that he would not be willing to throw it out.

Mr. RAY. I was going on to assume, if the gentleman will permit me, that the statements of your colleague on the committee were true——

Mr. TAYLER. His statements were true.

Mr. RAY. Then I trust you will explain how you can purge these precincts and get at the exact result.

And then another thing that troubles me, that I would like the gentleman to refer to and clear up as he proceeds. As I understand it, this contest arose soon after the election, and both parties to the contest gave evidence and presented their witnesses and made up their case for the action of Congress. Now, Mr. Tarsney must have known before what he says now is so important for the proper consideration of his case. Why is it that he did not at that time in making up his case ask to have the boxes opened, ask to have the votes examined, and ask to have done then what he asks us to do now? If there is any explanation of the matter I hope the gentleman will furnish it for the information of the House.

Mr. TAYLER. I trust that my friend from New York does not imagine that I, as a member of this committee, and charged with the duty especially devolving upon me to justify myself for differing from my Republican colleagues, would come upon the floor of this House without intending to advert to the very propositions to which he has called my attention, and in due time I will come to them.

I was diverted by the interrogatories from the discussion of another reason, which indicates to me that we have no right to say, as a body seeking to do justice, that these ballots are absolutely unreliable, because of the fact that I referred to in another connection a moment ago—that in all the mass of testimony we have here before us, with everything that has been said with respect to tampering with ballots, with the same opportunity to tamper with them in one way as another, perhaps, no one has pretended that a Congressional ballot was tampered with or that the kind of tampering which would be essential to effect anything in this Congressional vote was attempted or carried out by anybody, at any time, in any precinct, with respect to any office. There was a change made, as I said awhile ago, in a tally sheet, and a corresponding change made in certain ballots. That was where the promulgated return on the night of election was found to differ from that which was promulgated by the recorder, and by the erasures, apparent on the face of the papers, the fraud was instantly detected and the truth was arrived at.

And so I say here that if we examine these ballots, if there has been any change made in them that will discredit them for the purposes for which we call upon them—I say that that fact will be instantly discerned and we shall be able to say whether or not they are faithful witnesses of the lies to which they were witnesses in the first instance.

Now, I want to refer right here, and with great brevity, to the principle of law that is applicable to a case of this character. For the sake of convenience I take McCrary. The same doctrine is laid down in Paine, as taken from the reports of our courts and of election committees. That is section 303:

The question under what circumstances the entire poll of an election division may be rejected has been much discussed and conflicting views have been expressed by the courts. The power to reject an entire poll is certainly a dangerous power, and though it belongs to whatever tribunal has jurisdiction to pass upon the merits of a contested-election case, it should be exercised only in an extreme case; that is to say, a case where it is impossible to ascertain with reasonable certainty the true vote.

And on the following page:

Indeed, nothing short of the impossibility of ascertaining for whom the majority of votes were given ought to vacate an election.

Now, a brief extract from the well-known case of Washburn vs. Voorhies, in the Thirty-ninth Congress, quoted with approval by all writers on this subject:

In adopting this rule—

That is, the rule of striking out an entire return—

the committee do not lose sight, however, of the danger which may attend its application. Wholesome and salutary, not less than necessary, in its proper use, it is extremely liable to abuse. Heated partisanship and blind prejudice, as well as indifferent investigation, may, under its cover, work great injustice. It is not to be adopted if it can be avoided. No investigation should be spared that would reach the truth without a resort to it. But it is not to be forgotten or omitted if the case calls for its application. If the fraud be clearly shown to exist to such an extent as to satisfy the mind that the return does not show the truth, and no evidence is furnished by either party to a contest, and no investigation of the committee enable them to deduce the truth therefrom, then no alternative is left but to reject such a return. To use it under such a state of facts is to use as true what is shown to be false.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What section is that?

Mr. TAYLER. That is section 438 of the second edition of McCrary. Now, let me advert to the fifty-second precinct for but a moment.

The compulsion of the logic of the majority report has compelled them in the fifty-second precinct to do the gravest injustice, not to the contestee, but to the contestant. Irrevocably wedded to a certain construction of a principle of law, they have been compelled, in order to be consistent, to throw out the entire return from precinct 52. Let me indicate to what kind of principle and what manner of justice the philosophy of that contention seeks to commit this House.

The majority report, and every member of the majority, give credit to the witness Canney, and I make no complaint and have no quarrel with my friends on that score. The whole fabric of their contention respecting the fifty-second precinct is woven round the witness Canney, whom they believe and credit, and he tells the truth, I hope. Note what they do.

We come now to another qualification of this principle, which the majority report contends is an unqualified principle, and that is that you have no right to assert the doctrine that an entire poll must be rejected if tainted with fraud—if apparent wrong is done to the one who was not a beneficiary of the fraud. By what sort of logic or law is it contended that I, who was standing for an election, receiving 100 votes, and my competitor receiving but 50 votes, shall suffer if, by collusion between the corrupt judges, friends of my competitor, the poll is tainted with fraud. It is known that I got certain votes; by what kind of logic do you justify the expulsion of that return? And look at this case here? Suppose that outside of the fifty-second precinct the contestee had an honest and unquestioned majority of 100.

There is the situation as we come down to the fifty-second precinct. In that precinct a credible and corroborated witness testifies that 170 votes cast for Van Horn were changed to and counted for Tarsney. That is a specific fact in the case. The Tarsney majority in the precinct was 180. The honest majority, if we believe these witnesses—and the majority report does—the honest majority in that precinct was at least 160 for Van Horn. Are you going to disregard the returns from the fifty-second precinct? Are you going to throw it out? And in the case which I took as an illustration, are you going to justify the unseating of a man that you know is elected and seat a man that you know is not elected? But that is where the majority of this committee, in order to be consistent, in order to stand by this sacred and revered principle, must plant themselves or be wrong. The principle is not invoked, and was not created to do wrong when you see that you can make visible and apparent the wrong.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman believe with respect to the fifty-second precinct, Ninth Ward, that it should be counted 160 for Van Horn?

Mr. TAYLER. I was arguing with reference to the position taken——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman believe that?

Mr. TAYLER. I am here speaking against the inevitable result of the position that the gentleman from Indiana has taken——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But the question I asked——

Mr. TAYLER. And not to be interrogated about what I might do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But certainly the gentleman will——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAYLER. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, then, let the House have the benefit of your opinion as to what the action of the committee should be. I understand the gentleman complains that the committee has wrongfully——

Mr. TAYLER. I do not complain about anything.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us, then, what he thinks the committee ought to do, and what the evidence shows in respect to the fifty-second precinct, Ninth Ward, whether it should be thrown out, or whether it should be counted 160 for Van Horn?

Mr. TAYLER. The committee ought to recast its report, is my first reply [applause]——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. TAYLER. And my second reply is that if the gentleman believes the testimony of the important witness Canney he ought to say that Mr. Van Horn has 160 majority in the fifty-second precinct of the Ninth Ward.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am not asking the gentleman what I should say in connection with the matter. I am asking the gentleman, "what do you say"?

Mr. TAYLER. That is not pertinent to this inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then the gentleman declines to answer my question.

Mr. TAYLER. The gentleman is here in a position where he presents a report on this floor that declares that the committee, in obedience to this proposition of law upon which they plant themselves, are compelled to throw out the fifty-second precinct; and I say that, believing as they do that Canney tells the truth, they have no right to do it. What I might do with it is immaterial to this controversy. My opinion in respect to the general principle of law involved is the only thing this House is caring to hear.

Now, then, to the question which was propounded by my friend from New York. It is said that the contestee was negligent: that the contestee did not take this testimony when he might have taken it, and when he ought to have taken it. Now, I do not want to consume time at this moment in the discussion of a question as to whether or not the contestee was negligent. In the first place, that is discussed in the report of the minority. It will be discussed, I doubt not, by my colleagues on the committee, and I only want to say this in that connection: It was not known until May that these alphabetical fraudulent votes were cast.

It was not definitely known until then that an examination of the ballots would disclose the exact extent of that fraud that was committed in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts. But beyond that it was contended that the contestee had no right to examine those ballots. Certain officers or certain contestants, under the law of Missouri, have the right to examine those ballots that are preserved by the recorder of voters, and by a process of exclusion no others have the right. The courts of Missouri have held that these other officers who are not named have no right to examine the ballots. A very able lawyer from the State of Missouri told me to-day that there is no right inherent in any commissioner taking testimony in an election contest—a Congressional election contest—to examine these ballots, and that the courts of Missouri would refuse an examination of them. And surely, if an able lawyer of the State of Missouri would express that as his deliberate opinion, it would be difficult to predicate negligence in the conduct of the man who had not taken that testimony. That is a violation——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLER. I will conclude in a moment.

Several MEMBERS. Take your time.

Mr. TAYLER. I will conclude within ten minutes, and shall not hurry myself either.

I want to say this, that gentlemen who contend that a contested-election case is to be determined by the mere question of negligence or diligence on the part of the contestant or contestee, it seems to me, fall very far short of a just apprehension of the nature of the contest and the great duty of this House. But I shall not stop here to discuss how far a proceeding of this kind is purely an adversary one between the contestant on the one hand and the contestee on the other, or how far in a case of this character the right of a great constituency and the integrity of this body are involved.

But I do say this, and I challenge question of its propriety, that good morals and sound law and common justice demand that where, in any case, it is apparent that returns are permeated by fraud, however wide and far-reaching, and the same testimony discloses an easy and safe and reasonably accurate way of purging those returns of that discovered fraud, the House can not shield itself behind some technical rule and refuse to purge those ballots of their fraud. [Applause.] I doubt not that the principle that a poll fatally tainted with fraud must be totally disregarded is to remain a part of our law, but nevertheless it is a dangerous doctrine and but rarely to be invoked. It is at once the temptation, the opportunity, and the refuge of partisanship. Its force and applicability are oftener determined in the forum of prejudice than of right. It gives too full play to mere opinion, and where that begins judicial investigation is likely to end.

A legislative body seeking to act judicially must be sure that it has exhausted every effort within its power to determine whether the time has come when an entire return must be rejected. If you search the records of contest cases in the House of Representatives I doubt if you will find an instance where a proposition to strike out an entire return, if of the substance of the case, was ever decided on any other than party lines. A principle thus fostered and thus abused is not a principle to be invoked except where the exigencies of the case absolutely demand it, and it is the duty of the House to make such effort as it honestly can make to see whether it can not purge the returns. If, having made an honest effort, it finds itself unable to so purge them, it will at least have the satisfaction of having purged its own conscience. [Loud applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LACEY. There is a bill on the Speaker's table which I should like to have submitted to the House.

SUITS IN LAND-GRANT CASES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of time within which suits may be brought to vacate and annul land patents, etc., with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, how does that bill come before the House at this hour?

The SPEAKER. It was on the Speaker's table. The Chair does not desire to present it if the gentleman from Arkansas objects. The Chair was informed that the Committee on Public Lands had had the matter informally before them, and that the amendments were of slight importance and were to be concurred in.

Mr. McRAE. I do not agree to the amendment of the Senate, Mr. Speaker; I think it ought to be nonconcurred in. I recognize the necessity for disposing of the bill as soon as possible, but I did not suppose it would be called up this afternoon. I am perfectly willing to vote upon it now, but I want to say a word about it first.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will not press the matter at this time.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the bill will be withdrawn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4043) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897;

A bill (H. R. 3962) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas;

A bill (S. 141) granting a pension to Julia A. Hill;

A bill (S. 103) relating to final proof in timber-culture entries; and

A bill (S. 1740) to amend section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to remit or mitigate fines, penalties, and forfeitures, and for other purposes.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. Senate bills Nos. 360 and 361 have been improperly referred to the Committee on Claims. As the appropriations provided for are to be paid out of Indian funds the bills ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and will be so referred.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3561) providing for the construction of a steam revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic Coast of the United States, with headquarters at the port of New York, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 502); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5635) to amend section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to preferences in the civil service, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 517); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BRODERICK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. Res. 96), providing for the disposition of certain property now in the hands of the receiver of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 519); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. No. 179) to censure Thomas F. Bayard, ambassador of the United States to Great Britain, for statements made by him in certain speeches, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 520); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. BUCK, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 1035) for the relief of Mrs. Elvira Moore, executrix of J. L. Moore. (Report No. 503.)

By Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 5881) for the relief of Bath County, Ky. (Report No. 504.)

By Mr. OTJEN, from the Committee on War Claims: The bill (H. R. 2334) for the relief of B. F. Moody & Co. or their legal representatives. (Report No. 505.)

By Mr. COLSON, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (H. R. 5225) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth M. Williams, of Monroe County, Tenn. (Report No. 506.)

By Mr. CROWTHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 2813) granting a pension to Rita Stine, amounting to $20 per month. (Report No. 508.)

By Mr. LAYTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 1171) to pension Hannah Tazell. (Report No. 509.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French. (Report No. 510.)

By Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 6132) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Scott. (Report No. 511.)

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 986) for the relief of Hiram P. Pauley. (Report No. 512.)

By Mr. POOLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers. (Report No. 513.)

The bill (H. R. 4753) granting an increase of pension to Lambert L. Mulford. (Report No. 514.)

By Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 3421) to grant a pension to Elizabeth Sadler. (Report No. 515.)

By Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 2358) for the relief of Arminda White, widow of Israel White. (Report No. 516.)

By Mr. HARDY, from the Committee on Pensions: The bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob. (Report No. 518.)

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MOZLEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 6501) to raise revenue, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 6502) to authorize the construction of certain railways and canals, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. PATTERSON: A bill (H. R. 6503) to regulate the importation of gunpowder, nitroglycerin, and other explosive substances—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARTMAN: A bill (H. R. 6504) providing for disposal of lands on abandoned portions of the Fort Maginnis Military Reservation, in Montana, and for the relief of certain settlers thereon—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TERRY: A bill (H. R. 6505) to revive and reenact an act to authorize the construction of a free bridge across Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GROW: A bill (H. R. 6506) to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech and vocal language to deaf children before they are of school age—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. MEREDITH: A bill (H. R. 6507) to increase the salaries of the police-station clerks of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 6508) providing for an international humane and sanitary conference—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PICKLER (by request): A bill (H. R. 6509) authorizing the cutting, using, and transporting of down or fallen timber in certain counties of South Dakota—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 6510) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to L. E. King Post, No. 105, Grand Army of the Republic, of Augusta, Kans., and for other purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were referred as follows:

The bill (H. R. 2375) to pension Patrick W. Halloran—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 2377) granting a pension to John E. Kirkham—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 1420) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 118) to pay heir of David Heaton the remainder of salary of his unexpired term in the Forty-first Congress—Committee on Appropriations discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 5933) for the relief of William Norris—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 2243) for relief of Jonathan Morris—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 361) for the relief of Silas P. Keller—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 360) for the relief of Northrup & Chick—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: A bill (H. R. 6511) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mrs. Jane W. Mason, Washington, Pa.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BAKER of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 6512) for the relief of B. C. Sanders—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6513) for the relief of Mary White—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill (H. R. 6514) for the relief of James O. Knox—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CONNOLLY: A bill (H. R. 6515) for the relief of Hannah Bailey Munson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6516) to pension Hannah Bailey Munson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H. R. 6517) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen O'Rorke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6518) for the relief of Albert H. Geering—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CURTIS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 6519) granting a pension to Herman Dellit—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 6520) for the relief of Miss B. Sheaffer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6521) for the relief of Leah Dietrich—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6522) granting an increase of pension to G. J. Counterman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6523) granting an increase of pension to August Cronanberg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6524) granting an increase of pension to S. S. Brewerton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6525) granting an increase of pension to John A. Carter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6526) granting an increase of pension to William J. Price—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6527) granting a pension to Mrs. Thomas Russell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 6528) to increase the pension of Clara L. Nichols, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. W. A. Nichols—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina: A bill (H. R. 6529) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Dennis—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HEATWOLE: A bill (H. R. 6530) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Gorham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6531) granting an increase of pension to John G. Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6532) to reimburse Hubert Nyssen—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HENDERSON: A bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of A. A. Hosmer—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California: A bill (H. R. 6534) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth M. Stevenson, widow of Col. J. D. Stevenson, late of California, from $8 to $30 per month—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H. R. 6535) granting a pension to Loozila L. Patterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEIGHTY (by request): A bill (H. R. 6536) to pension William H. Robeson, alias Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6537) granting pension to Milo Miner—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6538) to pension James Collins, of Angola, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LORIMER: A bill (H. R. 6539) granting a pension to Richard C. Enright—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHANY: A bill (H. R. 6540) to reimburse Mrs. Bernard F. Gentsch, widow of the late postmaster of Buffalo, N. Y., for moneys personally paid by him and for which the Government received services—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MEIKLEJOHN: A bill (H. R. 6541) to provide for the adjustment, settlement, and payment of claims for supplies furnished the Indian industrial school at Genoa, Nebr.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MERCER: A bill (H. R. 6542) to grant a pension to Rev. Warren Cochran, of Omaha, Nebr.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MURPHY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 6543) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles Held—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PICKLER (by request): A bill (H. R. 6544) for the relief of H. B. Matteosian, M. D., late delegate of the United States to the International Sanitary Commission of Constantinople—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6545) for the relief of James A. Stoddard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6546) granting a pension to Samuel Holliday—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6547) for the relief of Frederick Mehring—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6548) for the relief of Levi Carnrike—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6549) granting a pension to Gideon L. McGinnis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6550) for the relief of William H. H. Lee—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6551) for the relief of William Charger and others—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6552) granting increase of pension to Alexander C. Morrison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6553) for the relief of Henry A. Miller—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6554) for the relief of Edward Dwyer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6555) for the relief of Albert J. Duane—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6556) granting a pension to Jacob Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6557) for the relief of Daniel Martin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6558) for the relief of John Cashner—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 6559) for the relief of the legal representatives of Alfred Duplantier, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUSK: A bill (H. R. 6560) to increase pension of Emily M. Tyler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SIMPKINS (by request): A bill (H. R. 6561) to increase the pension of Martha C. Carter, widow of Rear-Admiral S. P. Carter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TRACEWELL: A bill (H. R. 6562) to increase the pension of Martin A. Stucker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6563) to increase the pension of Sarah Gresham, widow of Col. Benjamin Q. A. Gresham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 6564) to pension Rebecca G. Irwin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIOTT of South Carolina: A bill (H. R. 6565) for the relief of John J. Driscoll—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 6566) for the relief of Thomas J. Wear, of Sevier County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HILBORN: A bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the pension of Mrs. Elizabeth D. Stevenson, widow of the late J. D. Stevenson, formerly a colonel in the United States Army—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 6568) for the relief of J. A. McCreary, late of the United States Army—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Resolutions of the board of managers of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, resolutions of Lodge No. 95, Order Sons of St. George, of Homestead, Pa., indorsing the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, memorial of the Peace Association of Friends, on the attitude of Congresss relative to the Monroe doctrine—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ALLEN of Utah: Petition of W. T. Sherman Post, No. 6, of Provo, Utah, in favor of a service-pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARHAM: Petition of citizens of Petaluma, Cal., against appropriating public moneys for sectarian undertakings—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of citizens of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against the appropriation of public moneys for sectarian purposes and in favor of a constitutional amendment prohibiting such appropriation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: Resolution of settlers calling for the investigation of matters relating to the Colorado portion of the so-called Maxwell grant—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BREWSTER: Memorial regarding the closing up of Jupiter Inlet, Florida, from the inhabitants of Dade County, Fla.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BULL: Papers relating to the case of Mary R. Dean, widow of Amos G. Thomas, to accompany House bill No. 922—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOK of Wisconsin: Letters from George W. Burchard, president of the Dairymans' Association of the State of Wisconsin, together with memorial adopted by that association at their annual convention at Chippewa Falls, Wis., urging the favorable consideration of House bill No. 3010 and the need of legislation on lines of said bill, to regulate and control the manufacture and sale of the article known to the trade as "filled cheese"—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CRUMP: Resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, asking Congress to appoint a commission to investigate the question of Japanese manufactures, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: Papers to accompany House bill No. 6517, relating to the case of Mrs. O'Rorke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS of Iowa: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Crawfordsville, Iowa, for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of Lodge No. 43, Order Sons of St. George, Pittsburg, Pa., in favor of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. DOCKERY: Petition of Jonathan Morris and others, of Santa Rosa, Mo., praying for additional pension legislation—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ERDMAN: Petition of residents of Guthsville, Pa., praying for the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, two protests of citizens of Rehrersburg, Pa., against the appropriation of public moneys for sectarian purposes, and petitions urging the passage of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FENTON: Petition of J. W. Kates, of Barden, Ohio, and 19 other ex-soldiers of the Union Army, praying for the passage of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: Petition of more than 2,000 citizens of western New England in favor of an appropriation by Congress for improving the navigation of the Connecticut River between Holyoke and Hartford—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolutions passed by the Commercial Club of Boston, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of Boston Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GRAFF: Petition of veterans of the late war residing in Mason County, Ill., favoring the passage of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Manito, Ill., for the passage of the Hainer bill, for the relief of prisoners of war who were Union soldiers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAINER of Nebraska: Petition of the twentieth encampment, Department of Nebraska, Grand Army of the Republic; also, petition of Geo. N. Morgan Post, No. 4, Department of Minnesota, praying for the passage of House bill No. 306, granting a pension to Union ex-prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HANLY: Papers to accompany House bills Nos. 5330 and 5331, for the relief of Frank Green—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of members of Col. John Clark Council, No. 126, Daughters of Liberty, indorsing and recommending the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HEATWOLE: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to John C. Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill in the case of Mrs. Ann Gorham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill in the claim of Hubert Hyesen—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of E. Green, mayor, and other citizens of Jamestown, N. Y., against the repeal of section 61 of the act of August 28, 1894, providing for a rebate of taxes paid on alcohol used by manufacturers, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Black Creek, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Black Creek, N. Y., against the sale of intoxicants to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HULL: Petition of Frank P. Crandon and 18 other citizens of the State of Illinois, asking the passage of resolution reviving the grade of Lieutenant-General—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HURLEY: Petition of Munson Steamship Line and 19 other steamship companies and agencies, of New York, for a depth of 30 feet in Buttermilk Channel and in channel north of Governors Island, New York Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. KIEFER: Resolution of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Board of Trade, in reference to the Union Pacific Railroad—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. LACEY: Petition of J. W. Satchell and others, of Grinnell, Iowa, asking for the passage of the service-pension bill, and for land warrants for soldiers of the late war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINTON: Resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, to complete the improvement of the harbor of refuge in Milwaukee Bay—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, two protests of citizens of Belfast, Pa., against the appropriation of public moneys for sectarian purposes, and petitions urging the passage of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution adopted by the New York Mercantile Exchange, in favor of regulating the manufacture and sale of filled cheese—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAHON: Petition of Washington Camp, No. 513, of Saltillo, Pa., and No. 350, of Calvin, Pa., Patriotic Order Sons of America, favoring the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky: Petition of members of churches of Nicholasville, Ky., in behalf of a bill for the relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MOODY: Petition of W. S. Sawyer and others and of Norman O. Cobb and others, all of Haverhill, Mass., and vicinity, favoring the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. OWENS: Resolutions of a public meeting in the Seventh Congressional district, Kentucky, regarding the atrocities committed by the Turks upon the helpless Armenians—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania: Memorial of citizens of Delaware County, Pa., indorsing Rockdale Council, No. 803, Junior Order United American Mechanics, favoring the recognition of the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut: Petition of Ezra G. Bill, for pension, to accompany House bill No. 5776—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Connecticut, in opposition to sundry House bills (H. R. 1227 to 1233, inclusive), known as the Maguire bills, as calculated to injure foreign trade and coastwise shipping—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of citizens of Connecticut, favoring sundry House bills (H. R. 5288 and others), designed to serve the mutual interest of shipowners and seamen—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SCRANTON: Petition of the Keystone Veterinary Medical Association, favoring House bill No. 3012, to give rank to veterinarians in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHANNON: Memorial of Charles Mann & Co. and 102 others, requesting that Congress authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the entire work of constructing a canal through the Harlem Kills, New York, 15 feet deep and 300 feet wide, for a sum not exceeding $1,450,000—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WATSON of Ohio: Resolutions of the Pennsylvania Society of Sons of the Revolution, asking Congress to purchase and have published the records and papers of the Continental Congress, comprising the official documents dating to the Revolutionary period—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: Petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Pekin, Stafford, and Geneseo, N. Y., against the sale of beer at certain military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Pekin, Stafford, and Geneseo, N. Y., against the sale of beer and intoxicating liquors to immigrants—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. WANGER: Resolution of Washington Camp, No. 53, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Cold Point, Pa., indorsing the Stone immigration bill and requesting its passage—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. WILSON of Idaho: Petition of Thomas Turner and other ex-soldiers of the Union Army, asking the passage of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOMER: Petition of Joseph P. Remington and faculty of Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, in favor of bills to increase the pay of hospital stewards in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Harry H. Parson, councilor of Golden Star Council, No. 6, and 125 members, of Middletown, Pa., in favor of the passage of the Stone immigration bill—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Emily Dissinger, president, and 15 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cornwall, Pa., in favor of the Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WRIGHT: Seven petitions of citizens of Washington, urging the passage of House bill No. 5220, or some similar measure, requiring the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company to adopt rapid transit on its lines, and opposing the extension of the tracks of said company until its existing lines are modernly equipped and operated—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, calling for statistics and information which the records of the Pension Office disclose from the 1st day of July, 1895, to the 1st day of January, 1896, of invalid pensioners pensioned under the general law, etc., and also a statistical statement showing the number of pension certificates issued during the six months ended January 1, 1896, transmitting a letter and accompanying inclosures from the Commissioner of Pensions containing the information desired; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, calling for information as to whether the schedule relating to the names, organizations, and length of service of those who had served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the war of the rebellion was prepared and the information required taken, etc., transmitting a letter and accompanying inclosures from the Commissioner of Labor in charge of the Eleventh Census, containing the information desired; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wellington, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting further appropriations for institutions under ecclesiastical control; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada, praying for the reenactment of the law providing for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON. I present a petition of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada, with headquarters at No. 119 South Fourth street, Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the reenactment of the law providing for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. I ask that the petition be read.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

OFFICE OF GLASS BOTTLE BLOWERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA,
No. 119 SOUTH FOURTH STREET,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 17, 1896.

At the last annual convention of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association the following resolution was passed by the convention, and the general secretary of the association was ordered to send a copy of the same, under seal, to the President, Vice-President, Secretary of State, and members of both Houses of Congress:

"Resolved, That it is the deliberate judgment of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association of the United States and Canada that Congress should reenact the law of 1837, which provides for the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, thus restoring the American law of coinage as it was until 1873, when silver was demonetized without debate, and without the knowledge of the American people, and that this should be done at once, without waiting for the cooperation of any other nation."

WILLIAM LAUNER,
General Secretary of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Boston, Mass., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of Boston Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 72 citizens of Haverhill, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of a committee representing the tea trade of the United States, praying for the enactment of legislation levying a specific duty on tea; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Silver Council, No. 200, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Little Silver, N. J.; of Silver Star Council, No. 26, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Williamstown, N. J.; of Ashland Council, No. 28, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Seabright, N. J.; of Goodwill Council, No. 32, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of New Brunswick, N. J.; of Hornerstown Council, No. 177, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Hornerstown, N. J.; of Nathan Hale Council, No. 89, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Trenton, N. J.; of Winfield Scott Council, No. 53, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Elizabeth, N. J.; of Enterprise Council, No. 26, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Trenton, N. J., and of Orient Council, No. 46, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Elizabeth, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called Stone immigration bill; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of A. Ritchie and sundry other citizens of Ohio, praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LINDSAY presented a petition of the Filson Club, of Louisville, Ky., praying that the old custom-house property in that city be granted to them for the use of the club; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of the delegates of the Chickasaw Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, praying that they be allowed to withdraw $100,000 of the trust fund of that nation, to be placed in the subtreasury of the United States at St. Louis, Mo., to their credit; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Commercial and Maritime Associations of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the improvement of the Schuylkill River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Belfast, Forkston, and New Columbia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the appropriation of moneys for sectarian institutions; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Belfast and a petition of sundry citizens of New Columbia, Pa., praying for the adoption of the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN presented sundry petitions of citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1886, or some similar measure, requiring the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company to adopt rapid transit on its lines, and remonstrating against the extension of the tracks of that line until its existing lines are modernly equipped and operated; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 93, of the District of Columbia, praying for the speedy passage of House bill No. 3618, to organize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 93, of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1242, to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant-marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the naval reserve; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present, to accompany the bill (S. 1952) granting a pension to Thomas L. Crowell, a report from the War Department as to his military record and a letter from the Pension Office as to the rejection of his claim. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions to accompany the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1632) to permit owners of claims to iron and coal mines on forest reservations of the United States to perfect their title thereto, and to procure a patent therefor, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 14) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5359) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, to report it with amendments and submit a report thereon. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, at the completion of the routine business, I shall call the bill up and ask the Senate to place it on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 830) granting a pension to Mary Allard, widow of John Allard, formerly of Company E, Seventh Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1936) to increase the pension of Mrs. Eunice Ida Rhoades, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 24th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 2,000 additional copies of Report No. 290 be printed for the use of the Committee on Immigration.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2272) to fix the salaries of the chief justice and judges of the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2273) to authorize the appointment of Maj. Gen. Oliver O. Howard lieutenant-general on the retired list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2274) granting an increase of pension to Mary Chamberlain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2275) for the relief of Sigmund J. Block and Augustus P. Baurman, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2276) to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square No. 959, in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHOUP introduced a bill (S. 2277) for the relief of Oscar Sonnenkalb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2278) making certain persons eligible to the pension list of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2279) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Benjamin Wilkes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2280) for the relief of the late Andrew S. Core; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill (S. 2281) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PEFFER introduced a bill (S. 2282) to amend section 3 of the pension-revision act, approved March 3, 1873, so as to include certain soldiers of the Kansas State Militia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute for the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations with reference to the war in Cuba, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. ALLEN to the concurrent resolution 19, reported by Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, January 29, 1896, and the substitute therefor, reported by Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, February 5, 1896.

Amend by substituting the following:

"A joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to recognize the political independence of the Republic of Cuba, and for other purposes.

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to issue a proclamation recognizing the Republic of Cuba as it exists under the constitution and form of government proclaimed at Jimaguaya, under President Cisneros, in the month of May, anno Domini 1895, as a free and independent nation, and according the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of said Republic all the rights and privileges accorded to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Government of Spain."

The joint resolution (S. R. 87) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to recognize the political independence of the Republic of Cuba, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEFFER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE BILL AND SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a brief statement, preceding the introduction of a proposed amendment to House bill 2749.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. Yesterday the chairman of the Finance Committee, the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], called up House bill 2749, with the Senate committee amendment, and after a vote on the question of taking it up he announced to the Senate and to the country that that bill was dead, and that there would be no further attempt at legislation upon the lines of tariff at the present session of Congress. The Senator at that time also made a statement to the effect that it was manifest to the country that the Republican party is not in the ascendancy in this Chamber, and that there is some kind of a coalition between the Populist party and the Democratic party which would render it impossible to take up and consider that measure.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], following in the wake of his leader, announced in substance the same thing, although he said that at a subsequent time during this Congress he would again ask the Senate to take up the measure.

I have inferred all along from time to time that it was the purpose of the Republican party as represented in this Chamber to treat both the question of the tariff and silver upon terms of equality, and that there was really an honest desire on the part of possibly a majority of Republican Senators to enact a law for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I regret very much that the chairman of the Committee on Finance left the Chamber yesterday before the discussion was finally finished.

Believing this, Mr. President, I took occasion yesterday to ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who are representative Republicans, if there were any circumstances under which they would agree to the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, and they both emphatically said there were no circumstances under which they would agree to that. I asked them if they were willing to take this House bill 2749, providing for a temporary increase of the revenues to meet the expenses of the Government with a free-silver amendment—taking the protective features of the bill together with a free-coinage amendment—and they said no. I asked them, at the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], if they were willing to take the McKinley bill, which now seems to be the shibboleth of the Republican faith, with a free-coinage amendment attached to it, and they said no.

Mr. President, I do not believe in this House bill 2749, and I want to announce to the Senate and to the country that I do not commit myself to its policy or to the rate of taxation it imposes. But to show the venerable Senator from Vermont, the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee, that he has strength enough to carry this bill through here, I want to say to him if he can unite the Republican party upon this measure with a free-coinage amendment—not a free-coinage substitute, but a free-coinage amendment—by which the tariff therein provided shall become a law and silver shall be coined at the ratio of 16 to 1, the Populist party have votes enough to give you in this Chamber to make both those provisions a law. I want to ask the Senator from Vermont if he is willing to accept a substitute of that kind.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. What is the measure pending before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asked unanimous consent to make a statement, and consent was given.

Mr. HOAR. I thought he was asking the consent of the Senator from Vermont to make a statement.

Mr. ALLEN. No, not at all. I was proceeding in order, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me to make a suggestion. The Senator from Ohio yesterday grew righteously indignant because we would not accept this measure and permit it to come up here and go through the Senate roughshod without any deliberation or consideration. The Senator denounced the policy of issuing bonds. He told us that the present Administration has issued $263,000,000 of bonds, which is literally true, and that this measure providing for tariff taxation is the ne plus ultra of all taxing things to fill the empty coffers of the nation with money to discharge the current expenses of the Government.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the senior Senator from Ohio to the fact that a year ago he did not believe in the doctrine that he announced yesterday. One year ago the Senator from Ohio introduced in this Chamber a bill which I hold in my hand, Senate bill 2598, to provide for a temporary deficiency of revenue, which provides for the issuance of Government bonds. I think it of so much importance that I ask the Secretary to read it. It is short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 2598) to provide for a temporary deficiency of revenue.

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for and maintain the redemption of United States notes according to the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," and also to enable him to pay current deficiencies in the revenue, he is authorized, from time to time, at his discretion, to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the description of bonds authorized in said act, or coupon or registered bonds of the United States, to an amount sufficient for the objects herein stated, not exceeding the current deficiency of revenue, bearing not to exceed 3 per cent interest per annum, payable semiannually, and redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, in coin, after five years from their date, with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions provided in said act for the bonds therein authorized. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall use the proceeds thereof for the purposes herein provided for, and none other.

SEC. 2. That in lieu of any of the bonds described in the first section of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to issue certificates of indebtedness of the United States, payable to the bearer in coin after five years from date, at the pleasure of the United States, of the denomination of twenty-five, fifty, and one hundred dollars, with annual coupons for interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; and to sell and dispose of the same for not less than an equal amount of lawful money of the United States at designated depositories of the United States, and at such post-offices as he may select. And such certificates shall have the like qualities, privileges, and exemptions described in said resumption act for the bonds therein authorized. And the proceeds thereof shall be used for the purposes prescribed in the first section of this act, and for none other.

SEC. 3. That upon any deposit already or hereafter made in the manner required by law of any United States bonds or certificates bearing interest, any national banking association making the same shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of different denominations, in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, not exceeding in the whole amount the par value of the bonds deposited: Provided, That at no time shall the total amount of such notes issued to any such association exceed the amount at such time actually paid in of its capital stock.

Mr. ALLEN. It was as apparent to the Senator from Ohio on the 17th day of January, 1895, when he introduced this bill, as it was yesterday that a measure increasing the tariff taxation was essential; and yet the Senator from Ohio, instead of introducing such a measure in the Fifty-third Congress, or having it introduced in the House of Representatives, saw fit to increase the bonded indebtedness of the United States, and saw fit to take the interpretation of the Treasury Department that coin is gold, and give the Secretary of the Treasury limitless power for the issuance of Government bonds.

I simply desire to emphasize the fact and make it known to the country, if that be necessary under the circumstances, that the two sovereign remedies the Senator from Ohio has always applied to the wants of the country have been a decreased volume of money of abnormal purchasing power and by taxation taking that money in exorbitant quantities from the people.

The Republican party will not be permitted to escape the fact that they are pledged against the free coinage of silver. They are pledged against the remonetization of silver in any other form than that in which it exists at the present time; that is, it is to be made a subsidiary coin or a token coin, and is to be estimated from the standpoint of coined gold. That was the remark of the senior Senator from Ohio yesterday; and all through this session of Congress and the last session of Congress the Senator from Ohio has spoken of the single gold standard as being the standard of our money in this country and that we must maintain it.

I have been led to introduce this measure for the purpose of emphasizing the fact to the country that the Republican party under no circumstances will be induced to give free coinage to the country. The platform of 1892 was a falsehood. There was no intention, there was no purpose, of restoring to the coinage of the country silver money as it existed before 1873. When the Republican party stated in that platform that it was the policy of the Republican party to treat gold and silver upon terms of equality as standard money there was no truth in the statement, for if there is any purpose upon the part of the Republican party to do that the Populists in this Chamber say to them that we will swallow your measure of taxation, which is nauseating, which is unjust, if you will give the people of the country more sound money with which to pay the increased taxation imposed upon them by this measure.

Now, one word more, Mr. President, and I will introduce this measure and let it go. In 1888 William McKinley, of Ohio, was chairman of the committee on platform of the National Republican Convention, according to this paper from which I read, the New York Evening Post of February 18, 1896, and the Republican party at that time promulgated and put in its platform this language:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money and condemns the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

Mr. McKinley at that time made a speech upon this subject, and I will send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read his remarks at that time with reference to President Cleveland as stated here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

During all of his years at the head of the Government he was dishonoring one of our precious metals, one of our own great products, discrediting silver and enhancing the price of gold. He endeavored even before his inauguration to stop the coinage of silver dollars, and afterwards, and to the end of his Administration, persistently used his power to that end. He was determined to contract the circulating medium and demonetize one of the coins of commerce, limit the volume of money among the people, make money scarce, and therefore dear. He would have increased the value of money and diminished the value of everything else—money the master, everything else the servant.

Mr. ALLEN. I had this extract from Mr. McKinley's speech read for the purpose of showing that the chief apostle of protection in this country condemned Mr. Cleveland in 1888 for the demonetization of silver, and for the purpose of showing that the Republican party outside of Congress claims one thing to the people and in Congress claims and votes another and an entirely distinct thing.

Mr. President, for the purpose of showing the absolute good faith of the Populist Senators, whose votes, added to the 44 Republican votes on the other side of the Chamber, will carry your measure by 5 majority, and not because I approve of the measure or its policy, I offer a substitute, which is your bill word for word, with not a "t" uncrossed nor an "i" undotted; it is literally your bill with the exception of the title changed so as to read "A bill to promote the prosperity and happiness of the people of the United States." I say to you if you are in good faith in favor of free silver, if you plant yourself upon the platform of protection to American industries and the free coinage of silver, we stand here with 6 votes ready to help you pass this measure through the Senate. I now ask that the proposed amendment be read by title, printed, and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it by title.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the full reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read at length.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment in the form of a substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. ALLEN to the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency.

Amend by substituting the following——

Mr. COCKRELL. The Secretary need not read the first part. That is the tariff bill?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now read the substitute.

Mr. ALLEN. The last part is simply the free-silver substitute, and it is attached as a part of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of order.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as additional sections——

Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of order. My point is that there is no business before the Senate at this time.

Mr. PLATT. There is a bill before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course if it is proceeding by unanimous consent I do not object.

Mr. VEST. It is a bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. A bill has been introduced regularly and is on its first reading, and it has to be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. And is being debated before its introduction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment was submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, with the request that it be read. The Secretary will read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that after it is read I shall object to further debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary read the amendment, beginning with section 5, the amendment entire being as follows:

Amendment in the form of a substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. ALLEN to the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency.

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act, and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported wools of classes 1 and 2, as defined in the act hereinafter cited, approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, and on all hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, except as hereinafter provided, and on all noils, shoddy, garnetted waste, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, and on woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled 'An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes,' approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations of said act; and on all wools and Russian camel's hair of class 3, as defined in said act approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the several duties provided by such act approved October 1, 1890. And paragraph 279 of Schedule K, and also paragraph 685 in the free list of an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' which became a law August 27, 1894, are hereby suspended until August 1, 1898.

"SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported articles made in whole or in part of wool, worsted, or other materials described in section 1 of this act, except as hereinafter provided, 60 per cent of the specific pound or square-yard duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled 'An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes,' approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, in addition to the ad valorem duty now imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' which became a law August 27, 1894; and on carpets, druggets, bockings, mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting, made in whole or in part of wool, the specific square-yard duty imposed on each of such articles by said act approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, in addition to the ad valorem duty imposed on such articles by said act, which became a law August 27, 1894.

"SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported lumber and other articles designated in paragraphs 674 to 683, inclusive, of an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' which became a law August 27, 1894, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled 'An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes,' approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations of said last-named act; but pulp wood shall be classed as round unmanufactured timber exempt from duty: Provided, That in case any foreign country shall impose an export duty upon pine, spruce, elm, or other logs, or upon stave bolts, shingle wood, pulp wood, or heading blocks exported to the United States from such country, then the duty upon the lumber and other articles mentioned in said paragraphs 674 to 683, inclusive, when imported from such country, shall be the same as fixed by the law in force prior to October 1, 1890.

"SEC. 4. That on and after the passage of this act, and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all the imported articles mentioned in Schedules A, B, C, D, F, G, H, I, J, L, M, and N of an act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' which became a law August 27, 1894, a duty equivalent to 15 per cent of the duty imposed on each of said articles by existing law in addition to the duty provided by said act of August 27, 1894: Provided, That the additional duties imposed by this section shall not in any case increase the rate of duty on any article beyond the rate imposed thereon by the said act of October 1, 1890, but in such case the duty shall be the same as was imposed by said act: And provided further, That where the present rate of duty on any article is higher than was fixed by said last-named act, the rate of duty thereon shall not be further increased by this section, but shall remain as provided by existing law.

"SEC. 5. That from and after the passage of this act the mints of the United States shall be open to the coinage of silver, and there shall be coined dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy, of standard silver, nine-tenths fine, as provided by the act of January 18, 1837, and upon the same terms and subject to the limitations and provisions of law regulating the coinage and legal-tender quality of gold; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the Treasury, certificates may be issued therefor in the manner now provided by law.

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin into standard silver dollars, as soon as practicable, according to the provisions of section 1 of this act, from the silver bullion purchased under authority of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled 'An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes,' that portion of said silver bullion which represents the seigniorage or profit to the Government, to wit, the difference between the cost of the silver purchased under said act and its coinage value, and said silver dollars so coined shall be used in the payment of the current expenses of the Government; and for the purpose of making the said seigniorage immediately available for use as money, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue silver certificates against it, as if it was already coined and in the Treasury.

"SEC. 7. That no national-bank note shall be hereafter issued of a denomination less than $10, and all notes of such banks now outstanding of denominations less than that sum shall be, as rapidly as practicable, taken up, redeemed, and canceled, and notes of $10 and larger denominations shall be issued in their stead under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency.

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem the United States notes, commonly called 'greenbacks,' and also the Treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, when presented for redemption, in standard silver dollars or in gold coin, using for redemption of said notes either gold or silver coins, or both, not at the option of the holder, but exclusively at the option of the Treasury Department, and said notes, commonly called 'greenbacks,' when so redeemed, shall be reissued as provided by the act of May 31, 1878."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to promote the prosperity and happiness of the people of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. BAKER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question on this matter that he has been discussing. Will the Senator from Nebraska pledge himself and his party to vote for the present tariff bill with a proviso for the free coinage of American silver only?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, that is not the question embraced in this bill at all.

Mr. BAKER. Will the Senator give a direct answer, yes or no?

Mr. ALLEN. I will say to you that I can not pledge my party one way or another. I have not talked with the membership of my party with reference to it.

Mr. BAKER. How as to the Senator himself?

Mr. ALLEN. I can answer as to myself. As far as I am concerned, I will not do it.

Mr. BAKER. You will not?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir.

Mr. BAKER. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. ALLEN. That is not free coinage. Will the Senator vote for the bill as it now stands, as I have introduced it, with the free-coinage amendment incorporated in it?

Mr. BAKER. No, sir; because it provides for the free coinage of all the silver of the world at the ratio of 16 to 1, and would put us down as simply silver monometallists.

Mr. ALLEN. No, it puts it on an equality with the gold.

Mr. BAKER. You can not put it on an equality merely by legislation, as I understand it, any more than you could change the unit of measure by legislation and say that a foot shall be 6 inches instead of 12 inches, and therefore you would be 12 feet high.

Mr. ALLEN. That is old, Mr. President; that is old. Gold and silver stood upon terms of equality throughout the history of this country up to 1873, when silver was demonetized at the mints.

Mr. BAKER. They never did stand on an equality. I have the figures right here before me, which show that for one hundred years prior to 1873 they varied in amount as much as an ounce, and an ounce is 8 per cent or more. So that is not equality and not parity.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator's figures are very much like the figures that the statistician spoke of when he wanted to know, when called upon to make a statement of figures, which side wanted to use it. [Laughter.] The Senator has Republican figures, which show a disparity. I say that these two metals did stand upon an equality throughout the history of this country at the mints of the United States until 1873, when silver was demonetized by the codified coinage act of that year, and that they were upon terms of equality of exchange as a part of the money of this country, without any difference between them.

I shall not, however, stop to go into an argument, for the Senator could not convince me to the contrary if he would talk all day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

FREIGHT AND PASSENGER RATES IN FLORIDA.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commissioners be, and they are hereby, directed to send to the Senate the report of J. D. Pirrong, agent of the Commissioners, on freight and passenger rates of the railway companies in the State of Florida; also any other evidence on the subject which the Commissioners may have.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be, and hereby is, directed to make due inquiry and to report to the Senate a list of all the officers and employees who were on the roll of the Senate on the 31st day of January, 1896, giving, as to each, the name, State or Territory of lawful residence, time when first entering the service, the duties assigned, the number of hours each day required, and the specific work actually in performance, the names of the persons recommending or procuring the employment, and the annual salary paid; and also to report a statement giving the total annual amount paid such officers and employees, and the opinion of the committee whether or not the present force can be reduced, and, if so, to what extent, without injury to the public service.

EXPENDITURES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be, and hereby is, directed to investigate the expenditures of the Senate for the past year (except those made for salaries and compensation of officers and employees) with the view of determining whether or not there may be a reduction of such expenditures in the future consistently with the proper conduct of the business of the Senate, said committee to report to the Senate as soon as practicable any recommendations which they may find it expedient to make.

POACHING IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. ALLEN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether or not poaching is carried on to any extent in the Yellowstone National Park; whether animals from said park cross the boundaries thereof into Idaho and Montana and are there slaughtered contrary to existing law; whether the police force guarding said park is sufficient; and to transmit to the Senate all information which he may have in his possession concerning the subject herein inquired about and to make such recommendation for legislation as in his opinion will tend to the preservation of the animals belonging to the Yellowstone Park.

REPORT ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 8,000 additional copies of Report No. 336 and of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Coast Defenses be printed for the use of the Committee on Coast Defenses.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of the time within which suits may be brought to vacate and annul land patents, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3281) to authorize reassessments for improvements and general taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 103) relating to final proof in timber-culture entries;

A bill (S. 141) granting a pension to Julia A. Hill;

A bill (S. 1740) to amend section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to remit or mitigate fines, penalties, and forfeitures, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3962) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Lake St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas; and

A bill (H. R. 4043) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897.

THE REVENUE BILL AND SILVER COINAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CARTER February 19, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 2749, reported by the Committee on Finance with an amendment, be recommitted to that committee for further consideration.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

Mr. LINDSAY. Before the Senator from Montana proceeds to speak on the resolution he offered the other day, I desire to offer an amendment to it, which I ask to have read.

Mr. CARTER. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] by adding thereto these words:

And said Committee on Finance is instructed to report an amendment to the said H. R. bill 2749, in the way of an additional section, in substance as follows:

"SEC. 5. That so much of section 182½ of Schedule E of the act which became a law August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' which provides as follows: 'And upon all sugars above No. 16, Dutch standard in color, and upon all sugars which have been discolored, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound, in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the collection of said additional duty, from and after the passage of this act, is hereby discontinued."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, late in the evening of the 13th instant, without previous understanding and without note of warning, the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee, whose high character and venerable personality I reverence, moved to proceed to the consideration of House bill 2749.

As a substitute for this bill the committee had reported a bill for the free coinage of silver. It was well known that differences of opinion existed on this side of the Chamber, not only as to the propriety of adopting the substitute, but likewise involving the wisdom and expediency of passing the revenue bill as it came from the House. These differences many Republican Senators believed should, if possible, be adjusted so as to secure united and harmonious party action. I shared this hope. Less than two hours before the motion was made to take up the bill I had, in conformity with a suggestion made to me by a distinguished member of the Finance Committee, proceeded to bring about a conference looking to united action on some basis reasonably satisfactory. By necessary implication it was understood that adequate time would be allowed to confer. An informal preliminary conversation regarding methods of procedure was interrupted by the announcement of a roll call on the motion to take the bill up. On that motion I voted no. Could the hand of time be turned back to that hour, without effacing what has been said and done since then, I would still vote no. For that vote I have ample justification and no apology to present.

In justice to the Senator who suggested a conference and to the worthy chairman who made the motion pending the effort to bring it about, I repel any possible imputation of bad faith. The motion was made in perfect good faith by the chairman, not in pursuance of an understanding, but in the absence of any agreement or understanding of which he had any knowledge. If no conference had been suggested, the vote would have been the same, and I only advert to the circumstances to emphasize the manifest necessity for prudent, deliberate, and careful action in dealing with issues of vital importance on which honest differences of opinion exist within all party lines in this country. Had there been a disposition to strike a fatal blow at tariff legislation for the present, the effective course would have been to vote for consideration and then against the bill. The position taken therefore indicated nothing more than indisposition to proceed with the matter at that time and in that form.

With this simple statement, natural inclination bids me rest. Profoundly impressed by and possessed of deep reverence for the ancient and honorable traditions of the Senate and its experienced and distinguished members, the silence I have maintained during my brief service has been both agreeable and profitable to me. That silence would not now be broken did I not feel constrained to repel printed charges and insinuations of disloyalty to the principles of the party with which I affiliate here and with which I have become, in the mutations of political controversy, prominently identified before the country.

Under our system of government organized parties seem indispensable mediums for the orderly presentation, free discussion, and intelligent disposition of disputed questions of state, in accordance with the supreme will of the majority. The member of a party who becomes the representative of a district or State in the Congress of the nation assumes the clearly implied obligation to discharge his trust in harmony with the announced principles and purposes of his party. To the extent that he antagonizes such principles and purposes he proves recreant to the trust. Under this rule nearly one-half the Republican members of this body have recently been indicted before the bar of public opinion by the leading daily journals of New York and other Eastern cities. Indeed, five members of the Senate, including myself, have been by the same organs pronounced guilty of treason without hearing or trial.

In the presence of these grave charges, so intemperately made and widely spread, I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I briefly review the facts.

Before the convening of Congress it was very generally understood throughout the country that the President would announce in his annual message an existing need for additional revenue to meet a deficiency and to provide against its recurrence. Republicans were generally united in a determination to meet this demand of the Executive by tariff legislation along Republican lines. To the surprise of everyone the President did not make the anticipated demand in his annual message, but in various ways has directly and indirectly announced to Congress that the executive department is not in need of additional revenue to conduct the Government, and it has been steadily maintained by the friends of the Administration, in and out of Congress, that additional revenue is wholly unnecessary. Notwithstanding this declaration, a tariff bill was formulated wholly at variance with all past professions of the Republican party on the tariff question. It is admitted everywhere that the House bill is not and was not intended to be an expression by the party of its views. It has been and is now distinctly asserted that it is not a Republican measure. It is a measure to meet an alleged emergency which the chief executive officer of the nation, chosen by a majority of the people in 1892, stoutly asserts does not exist at all. The party, then, is in the attitude of forcing uncalled-for relief upon a reluctant Democratic Administration.

Aside from this unenviable attitude and the manifest embarrassment that must come to the party in the future in consequence of it, the method employed is seriously objectionable. It builds upon existing law as a foundation. The Wilson tariff bill has been everywhere condemned by Republicans as notoriously inequitable and unjust. It assumed to protect the manufacturers and cast the producers of so-called raw material throughout the country into open competition with cheap labor everywhere. The pending bill now proposes to make this injustice more glaring. The Wilson bill was framed upon a theory favoring ad valorem in preference to specific duties. On high authority it is asserted that ad valorem tariff has been repudiated by the principal commercial nations in their tariff systems; by Austria, Denmark, England, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Russia, Sweden, and Spain, ten nations which, with tariffs on 3,957 articles, have only ten on the ad valorem basis and the remainder specific. When and where did this obsolete and discarded cloak for fraud and evasion become sacred in Republican eyes? An ad valorem tariff has been condemned so emphatically by the Republican party on all occasions that it stands no better with the party than does the Wilson bill. The pending bill makes a 15 per cent horizontal raise on twelve schedules of the Wilson bill. When and where did the Republican party become committed to the horizontal movement in tariff legislation? The Wilson bill, the ad valorem tariff, and the horizontal scheme have each in turn been emphatically condemned by Republican platforms, orators, and papers, and never commended anywhere by Republican authority. How then, sir, could it become treasonable for a Republican to oppose all three of these elements combined? Well-settled convictions, supported by practically one-half the electors of this country, should not be lightly sacrificed on the altar of supposed expediency.

But, assuming that the Administration requires funds, which it avers it does not, and that in the name of patriotism we must sacrifice ancient and time-honored principles and convictions, let us endeavor while making the sacrifice to be reasonably just. This bill is not understood by the country correctly. I submit that the general belief obtains that it provides a slight duty for wool and lumber, and then increases the existing duties 15 per cent, except as to sugar. Even Senators and Members of the House generally accept this view of the bill. I freely admit such was my general understanding until brought to a critical analysis of its provisions in regard to wool. The better to elucidate the objections I wish to point out, I send a copy of the bill to the Secretary's desk, to be read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act, and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported wools of classes 1 and 2, as defined in the act hereinafter cited, approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, and on all hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, except as hereinafter provided, and on all noils, shoddy, garnetted waste, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, and on woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations of said act; and on all wools and Russian camel's hair of class 3, as defined in said act approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the several duties provided by such act approved October 1, 1890. And paragraph 279 of Schedule K, and also paragraph 685 in the free list of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, are hereby suspended until August 1, 1898.

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported articles made in whole or in part of wool, worsted, or other materials described in section 1 of this act, except as hereinafter provided, 60 per cent of the specific pound or square-yard duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, in addition to the ad valorem duty now imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, and on carpets, druggets, bockings, mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting, made in whole or in part of wool, the specific square-yard duty imposed on each of such articles by said act approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations thereof, in addition to the ad valorem duty imposed on such articles by said act which became a law August 27, 1894.

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all imported lumber and other articles designated in paragraphs 674 to 683, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, a duty equivalent to 60 per cent of the duty imposed on each of such articles by an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, and subject to all the conditions and limitations of said last-named act; but pulp wood shall be classed as round unmanufactured timber exempt from duty: Provided, That in case any foreign country shall impose an export duty upon pine, spruce, elm, or other logs, or upon stave bolts, shingle wood, pulp wood, or heading blocks exported to the United States from such country, then the duty upon the lumber and other articles mentioned in said paragraphs 674 to 683, inclusive, when imported from such country, shall be the same as fixed by the law in force prior to October 1, 1890.

SEC. 4. That from and after the passage of this act and until August 1, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all the imported articles mentioned in Schedules A, B, C, D, F, G, H, I, J, L, M, and N of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, a duty equivalent to 75 per cent of the duty imposed on each of said articles by existing law in addition to the duty provided by said act of August 27, 1894: Provided, That the additional duties imposed by this section shall not in any case increase the rate of duty on any article beyond the rate imposed thereon by the said act of October 1, 1890, but in such case the duty shall be the same as was imposed by said act: And provided further, That where the present rate of duty on any article is higher than was fixed by said last-named act, the rate of duty thereon shall not be further increased by this section, but shall remain as provided by existing law.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it will be observed that while the first paragraph allows 60 per cent of the duty imposed on first and second class, and restores the ad valorem duty of from 32 to 50 per cent on third-class wool by the McKinley Act, it expressly retains all the limitations and conditions of that act. Experience has clearly demonstrated the fact that the conditions and limitations thus expressly retained were so faulty and unjust in practice that the protection intended was reduced about one-half; that where the McKinley Act provided 12 cents per pound on a given grade of wool the conditions and limitations reduced the figure in actual practice to about 6 cents per pound. The defects of the bill and the intricate method of evading the payment of duty under the proviso contained in section 383 of the act of 1890 are so clearly set forth in a few pages of the memorial of the National Wool Growers' Association that I beg leave to print the statement as a part of my remarks.

But the bill and the law as enacted contained three fatal and ruinous defects:

1. The first was the provision known as "the skirting clause," the effect of which was, in practice, to reduce the protective benefits of the prescribed duties by nearly one-half.

When the McKinley bill was pending, and as it finally passed, the effect of the "skirting clause" was not generally understood by woolgrowers, though in the debates before the Senate Finance Committee it was pointed out. And it is evident that this defect was not generally understood, if at all, by Congress. This is, perhaps, not strange, in view of the many and complicated questions involved in the consideration of the tariff bill and the consequent possibility of overlooking defects pointed out.

2. A SECOND DEFECT.

But the real purpose of the wool tariff provision of the McKinley Act, and the protective benefits intended thereby to be given, alike by Mr. McKinley and by those generally who voted for the bill, were in a large measure defeated by another defect—the ad valorem duties on class 3 wools.

The original bill as reported provided for specific duties; the change to ad valorem duties was secured by some carpet manufacturers, as stated. This feature of the law operated ruinously to woolgrowers by increasing immensely the imports of class 3 wools, which to a large extent were used in the manufacture of clothing goods, thus supplanting the use of merino wools and the long wools of the mutton breeds of sheep. This is fully shown in this volume. The ruin of the ad valorem duties was immensely aggravated by the unforeseen, unexpected vast imports of China wools—a source of supply of very recent date.

3. There was a third defect in the law not generally understood by woolgrowers—probably not generally, if at all, by members of Congress who voted for the bill—the failure to make a provision to meet the light shrinkage in scouring of Australasian wools, as compared with other merino wools of all or nearly all other countries, including our own.

In addition to the defects in the law itself, its protective purpose was in a large measure defeated by conditions arising since the law was passed. Among these there were two chief in importance.

IV. The real purpose of the wool-tariff provisions of the McKinley Act was in large measure defeated by a fourth cause—unforeseen when the law was passed—unexpected—which no human foresight could anticipate—which arose after it was passed.

1. This was the decline in the prices of wools all over the world since that act was passed, caused (1) in part by a vast increase of sheep, and (2) in less degree by the general decline in nearly all values as a result of the gold standard of values.

Another one of the conditions arising since the McKinley bill became a law was:

V. Improved methods of manufacture, by which third-class or so-called carpet wools were, as they now are, used in the manufacture of clothing goods, thus supplanting the use of merino wools and the long wools of the mutton breeds of sheep.

And the immense increased imports of those third-class wools exceeding in quantity those of both other classes combined at unprecedentedly low prices.

And China opened up a new supply of those, so that in the fiscal year 1895 the enormous quantity of 23,089,418 pounds were imported, at an import price of only 5.15 cents per pound.

And these, by reason of their light shrinkage of less than 40 per cent in scouring, were equal to and displaced 46,800,000 pounds of ordinary unwashed merino.

By reason of the combined operation of these causes the McKinley Act failed to accomplish the purpose intended by it. Under it prices of wools constantly declined, and the inevitable result would soon have been a failure to secure prosperity to American sheep husbandry. Even in Texas, where the cost of growing wool is as low if not less than any other State, sheep declined in numbers from 4,281,812 in 1890 to 2,859,269 in 1894.

The evil effects of the "skirting" clause are set forth as follows:

THE PROVISIONS OF THE M'KINLEY ACT TO PREVENT FRAUDS.

383. The duty upon wool of the sheep or hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, or which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject: Provided, That skirted wools as now imported are hereby excepted. Wools on which a duty is assessed amounting to three times or more than that which would be assessed if said wool was imported unwashed, such duty shall not be doubled on account of its being sorted. If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act imported as of any specified class, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of any specified class, shall contain any wool or hair subject to a higher rate of duty than the class so specified, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the highest rate of duty chargeable on wool of the class subject to such higher rate of duty, and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

The words in italic are the so-called "skirting" clause, which includes the sorting of scoured wools.

3. The ruinous effect of the "skirting" clause, operating also to permit the import of sorted scoured wools, without additional duty on account of the sorting or skirting, practically reduced the wool duty of 11 cents per pound down to a mere nominal amount, and in part defeated the provision for giving treble duty on scoured wools. It should be omitted from a new wool tariff law.

This fatal "Provided," excepting "skirted" wools and scoured "sorted" wools from the prohibitions against frauds, was incorporated at the instance of some of those desiring wools imported in a shape to secure a great advantage over American wools. The skirting, in practice, removed so much of the fleece as to result not only in "skirting," but in "sorting" also.

The effect was, that Australian "skirted" merino of no better quality than, and with a fiber not as good as, our American wools would command in our markets all of 2 cents per pound more than American whole fleeces of the same shrinkage in scouring. The skirting had three effects to increase the selling price of Australian merino:

1. The effect of securing the most valuable light shrinkage part of the fleece in practical effect not only "skirted," but "sorted" also.

2. To save the labor and consequent expense of "sorting"; and

3. To admit sorted scoured wools of all classes without an increase of duty.

This advantage of at least 2 cents per pound had the practical effect of reducing the duty of 11 cents per pound on unwashed wools of class 1, to 9 cents per pound on Ohio and similar washed wools shrinking 55 per cent in scouring, and the protection would be still less on Territory and other wools shrinking more than 55 per cent. Even this does not show the entire effect of the "skirting clause."

The eminent wool importers and experts, Mauger & Avery, of New York, N. Y., July 24, 1893, have shown that skirting adds to the selling price of unwashed Australian merino, and reduces in practical effect the duty of 11 cents per pound on such unwashed wools as compared with "Ohio fine [merino] fleece, shrinking 55 per cent in scouring," down to a duty of 6 cents per pound. And this is made on fine Ohio washed merino and other similar wools as compared with Australian unwashed.

On this the Bulletin of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, Boston, September, 1893, remarks:

"It will be seen that by exactly the same standard employed by Mauger & Avery in 1891 the measure of the present difference in the prices of these two wools is equivalent to 6 cents in favor of Ohio fine wool in the washed condition, or 13½ cents scoured. The prices of the two wools have drawn surprisingly near together, nearly half the difference which existed in 1891 having disappeared. It may be that there will be a still greater shading of the difference before we see the end of the deplorable conditions which now involve the financial and industrial interests of the United States. But there seems to be no likelihood that it will entirely disappear while the duty remains, as values can not continue to recede in this country without effecting a marked reduction in values elsewhere."

Thus, in practical effect, the law which intended to give 33 cents protection per scoured pound only gave a protection of 13½ cents! A continuance of this practical effect of the law would be palpable evasion of its purpose and a monstrous fraud on our woolgrowers.

In an able address to the National Wool Growers' Association, at Chicago, Ill., October 5, 1893, Hon. John T. Rich, governor of Michigan, discussed this subject, and from his own observation and investigation showed the effect of the skirting clause as stated. (See Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 35, Fifty-third Congress, second session, page 321.)

The same effect of "skirting" is equally applicable to wools of the second and third classes, though perhaps to less extent.

The paragraph 383, above quoted, contains within itself a palpable felo-de-se—the skirting clause—the frozen snake which, warmed into life, in practice stung, with more than an adder's deadly poison, the bosom that held it.

4. The light shrinkage of unwashed Australian merino and similar wools defeats the purpose of the McKinley Act. By reason of this they should be made to pay double the duty of unskirted, unwashed fleeces. All duties, in common fairness to all people and nations, and to secure "equal and exact justice," should be laid with a purpose to secure an equal amount of revenue from the scoured pounds in all wools of the same class imported. This can not be denied.

The McKinley Act of 1890, like the prior acts of 1867 and 1883, prescribed a duty on merino and some other varieties of wools "unwashed," and provedid also that the duty if the wools were "washed" shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed.

The intention of the law was to give twice as much duty on these washed wools as on unwashed.

These acts also provided for treble duties on "scoured" wools of all classes.

These provisions were made because merino fleeces in the natural condition would generally produce an average only of 33⅓ per cent of scoured wools, shrinking 66⅔ per cent in scouring. And the general experience was that at a fixed duty on unwashed merino double that rate was a fair equivalent for it on washed wools, and treble the unwashed rate was the proper equivalent on scoured wools.

Australasian wools are regarded as of the competing grades with Ohio merino and similar wools. Wools differ in their condition, some shrinking in washing and scouring more than others.

Thus in the Treasury Department Wool Report of 1888, page XXV, it is said:

"Percentage of scoured wool.—Unwashed merino wool shrinks from 50 to 80 per cent in scouring. The lightest and choicest Australian medium, unwashed, will yield 50 per cent less of scoured wool, and the heaviest Mestiza bucks' fleeces will yield about 20 per cent of pure scoured wool. Most unwashed wools yield 50 per cent of scoured wool. The light, open, coarse, unwashed wools of the carpet class yield from 50 to 70 per cent of scoured wool. Fine Ohio full-blood merino unwashed wool, exclusive of bucks' fleeces, yields from 35 to 40 per cent of scoured wool. The merino fleeces grown in Texas and on the Western prairies of the United States yield from 20 to 35 per cent of scoured wool. Unmerchantable Ohio fleeces yield from 37 to 40 per cent of scoured wool. British and Canada wools yield from 70 to 85 per cent of scoured wool. Crossbred washed Ohio fleeces yield from 60 to 80 per cent of scoured wool. Crossbred Western American prairie fleeces yield from 30 to 40 per cent of scoured wool. Tub-washed wools and crossbred sheep generally yield from 80 to 90 per cent of scoured wool. Scoured wools, as usually manufactured or as scoured for sale, yield from 85 to 90 per cent of scoured wool in rewashing."

Unwashed Buenos Ayres South American merino often shrinks 63 per cent in scouring, and Montevideo shrinks about 55 per cent. But Australasian merino, unwashed, imported into the United States, shrinks an average of considerably less than 50 per cent. The Boston American Wool and Cotton Reporter, of November 14, 1895, in quoting the market price of foreign wool, says:

"Fine Australian wool of good staple is still in demand at good prices. Fine Port Philip, shrinking 46 to 48 per cent, is offered at a clean cost of 44 cents, and in the grease at 24 cents. This wool is of good, sound staple."

This is unwashed merino, of the best grade of Australasian wool.

Washed Ohio merino will shrink in scouring an average of 55 per cent.

The calculations of Mauger & Avery, as to the amount of protection afforded by the act of 1890, estimated the average shrinkage of Ohio washed merino at 55 per cent.

It is evident that Australasian merino unwashed will shrink less than Ohio washed; but Ohio unwashed merino and the South American merino will shrink about 66 per cent, and our American merino from the States west of the Missouri will shrink, generally, even more than 66 per cent. * * *

In brief, the result is that under the McKinley Act of 1890 (a result not foreseen by Congress or by woolgrowers) Australian merino unwashed and "skirted," shrinking in scouring less than Ohio washed merino, was admitted at 11 cents duty, when the law was intended to give 22 cents on such wools.

In other words, the nominal duty of 11 cents per pound under the act of 1890 was in effect reduced, as shown by the table following.

*Table showing the reduction of the protective benefits of different tariff rates by importing wools shrinking in washing and scouring less than the wool tariff law contemplated.

	Measure of protection on raw wool.	On wool shrinking—
		20 per cent.	25 per cent.	30 per cent.	50 per cent.	60 per cent.	66 per cent.	70 per cent.	75 per cent.	80 per cent.
Duty on merino wool shrinking 50 per cent:	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
12 cents duty	12	----------	----------	----------	----------	9⅜	8 4/5	7½	6	4½
11 cents duty	11	----------	----------	----------	----------	8⅝	7 3/5	6⅞	5½	4⅛
10 cents duty	10	----------	----------	----------	----------	8	6⅔	6	5	4
8 cents duty	8	----------	----------	----------	----------	6⅜	5 3/5	4½	4	3½
6 cents duty	6	----------	----------	----------	----------	4⅞	4 2/5	3 3/5	3	2⅜
British and Canadian, shrinking 15 per cent:
12 cents duty	12	11 5/17	10 10/17	9 9/17	----------	----------	1 13/17	----------	----------	----------
Third class, shrinking 30 per cent:
4 cents duty	4	----------	----------	----------	2⅞	2⅜	1 13/20	1⅕	----------	----------
6 cents duty	6	----------	----------	----------	4⅜	3⅝	2 13/20	2¼	----------	----------
Third class, shrinking 40 per cent:
4 cents duty	4	----------	----------	----------	3½	2⅞	2 4/5	2	----------	----------
Third class, shrinking 33 per cent:
6 cents duty	6	----------	----------	----------	4 23/67	3 33/67	3 3/67	2 49/67	----------	1 53/67

* The computation is as follows: Suppose 1 pound of imported wool shrinks to 50 per cent in scouring, and 1 pound of protected wool shrinks to 40 per cent in scouring, then the value of the protected wool is ⅘ of the value of the imported wool. If a duty of 12 cents gives a measure of protection of 12 cents on raw wool, it would give ⅘ of 12 cents, or 9⅗ cents on scoured wool shrinking 60 per cent; ⅔ of 12 cents, or 8 4/5 cents, on scoured wool shrinking 66 per cent; ⅝ of 12 cents, or 7½ cents, on scoured wool shrinking 70 per cent; ¾ of 12 cents, or 6 cents, on scoured wool shrinking 75 per cent; ⅓ of 12 cents, or 4 cents, on scoured wool shrinking 80 per cent; and so on for all the other calculations.

The result is that under the act of 1890 a duty of 11 cents per pound on unwashed Australasian "skirted" merino wools of the same quality of American unwashed fleece merino gave to the woolgrowers of the United States a measure of protective benefit, as follows:

On American wools shrinking in scouring, specified per cent.	Protective benefit.	Deduct the added value to Australian wool by skirting.	Deduct the advantage in freights which Australians have over American far West wools.	Net benefit.	Less than no benefit.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
60	8¼	2	2½	4 3/4	----------
66	7 7/20	2	2½	2 9/20	----------
70	6⅝	2	2½	2 1/8	----------
75	5½	2	2½	1	----------
80	4⅜	2	2½	----------	0 1/8

The freight rates from some parts of the far West, especially California are less than 2½ cents per pound, but the charges for carriage from ranches to railroad stations constitute an item of expense, and these wools are subject to commissions in reaching the manufacturers.

The Chicago American Sheep Breeder, a reliable, able, and valuable journal, after careful inquiry, gave the following in the December number, 1895:

"Transmississippi rates.—Current freight rates on wool from points west of the Mississippi River to New York, Philadelphia, and Boston are substantially as follows: From Montana and the Dakotas, $1.50 per 100 pounds; from Wyoming, Idaho, eastern Oregon, and Utah, $1.90 per 100 pounds; from Arizona and New Mexico, $2.50 per 100 pounds; from Colorado, $2 per 100 pounds.

"Ocean rates on foreign wools.—From South America to the three principal United States ports above named the cost is about $1.17½ per 100 pounds; from Turkey, 70 cents per 100 pounds; from South Africa, $1.15 per 100 pounds; from Russia, 55 cents per 100 pounds; from China, 65 cents per 100 pounds by sailing vessel and 30 cents by steamship; and from London, England, the great dumping ground of the free wools of the world, the current rate is about 25 cents per 100 pounds."—ED.

Wool can be brought from Australasia to Boston for 1 cent per pound, including freight, commissions, and handling. This statement is from reliable information obtained by Hon. THOMAS B. CATRON, now a Delegate in Congress from New Mexico.

The retained "conditions and limitations" would reduce the proposed tariff to a trifle more than one-fourth of the nominal rate of duty fixed by the McKinley Act. Wherein, I pray, does such a measure protect the American woolgrower?

It is now conceded by those well informed in the wool trade that regardless of the tariff duties which this Congress may impose upon wool the price of American wool for the coming season will not be enhanced. In a circular letter issued on the 15th of this month by Messrs. Justice, Bateman & Co., wool commission merchants of Philadelphia, I find the following significant paragraphs:

In view of the increased supply, as shown in Table B, and the demand caused by the loss of employment to American mills, it is suspected that the advance so earnestly looked for in the event of the passage of the Dingley revenue bill may not fully materialize.

In commercial affairs the future is largely discounted. This was the case at the time of the passage of the McKinley bill. In anticipation of that event the country was flooded with imported wool and woolen goods to such a degree that prices were actually lower after the McKinley bill was passed than they were before. * * *

The recent foreign purchases of wool are not believed to be immediately needed, but have largely been secured in order to forestall the probable action of Congress with regard to the imposition of tariff duties.

I venture to predict that the price of American wool the coming season will be less than it was last year—tariff or no tariff. It is then obvious that it is not a matter of any advantage to the woolgrowers of this country to secure the immediate passage of a law inherently unjust to them, notoriously inadequate as a measure of protection, and yet quite sufficient under certain contingencies that can be clearly foreseen to furnish the basis for an argument against doing justice to them in the future by deprecating tariff agitation. Should it become expedient to the self-satisfied manufacturing elements of the country to settle their business upon the basis of the increased duties proposed by this bill and to resist a further opening of the discussion on the tariff, the woolgrowers would be everywhere met with the suggestion that they have protection under existing law, when in truth and fact every well-informed individual in the country knows that the proposed bill offers no protection at all to sheep husbandry.

Turn to section 2 of the bill and mark well the manner in which the manufacturer of woolens is taken care of. You will find no 15 per cent horizontal increase here. It must be borne in mind that the woolen goods referred to in the first subdivision of the section are subject to ad valorem duties ranging from 25 to 50 per cent and averaging about 40 per cent under existing law. To the existing duty the bill proposes to add 60 per cent of the specific square-yard duty imposed on each of the articles by the McKinley Act. In the second subdivision of the section it will be observed that per centum is wholly omitted and the entire specific square-yard duty imposed by the McKinley Act on carpets and other enumerated articles is added to the ad valorem duty imposed by existing law.

I do not assert that these provisions will increase the duties on manufactured woolens beyond the rates fixed by the act of 1890, but I do assert and call attention to the fact that the proviso in section 4, intended to preclude such result under the operations of that section, does not apply to the section under consideration. Nor do I assert that unreasonable or even adequate protection will be afforded woolen manufactures by the doubling up of duties in the manner provided. I do, however, emphatically maintain that the bill displays manifest partiality for the manufacturer. To this discrimination against the woolgrowers of the country justice commands a solemn protest. This is the time to enter it. Should this bill become a law, who can fairly predict that when seeking to equalize its inequalities the woolgrowers will not be met with the opposition of the manufacturers? May not those well provided for in a patriotic mood deprecate future tariff agitation as detrimental to the business interests of the country? While disclaiming undue suspicion, we must insist that a prudent regard for our welfare requires that justice be done now.

At this juncture we may turn with profit to page 852 of the recently issued autobiography of the eminent Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. Referring to the opposition to an adequate protection for wool in the bill of 1883, the Senator says that much the most dangerous opposition arose from—

The conflict of selfish and local interests, mainly on the part of manufacturers, who regarded all articles which they purchased as raw material, on which they wished the lowest possible rate of duty, or none at all, and their work as the finished product, on which they wished the highest rate of duty. In other words, what they had to buy they called raw material, to be admitted without protection, and what they had to sell they wanted protected.

Knowing that the pending bill bears evidence of the selfish disposition which the Senator ascribes to the manufacturers and fearing that when intrenched behind adequate protection they might feel generously inclined to the discontinuance of tariff agitation, who can doubt the prudence and propriety of insisting that the emergency bill shall be fairly just to begin with? This position is not taken in any spirit of antagonism to the manufacturers. He who underestimates the potent power of self-interest as a factor in controlling the actions of men eliminates a prime element entitled to serious consideration. For the American manufacturers I entertain the most profound respect. To their genius and enterprise the marvelous development of our national life is in no small measure attributable. Whether the factory is located in Boston or San Francisco is wholly immaterial. In either place it operates under the American flag, and I am for it as against a factory operating under any other flag. I merely insist on the Republican principle that tariff duties shall be free from unjust discriminations and that the whole instead of a part of the Republican platform shall be regarded as binding on Republicans. Any other position is illogical and unjust and can not therefore be maintained.

It will not answer to say that this bill would, if it became a law, expire by limitation in 1898. If in the meantime no law should be enacted to take its place as a revenue-producing agency everyone knows that the same elements now praying for its passage would demand its continuance through the simple means of a resolution or a line added to an appropriation bill.

Let no one be deceived. If the intricate tariff riddle which this bill would construct on our statute books should prove reasonably satisfactory to the manufacturers of the country, it would remain the law of the land for an indefinite period of time.

Entertaining these views, I can not vote for the bill as presented. Amendment in the open Senate would be wanting in that careful consideration for the revenue-producing quality of the measure which is the only possible justification for its existence. The motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance without instructions will leave that honorable body at liberty to prepare and present to the Senate a fair and just bill which every Republican can conscientiously support. The veto message of the President on a true Republican measure would raise an issue; while his veto message on the pending bill would raise a laugh at the expense of the Republican party.

When the party on any pretext departs from its platform and traditions it drifts on the troubled waters of a shoreless sea without compass or rudder.

Should this bill in its present form become a law, it would either utterly fail to bring about the repose in business affairs anticipated or it would bring that repose at the permanent expense of the producers of so-called raw material the country over and with special injustice to the woolgrowers of the nation. The much-desired repose is not worth the price. The adjustment would involve a moral wrong, and it could not therefore be made politically right.

If the provisions of this bill can not be made equitable and just, the Republican party should not be chargeable before the country with inflicting it upon the people.

But gentlemen suggest that an emergency is upon us; that two years' time will be lost unless something is done now. The President insists that no emergency exists such as we contemplate. We do not agree with the President, nor have we the constitutional power to compel him to agree with us. If recent elections conveyed any command to Republicans in Congress, they commanded them to restore Republican principles to the statute books. They were not commanded to compromise or barter away the clear and distinct announcement of party principles set forth in the platform of 1892. In that year a majority of the people selected the present Executive. He is the President of the Republic by the voice of the majority. The element of time was taken into consideration when the ballots were cast. The President is responsible for the executive department of the Government. We can not, save for willful violation of the Constitution and laws, question his right to administer the office intrusted to him by the suffrages of the people according to his personal views of the theories of his party until the expiration of the term for which he was elected.

The Republican party can not be convicted of any responsibility for the Administration. No peril confronts the State. The public credit is in no danger. The Treasury statement of yesterday, taken in conjunction with the very wise estimate of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, shows that if the deficiency of $30,000,000 per annum continues in the future it will require ten years of the operation to exhaust the money now in the Treasury, held there as a surplus. With a deficiency of $30,000,000 per annum, and $300,000,000 on hand to meet the deficiency, or practically so, it will take just ten years to exhaust the surplus. But I understand the endless-chain proposition will be interjected at that point. To that subject appropriate attention will be given in due season.

The country never was so rich and powerful as it is to-day. Around the stock-jobbing and storm centers of trade and speculation, where Mr. Cleveland generally received his most pronounced majorities, we find clamorous unrest as the gathering of bitter but legitimate fruit goes on, and in the midst of confusion the Republican party is called upon to stultify its record and pass up for the veto of an opposition President a tariff bill which would prove a perpetual source of humiliation and annoyance to it.

The great body of the thoughtful everyday people of the country understand the situation perfectly, and if we hold steadily by plain, well-known party principles the voters will arrange to give the country adequate relief in due season. For Republicans in Congress to stampede and rush wildly into the forbidden meshes of horizontal revision and ad valorem duties, spread over the monstrous inequalities of the Wilson tariff bill, seems to me the height of folly.

Save as a source of annoyance to its authors, this bill if enacted would soon be forgotten. The ordinary business stagnation preceding a Presidential election will accentuate the disorder which has prevailed for the past three years. The occasion is inopportune for the Republican party to enter into political partnership with the Administration. Let issues be kept free from complications and the general situation free from confusion. Limit the extent of the revenue measure, if you will, but let every line of it be in harmony with the best Republicanism we have.

I am a firm believer in the policy of protection to American labor and American industries. A large majority of the people of Montana are devoted to this doctrine, and they have consistently supported it, notwithstanding they are purchasers of protected articles generally and only receive a meager direct benefit through the duties on lead and wool. Their adherence to the doctrine rests on broad, patriotic views of enlightened national policy.

The Republicans of Montana likewise, in common with a large number of Republicans the country over, believe in another article of Republican faith, promulgated over and over again by the Republican party and reaffirmed in the national platform of 1892 in the following words:

> The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal.

Every Republican in this country believed and had a right to believe that the portion of the platform quoted was adopted in good faith. It was not suspected nor can it be fairly suspected that the convention resorted to the Talleyrand scheme of using words to conceal rather than to express thoughts. If that plank in the platform was a mere cunning device, contrived to deceive people into parting with their suffrage under false pretenses, the party then and there forfeited its right to the confidence, respect, and support of every honest citizen of the Republic. I do not believe the convention acted in bad faith. On the contrary, I am persuaded that the principle announced favoring gold and silver as the standard money of the country was the expression of the crystallized opinion of well-nigh a thousand representative citizens, fresh from their homes and town meetings, assembled in national convention to give utterance to the views of a great party on great questions involving the present and future prosperity and well-being of this nation. It is my candid belief, often expressed, that fully 90 per cent of the American people favor bimetallism as opposed to either gold or silver monometallism. The almost inspired framers of our Constitution, of whom it is truly said, "They builded better than they knew," launched this ship of state with bimetallism as the sheet anchor of our monetary system. Their wisdom in that behalf has been sanctioned by the vast weight of authority on monetary science. Without public discussion silver was eliminated from the coinage of the country twenty-odd years ago. From that time to this constant efforts have been made to reestablish free silver coinage. The Republican party has always professed itself favorable to the consummation of this desired purpose. Within the party differences of opinion have existed, not upon the principle involved, but upon the methods which should be employed to bring about the desired result. Certain Republicans of mature judgment, wide research, and unquestionable integrity of purpose have urged the party to undo by law the mischief brought about by law. This element in the party is known as the free-silver element. Recently certain self-constituted censors of party action have been pleased to denominate such Republicans as conspirators against the public weal; others have gone so far as to invite them to relieve the party of their obnoxious presence. They have been advised that their States are not needed in Republican columns. Garrulous statesmen, possessed of more zeal than knowledge, have assumed to deal with party principles by the measure of party necessity.

The advocates of the free and unlimited coinage of silver in the Republican party insist upon the adoption of their views because they believe that the principle for which they contend is inherently and eternally right. Their zeal and enthusiasm in behalf of silver do not detract from their devotion to every elementary principle of the Republican party. Their Republicanism, however, is placed on trial, and I therefore beg leave to briefly review the history of recent events, to the end that this history may shed some light upon true allegiance to Republican principles.

Through unrest born of a surfeit of prosperity and in a spirit of antagonism on the part of the laborer toward his employer, the voters of the country elected a free-trade Democratic Administration in the fall of 1892. As a coming event, casting its shadow before, the prospective Democratic Administration was preceded by a feeling of alarm and serious concern throughout all the channels of trade, business, and industry. A general feeling of apprehension pervaded the country when Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated in March, 1893. He was the apostle of tariff reform. Tariff reform involved the wiping out of the protective system. A full realization of this fact appalled the sober second thought of the country. The feeling of alarm became general, business enterprises were curtailed, investments were checked, and to the extent of their ability the people stood still. At this momentous point the spark of genius appeared in one of the most determined men this country has ever known. When the history of our age shall be written, Mr. Cleveland will be accorded the honor of having displayed the most marvelous political tact of any man of his time. Mark the wonderful stage play. Within thirty days after his inauguration the deep, dark cloud which hung over the country because of the presence of his own party in power was attributed to another and wholly inadequate cause. He suggested that the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver each month was bringing the country to the verge of ruin. So adroitly was this proposition presented and so cordially did the friends of the gold standard around the speculative centers cooperate that within a brief time the country was prepared for an extraordinary session of Congress to repeal the Sherman law. It was predicted that the repeal of this law would dispel the universal gloom and bring gladness and joy to every heart. Forgetting the party platform, a coterie of Republicans in and out of Congress chattered like a flock of magpies about the overwhelming evils of silver coinage. Congress assembled. The Republican Senators and Representatives who remembered and felt inclined to faithfully regard the party platform resisted the efforts of the President to wipe the last vestige of silver legislation from the statute books. They cited the fact that the platform of 1892 was the law of the party, and that law read then as it reads now, as follows:

The American people from tradition and interest favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money.

The Republicans who resisted the Administration in that effort to effectively wipe silver legislation from the statute books may without fear measure their Republicanism with the Republicanism of the Senators and Representatives who cooperated with the Administration in that proceeding. The Republicans who stood in opposition to the Administration stood on the principles of the Republican party; those who cooperated with the Administration violated a party principle, clearly and distinctly announced. The Sherman Act was repealed, but the depression in business still continued. The operator had drawn the wrong tooth. The attention of the country, however, had been in the meantime diverted from the Administration and its flagrant violations of the civil-service rules and the Wilson bill had been fairly well prepared. The regular session of Congress passed that bill. The Sherman law was no more, and yet disorder, doubt, uncertainty, yea, even despair, pervaded the country. Another exhibition of genius. The President suggested that the greenback was the cause of the trouble, and that in the interest of what he was pleased to call "sound money" the greenback should be retired and an interest-bearing bond substituted for it. Again we hear the Republican magpie chatter. A horde of Presidential aspirants rushed to political suicide yelling "sound money." The press of New York City leads the procession—"sound money" is the war cry, and under the cover of this cry the President protected himself and his Administration from just criticism for the most shady and iniquitous transaction in public finances the world has ever known.

In due time the present Congress assembled and the President does not call for more revenue, pertinaciously insisting that the revenue laws are all right, but called for authority to issue bonds, so as to facilitate the retirement of the greenback and his operations in an increase of the public debt. The sentiment of the country is found to be overwhelmingly against the issuance of bonds in times of peace. There is some doubt about the success of the operation. Mutterings are heard about the previous bond sale, when, lo and behold, there comes another exhibition of genius. A venerable dispute of the age of three score and ten, concerning a strip of swamp land in Venezuela, is rushed upon the country with an amount of stage fittings and settings appropriate to the purpose rather than to the subject, and we are proudly informed that the same hand that authorized the tearing down of the flag at Honolulu will sustain the Government at all hazards, even unto the horrors and terrors of war. By this time certain Republicans of the East have become used to bobbing up and down like a cork on the water at the suggestion of the President, and instantly we see a resolution passed appropriating $100,000 for a commission to advise the Executive on points on which ample facilities for information were at the time at his disposal. Great speeches were made and the country filled with noise. The President understood the string upon which to play; he played the part of an artist. The patriotism of the American people will never be appealed to in vain. They will even rush out on a false alarm, as they did in this case. This is a noble and a generous attribute of our people, who love their flag and all that it means for freedom and good government.

Now that the smoke has disappeared and the noise has subsided, let us see what it all meant. December 17 the flaming, warlike Venezuelan message was given to Congress and the country. A fervid and universal outburst of patriotism followed; intense excitement pervaded the country; loyal citizens and organized companies tendered their services to the Chief Executive. In the midst of this warlike excitement, on the evening of December 20, just three days having been allowed to work Congress and the country up, another message followed, in effect renewing the call for the retirement of the greenbacks and authority to issue bonds. Conservative men were swept off their feet. The last message adroitly referred to the first, and an impressive warning was suggested to the country. Who could think of party principles at such a juncture? We were persuaded that war was upon us. Under pressure of this artificial but exacting and exciting situation the revenue and bond bills were passed by the House. The RECORD shows that three and one-half hours were allowed for the consideration of the revenue measure and about one day to the consideration of the bond bill. To insure speedy relief Republicans dropped their own principles on economic legislation and in lieu thereof accepted three distinctly Democratic heresies on the tariff—horizontal revision, ad valorem duties, and the Wilson bill—as a foundation for a revenue scheme, and they proceeded to its enactment, fondly hoping that the President might condescendingly consent to favor it with his signature or his sufferance. The bill reaches the Senate; a substitute is reported for it. Certain patriotic Republicans, forgetting the platform of 1892 on the tariff question, forgetting all the traditions of their party, seek to have Republicans in this Chamber who are devoted to bimetallism and protection, two elementary principles of Republican faith, put in such position as apparently to be compelled to vote against one of their principles in order to secure the success of the other. Some gentlemen who pretended to understand the situation refused to cooperate. To the candid judgment of honest men I leave the determination of questions relating to the fidelity of Republicans in this Senate to their party principles. The Republicans alleged to have proven recreant to Republican principles resisted the effort of the Administration to strike the last silver-coinage law from the statute books; they resisted the passage of the Wilson bill; they resisted the issuance of bonds in times of peace; they resisted the contraction of the currency by the retirement of the greenbacks, and they now resist an inferential violation of the principles of the Republican party platform by resisting approval of horizontal tariff revision, ad valorem duties, and the Wilson bill. Upon these propositions the accused Senators may safely rely for the favorable judgment of their fellow-citizens.

It is far from my purpose to refer to the action of any Republican or set of Republicans in a spirit of hostility, nor would I have it understood that I entertain any unkind feeling toward the great body of manufacturers, of whom this nation may feel justly proud. For New England, that great beehive of industry, and for its people I have the highest possible regard and admiration. The delegations in Congress from New England reflect credit upon their people and challenge the admiration of all. Admonished by the experience of a century, the people of New England have retained their Senators and Representatives in public life until the delegations from those States have become in the National Councils veritable legislative gladiators. The people of New England are to be congratulated upon the great advantage their wise course of action has secured for them in national legislation. I speak for harmony and not for discord. A body of Senators and Representatives in these Halls, representing well-nigh two-thirds of the American Continent, believe sincerely and earnestly not in part, but in all of the Republican platform. They support as cordially that portion which appeals with special interest to New England as they do the broader principle which applies to the entire nation with equal effect. They hope and believe that through the agency of the Republican party the great principles for which the party platform pronounced may ultimately be crystallized into law. They present their view as to the means to be employed on the silver question to bring about the purpose the party has proclaimed as its own. They are not met with argument or a counter proposition from any source. With one honorable exception, Eastern Republican Senators clearly ignore the party platform on the subject of bimetallism. The Republican advocates of the free coinage of silver here are as solicitous for the national honor and the national credit as are the representatives from any State or section of this Union. You can not make any safeguard too strong to insure the preservation of the integrity of our coinage and currency system as approved by the Republican platform, but no safeguards are requested; no modifications of our free-coinage propositions are suggested; stern opposition to the whole party platform on the coinage question is counseled; brutal assaults are made not only upon the Senators and Representatives, but upon the unoffending people of the States they represent as well. This is thoughtless; this is dishonest; this is unjust; this is treasonable to the principles and traditions of the Republican party.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Montana will be allowed to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave will be granted.

Mr. FRYE. Let the Cuban resolution be temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the order of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. The Republicans of the East can not maintain this position of total opposition to legislation in behalf of silver without openly, clearly, and distinctly proclaiming that the plank of the party platform relating to silver and gold was in their view a fraud, a delusion, and a snare, and in that position the conscience of the Republican party of the nation will not sustain or justify them. The Eastern Republican opposition to silver legislation is unseemly and unwise. It has become fashionable apparently to abuse silver Republican Senators and silver Republican States, and thoughtless Republicans have injudiciously announced that Western States may take up their "traps" and leave the Republican party—that their votes are not needed. Happily the invitation lacks commanding authority. It is commonly stated that a great mistake was made in according to freeborn American citizens, who blazed the trails and opened the way to civilization, the full privileges of their birthright, although assembled in sufficient numbers within adequate territory, and possessed of all the necessary qualifications for Statehood. Magnificent Commonwealths are referred to as "pocket boroughs," and it is even now suggested that the people of New Mexico, who have been prepared for Statehood for a generation, shall be longer condemned to a condition of political servility and denied their rights as American citizens because their sentiments on the money question do not suit the gentlemen who handle the tape on Wall street. It is important that Republicans should understand that this thoughtless chatter, this malicious and unjustifiable abuse, if not tempered by the better sense of the Republicans who meet in national convention, will inevitably lead to a decree forever forbidding the Republican party from placing another law on the statute books of this nation. To conceal the gravity of the situation will serve no useful purpose. Timely admonition will prove an element of saving grace. The great West is the offspring of the Republican party, and its people believe in all the proclaimed principles of the party. They have endured and are now patiently enduring all the unnatural parental vituperation inflicted by the minions of an alien policy, masquerading under Republican colors. They gravely apprehend that the influence of Clevelandism has largely supplanted Republicanism in the East on a feature of party policy which they hold as sacred as the doctrine of protection.

On protection and bimetallism as the basis of the economic and financial policy of the country the whole West is united. The party which accepts the one and ridicules the other can not expect support from the people of that section of the country. The mysterious phrase "sound money" is well understood to mean the single gold standard. The President was wanting in his usual courage when he selected that phrase instead of more plain and candid words. Courage gave way to caution. He well knew mystery would charm followers, while the naked truth would incite opposition. No single gold standard party can gain supremacy under its proper name in this country. The majority of the people are protectionists, and each day brings a protectionist closer to a full realization of the utter impotency of a protective tariff under a single gold standard of money. The constant appreciation of the dollar more than offsets the intended benefit of the schedules. The manufacturer who pays for labor and material in depreciated silver and sells his product on the gold standard will inevitably command the market. He who pays for labor and materials in gold can not meet the competition. Asiatic instead of European competition menaces our manufacturers to-day.

It is not my purpose, however, to undertake to discuss at this time either the silver or the tariff question. I would, if it were possible, speak in tones that might reach every Republican in this country to call attention to the party platform of 1892. Honestly carried out, it would give us protection and bimetallism; not one, but both. I commend the careful consideration of the platform to those Republicans who deem it their duty to stand by the President, and feel called upon while so doing to employ the language of vituperation in dealing with the Republicans who, in their simple faith, believe in party principles first, last, and all the time. Free trade and the gold standard naturally go together. The position of the President is logical. His free-trade policy would quickly drive manufacturing from this country to Europe and Asia, and our people would become producers of raw material to supply the factories of other lands. Let no Republican be deceived. He who follows the President antagonizes the principles and purposes of the Republican party. Every Republican who joins the President in his demand for the absolute fixing of the single gold standard upon this country, to the permanent exclusion of all hope for bimetallism, makes his contribution to a force destined to disrupt and destroy the party. It is high time that Republicans who claim to be within the party should take their cues from the party platform rather than from the White House. If it shall occur that this senseless crusade against Republicans who believed in good faith in the Minneapolis platform when it declared for bimetallism as well as protection shall be carried to such an extent as may result in the adoption of President Cleveland's scheme by the St. Louis convention, I submit that Republican success will be rendered utterly impossible. If the platform of 1896 announce to the country, in conjunction with the action of Republicans between the two conventions, that the plank on bimetallism adopted at Minneapolis was a delusion, a fraud, and a snare, it would be just as well for the Republican party not to make a nomination at St. Louis at all. I grant that the candidate might possibly be elected, not upon the platform, but as the result of widespread discontent. The same force that placed him in the Presidential chair would in turn destroy his administration; it would be a meaningless triumph; it would be but a personal triumph; it would be a triumph at the expense of time-honored principles, and could not in the nature of things aid in advancing the principles and purposes which we now understand to be the avowed principles and purposes of the Republican organization. A large percentage of the Republican party all over this country believes that protection under the gold standard will not protect. Such a platform as would be the logical outcome of Republican following of President Cleveland's scheme would leave the Republican party in this Chamber with scarcely enough members to second a demand for the yeas and nays. It can not be expected Republicans elected to the Senate under one platform will in the course of their official terms feel justified in accepting an entirely antagonistic platform as a binding rule of action.

In the plain view of these facts, the drift of the Republican party in this Eastern section of the country toward Clevelandism and the gold standard is to me an appalling spectacle. In the name of all the Republican party means to human civilization, let Republicans in and out of Congress take counsel of their own party platform and traditions and cease blind devotion to the false god who deals in mysterious phrases. Upon our own platform of protection and bimetallism honestly and fairly carried into law we may securely rest the present and the future prosperity and greatness of this Republic; under that platform honestly carried out the clearing house of Christendom would be inside of a decade transferred from London to New York; internal activity would be so far stimulated and vitalized that our exports would exceed our imports, giving unto us the power to proclaim a money system of our own, based upon gold and silver as money of final redemption. In conformity with that platform, the departed greatness of our merchant marine would be restored; our Navy would be increased to a strength second to no naval police force in the world; the Nicaragua Canal would be constructed: the trade of Central and South America, China, Japan, and India would be transferred to our shores from the shores of the British Isles; in short, all that the Republican party stands for and means for good government and vigorous administration can be secured under an honest construction and a fair administration in accordance with the principles of the Republican platform of 1892.

The maintenance of the unity and integrity of the Republican party is of overshadowing importance to the country. In the midst of the prevailing chaos of theories on public questions, we owe it to the past and to the future to stand firmly by our proclaimed principles, without evasion, mental reservation, or purpose to deceive. The pending measure, born under the passing excitement of a manufactured war cloud, would do the country no good, but it would do the party great injury by making it share responsibility for the gloom which appeared and will depart with this Administration. One year from the 4th day of March a Republican President may call an extraordinary session of Congress. Guided by wise, consistent, and temperate counsel in the meantime, Republican majorities will assemble in both branches of Congress. To the serious business of the country, prompt and competent attention will be guaranteed. Smoke will issue from the factories again; the laborer will joyously emerge from enforced idleness, tempered in thought by the knowledge sad experience has given; confidence will mark the step of the plowman; the miner will strike the drill with renewed energy; the merchant will stock his gaping shelves anew; hope and determination will cheer and strengthen every citizen; the long floor walk of the anxious banker will cease, and the great Republic, under the beneficent influence of the progressive American policy to which its magnificent energies so warmly respond, will again resume its career of prosperity. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. HOAR. I desire, before the Senator from Montana takes his seat, to ask him a question. I did not like to interrupt the Senator during his very interesting and powerful speech, which I have heard with great pleasure and admiration; but I should like, with his leave, now to ask him one simple question, and I should like to preface that question, if I may be permitted, with a brief statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have always been one of those who in a public life, now lasting nearly twenty-eight years in this and the other House, have voted in accordance with the desires of the representatives of the woolgrowing communities in this country. There has, so far as I remember, never been a discussion of that subject in which I have not given my voice and my vote for the largest protection on wool and on the other interests of those communities that they have themselves desired, and I believe it is true that there has been no instance in which the representatives of the manufacturing States, both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, have not joined in those votes. I believe that when, as a permanent policy in this country, protection to wool is doomed, protection is doomed. As I had the honor to say when the Wilson bill was pending in the Senate, it is with protection and wool as in Byron's prophecy—

> While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
> When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall.

And he is a purblind manufacturer, whether in New England or elsewhere, who supposes that the American people will consent to continue the protection on his own industry which is denied to the farmer and the woolgrower of the great West. I desire to remind my honorable friend that this protection upon wool has been supported by the votes of New England against the votes of the woolgrowing States themselves. When Ohio halted between two opinions, when California gave her vote for free trade, when Texas sent her representatives here to champion in this and the other House the policy which struck down one of their own most important industries, the manufacturing interests of New England have stood firm and stanch in its support. When the wool schedule was on its passage two years ago I rose in my place here and asked the representatives from the woolgrowing States if they could suggest any one thing which the New England Senators had failed to do which would help to save the tariff on wool, or which they could then do to avert the destruction of that protection. I asked that question of the then Senator from Montana, the predecessor of my honorable friend, and the other representatives of the woolgrowing States, and one after another, the Senator from Montana, the Senator from Colorado, and one or two other Senators, with a candor which became them, rose and replied that there was nothing of which they complained of New England in that particular.

Mr. President, I have no misgivings as to the policy which I have always supported, and which the American people have pursued, of introducing to their place in the Union these new States whenever their population is large enough for a single Representative district. I am opposed utterly, whether they vote with me or against me, to holding these communities in a Territorial condition unnecessarily. I have no misgivings, either, as to the great doctrine of the equality of the States in this body. Let the representatives of those ten new States which have lately come in cast their votes every time honestly and fairly against the policies which the people I represent hold dear; I shall encounter them in fair debate so far as I can; I shall try to persuade them so far as I can; but if I do fail, I am still content, and shall trust to time, to their getting the interests and the opinions which belong to orderly, wealthy States, with a diversity of industry, to bring them around to the proper opinion as I conceive.

But the Senator from Montana charges that the Eastern Republicans, or some of them, have been false to the platform of 1892, adopted at Minneapolis, as he interprets it and understands it. Does that Senator mean to say that the interpretation put upon that platform by Benjamin Harrison, the candidate whom the party there nominated as their standard bearer, was delusive, fraudulent, or misleading?

Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I will put the Senator another question, if he will wait.

Mr. CARTER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. The people of this country, as the Senator has well said and truly said, 90 per cent of them, are bimetallists. They believe in the doctrine which he read from that platform, and they believe in the concurrent and continued use of silver as well as gold, not merely as token or subsidiary money, but as the world's standard of value.

The Senator talks about our joining the party of President Cleveland. Whence came the great majority which swept this country in condemnation of President Cleveland in the autumn of the year 1894? Of the six New England States there was one solitary lone star—one Democratic Representative—dividing that New England delegation. I have not authority to speak for that gentleman, but I am very much afraid that if he were put into a corner and cross-examined as to his opinion of President Cleveland it would be one that would give great satisfaction to my honorable friend from Montana.

But, Mr. President, it unfortunately happens that there are two opinions in this country among Republicans and among Democrats on this practical question. One party believes that we can restore silver to an equality with gold at a ratio of 16 to 1 by the sole power of this country, and that the passage of such a measure would restore bimetallism. Another party in this country believes, with equal sincerity, that to do that by this country alone would create silver monometallism and banish gold from the country; that it would give us instead of gold a fluctuating, constantly depreciating standard of value, so that the value of the money to be paid would never be the same as the value of the money in which credit was given; that the value of the money which the workman is to receive would not be the same as it was when his contract for service was entered into, and that the result of that policy would be to bring all business whatever into the class of gambling; that it is impossible for a country to maintain the value of a money in which it can not pay foreign debts and in which foreign exchanges can not be transacted. I am not saying which of those two theories is right; but I am stating the theory that the people of New England entertain. It is the theory that a large majority of the American people entertain; it is the theory that a considerable majority of the Republicans in this Senate entertain; it is the theory which a vast majority of the House of Representatives, fresh from the people with their last commission, entertain.

Now, I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Montana this question, whether we are to understand him as saying that if he fail to convince us, if he fail to convince the majority of the American people, if he fail to convince the majority of his Republican associates that they are wrong and he is right, he proposes to say to them, "You shall not pass any protective tariff unless you surrender your honest convictions, the opinions of the majority, and come over to us"? If a protective tariff bill be hereafter presented, fair and just to the whole country, based on Republican principles, providing for the industries of the Northwest and the new States, with a just tariff on wool, a just tariff on lead, and the other products of those States, and a just tariff on the fruits of California, do you mean to say to us, "You shall not pass that tariff, if we can help it, unless you surrender your honest convictions on what is true bimetallism"? That is the question.

I do not justify the views of the Eastern press of my honorable friend and his companions, but I think that if the Senator reads the papers in his own section of the country he will find that they are not far behindhand. I have myself had the honor of being hanged in effigy in a bimetallist State for advocating in secret session on a treaty what I thought were the true principles of the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. I have had my mail packed with abusive and scurrilous articles against me, insignificant and humble as I am on this question and on this floor, whose scurrilous vituperation would have set Dean Swift crazy and made him turn green with envy. [Laughter.] I wonder how posterity will think of the great, useful life of JOHN SHERMAN if they read the account of him in the Western press as the thief, the trickster, the man who defrauded the American people by stealth by getting silver demonetized, and who was so anxious to keep it a secret that he only had the bill printed thirteen times! That chorus comes up from the whole West against the old and honored leaders of the Republican party, the men who carried this country through war and calamity. Well, it is a very trifling matter, after all. Nobody yet was ever hurt by a little talk, a little abuse, a little printer's ink.

But this is the one question about which the serious people of my part of the country are concerned, the question whether we are acting in good faith and on an equality.

Now, I say to you, vote me down on this question of free coinage of silver or any policy that seems to you to be inconsistent with your opinions upon it, and, sorry and mortified and humiliated as I shall be, I shall walk straight up in half an hour afterwards and vote for any measure which the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Montana may show me is to the interest of his State; and if out of revenge, out of anger, out of a desire to force my miserable, little notions against the judgment of the majority of my associates, the majority of the representatives of the American people, I did not do it, I should not dare to go back to New England and face my constituents. I should be hurled out of power, if I did that thing, with an indignation and scorn and contempt which would make miserable the rest of my life and the life of all my posterity for generations to come.

Some persons have understood the gentlemen who stand with my honorable friend from Nevada to say something different from that, and say that, "unless you will surrender and swallow your convictions on this matter of bimetallism and undertake to have the United States do this thing alone, you shall not have, if we can help it, the protective tariff or any other measure which will benefit you more than it benefits us."

I should like the further information whether we are to understand the Senator from Montana as occupying that attitude, or whether, if it shall turn out that he fails to convince the majority of the American people that he is right in this matter of silver, he is going to say, "I shall destroy every interest of the American people that I can strike at."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I esteem it a privilege to respond to the inquiry propounded by the able and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. Of the liberality of view, of the broad patriotism of which he speaks, of his fidelity to every public interest of serious concern to this nation there does not exist a question anywhere between the two oceans or between Maine and Texas.

Relative to the question first propounded as to whether the Republican platform as interpreted by Benjamin Harrison, the candidate of the party in 1892, meets with approval, I beg leave to say that I regret that that portion of the question was propounded. It was not my purpose in the course of any remarks made here, nor has it been at any time, to undertake to limit or advance the political fortunes of any honorable member of the party aspiring to the high office of President of this Republic. Since, however, that question has been propounded, let me say that while the Republicans who believe that the party platform might be carried to its full fruition by direct act of Congress, were not wholly satisfied with the Administration and the purposes of Mr. Harrison, they did feel, and were led to feel by his constant efforts, that the Administration was honestly and conscientiously seeking to give expression to the consensus of Republican opinion of the country by passing favorable laws and bringing about the adoption of favorable measures looking to the reestablishment of silver.

To review that Administration would be to look to the origin of the Sherman law and the proposition of Secretary Windom thereafter, made in the Fifty-first Congress, to increase the purchases of silver from four and a half million to six million ounces per month.

Again, we would call the attention of the Western people to the fact that the Administration, not very cordially supported by Republicans from other sections of the country, it is true, undertook to bring about, and did bring about, an international conference with a view to securing the adoption of the bimetallic standard by several of the leading commercial nations. The interpretation of the platform by President Harrison, who proved by his action to be conscientiously and honestly disposed to give full and free expression to it and to the administration of the law, coming from that source, was reasonably satisfactory to our people as furnishing a beacon light for hope.

If, upon the other hand, the interpretation of the platform is to be considered in the light of a majority party action on this floor since then, I say we could not accept the interpretation. They seem to assume that the Minneapolis platform commanded them to wipe the last vestige of legislation favorable to silver from the statutes. With that construction of the platform we are at war now and shall continue to be at war.

Mr. GEAR. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. CARTER. I am answering a question now.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to ask him only one question. Does the Senator not know that the Minneapolis platform was drawn largely by two distinguished Senators on this floor, one, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and the other the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and that those gentlemen then and there professed, and I think they were honest in it, that they were fairly well satisfied with that platform?

Mr. CARTER. Admitted. I am glad that the suggestion is made, but the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Colorado did not understand, with their limited knowledge of the English language and what it ordinarily means [laughter], that the platform meant the total obliteration of all legislation in favor of silver.

Mr. GEAR. But the Senator from Colorado, if I do not misquote him, thought while that platform was not fully satisfactory to him personally he could carry Colorado for the Republican ticket on it.

Mr. CARTER. That he did on the representation that the Republican party had a reputation for redeeming its pledges and promises, and that it would carry out the party platform in good faith. [Applause in the galleries.]

The people of Colorado can not now conceive it possible that the Republican party deliberately adopted a plank of a platform with a reserved intention then and there to violate it; not at all. It is quite impossible for those people to believe that, and they will not believe it until the fact is demonstrated beyond a question of doubt.

Mr. President, the question is further propounded, if defeated in an honest effort made to secure legislation in conformity with this particular principle of the party platform, shall gentlemen from west of the Missouri River who affiliate with the party now and contemplate doing so in the future absolutely refuse then and there to further cooperate with the party on its pronounced principle of adherence to protection? In reply to that, I say that the Republicans who believe in the platform as construed in our portion of the country will be the very last to desert the ship. If gentlemen elect to accept the gold theories of Mr. Cleveland and walk away from our party, we will gaze upon them in sorrow. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me a word there, I wish to say that, so far as I know, there is not a Republican in either House of Congress from the East, and there is not, so far as I know, in the State of Massachusetts, or in the six New England States, 2 per cent of the entire Republican party who hold the theories of Grover Cleveland, as I understand them. There are no gold monometallists there.

Mr. TELLER. If that statement is correct, it is rather strange that the entire body of Republicans from that section always vote with the President.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that the President has ever voted. The only vote we have given was voting against him.

Mr. TELLER. They vote in accordance with his views.

Mr. HOAR. We deny that.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me one moment. As I understand the views of President Cleveland, they are in favor of gold monometallism; I do not know whether that be true or not; and I suppose that is what the Senator understands.

Mr. TELLER. That is correct.

Mr. HOAR. He thinks that a double standard of value, that undertaking to have by any assent of anybody or everybody two metals which may fluctuate somewhat in their reference to one another, is an absurdity and an impossibility. The Republicans of the Eastern States deny that proposition. They believe that there can be a double standard of value, just as when the astronomer wishes to get a clock whose pendulum shall be so accurate in its length and in its beat that the most delicate measurements, upon which depend great astronomical calculations, shall not be disturbed by atmospheric influences, he puts rods of three metals which pass through the disk of the pendulum and by which it is suspended so that the fluctuation caused by the atmospheric influences on one will be corrected by the atmospheric influences on another.

That is the doctrine of Alexander Hamilton; it is the doctrine of the Constitution; it is the doctrine of every one of the fathers, without an exception; it is our doctrine, and the American doctrine to-day. There is where we all agree; where the Senator from Colorado and I agree, I suppose, if I understand him, though I do not know that he will consent to agree with me on any subject whatever. [Laughter.] But where we differ is this: We believe that to do that thing by one nation alone is impossible; that you drive out the more valuable metal and you have monometallism not only of the cheaper metal, in which all transactions will sooner or later discharge themselves, but you have a standard of value that is a fluctuating, a disturbing, and a degenerating measure, so that no transaction expressed in money is a record of what it is to be in the future. Whether we are right or wrong, there is where our difference comes in; and the Senator has no more right to turn on me and say I agree with Grover Cleveland, or I am a monometallist, than I have to turn on him and say he is a silver monometallist. I take his statement of his opinions as he utters them, not as I translate them, and I demand of him, if he does me the honor to allude to my opinions at all, that he shall take my statements of opinions as I utter them and translate them. There is where these two parties differ in the Republican party as they do in the Democratic party; and what I want to know is, if any Senator says on either side of that difference, "If you do not come to my views, whether you believe them or not, and vote with me, whether you like it or not, I will not do anything else that is for the interest of the country in regard to which we agree."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter at length into the discussion at this time. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] has referred to the method in which the Republican platform was adopted. The provision in the platform which has been quoted started out with the words:

> The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money.

That clause was drafted by me, and the adoption of that clause was secured in the platform, I think, largely by my efforts, assisted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. I did not favor and was not responsible for the qualification which was added, because I thought then that it would probably be made the excuse for a violation of the declaration which I had introduced.

I knew, Mr. President, what it meant to say that silver and gold should be used as standard money; I supposed that the committee on platform knew what it meant, and I supposed the nearly one thousand men who voted for and adopted that platform also knew what it meant. There were, if I recollect correctly, about a thousand of the most intelligent men of our party assembled there. It was on this subject, and this alone in the platform, that a controversy arose which lasted all through the night and clear into the morning, and the only disturbing question was what should we say upon the financial subject. I had introduced a provision for free coinage, and I had been met by adverse votes.

I finally proposed this as a declaration of what the party believed in. It met the approval of the committee. I did not myself approve of the limitations or restrictions for the simple reason that I knew they would enable skillful politicians to evade the plain declaration, as they have done since.

Mr. GEAR. May I suggest to my friend the Senator from Colorado that while perhaps not approving it, as he says, nevertheless he voted for it. He voted for it when it was incorporated in the general resolution of which it was a part.

Mr. TELLER. I did not vote for restriction in committee.

Mr. GEAR. But the Senator voted for it in the convention.

Mr. TELLER. I accepted it and voted for it in convention, as a matter of course. That provision is not inconsistent with the other; it is not inconsistent with free coinage; it is not inconsistent with bimetallism—bimetallism as economic writers and economic authorities declare it, not as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] declares it, which is no bimetallism at all.

Bimetallism means the free access of both metals to the mint on equal terms, and I now here challenge the Senate, I challenge the country to find that prior to 1892 any person had ever suggested that any other definition could be given to bimetallism. Dr. Giffen, the great statistician of England, a gold man, equal in his adherence and devotion to gold even to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] or the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], has declared over and over again that there can be no bimetallism without the coinage of both metals on equal terms; that that is what it means.

Any man who asserts that it means anything else is either ignorant or means to deceive. He either has not studied the question and does not know, or, having studied the question, he does not mean to tell the truth. He who says that bimetallism means maintaining silver as subsidiary coin writes himself down in opposition to the entire thought of the intelligent and educated world on this subject.

Having said that, I do not know that I ought to read what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] stated at a distinguished gathering in Ohio, but I believe I will do so, after he yesterday announced in unmistakable terms that he and the party to which he belongs and to which I belong are in favor of the gold standard and that that is our platform, which I deny. When the Republican convention met in Ohio to nominate a candidate for governor the distinguished Senator from Ohio was made permanent chairman of the meeting, and I take from the public press of that day the following extract:

When he was brought to the stand Senator SHERMAN began his speech without further introduction, needing none. After he had eulogized the Republican party, waved a flag with only a part of the blood stains washed out, and iterated a demand for the reenactment of the McKinley tariff, he discussed the financial question. He said, among other things—

This is what I wish to call the attention of the Senate to, and I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] whether he believes in this kind of bimetallism, and whether he or anybody supposes that the thousand men gathered at Minneapolis were so ignorant, stupid, or dishonest that they believed in this kind of bimetallism—

"I believe—

This is the Senator from Ohio—

"I believe that the policy of the United States, adopted in 1853, of coining fractional silver coins in limited quantities from silver bullion purchased at market price, and making them a legal tender for small sums, is the only way to preserve the parity of gold and silver coins at a fixed ratio. This is properly called bimetallic money."

Mr. President, I decline to follow the distinguished financier in his definition. I repeat that you can not find any man who has any reputation anywhere in Europe or America aside from the Senator from Ohio who has ever suggested that that is bimetallism. That is not the bimetallism that we meant in 1892. That is not the bimetallism that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says that he means and that the people of his section of the country believe in, as I understood him a moment since.

I have not risen now to discuss this question. I propose to be heard on the proposition to recommit the bill to the committee, not that I care anything about whether it goes to the committee or not, but because I propose to be heard on this great question. I would be heard to-day, perhaps, if I were in physical condition to do so, but I have been admonished by my physician that I must not, and I do to-day what I have done perhaps but once before since I have been in the Senate, plead personal indisposition for not going on. But I wish to say a word or two more while I am on my feet.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Colorado kindly state that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], to whom he is referring, is not present?

Mr. TELLER. I see he is not. I did not look to see whether he was here or not. I suppose he will not deny the statement. If he says he never made it, I will take it back very quickly.

Mr. PLATT. What paper is it from?

Mr. TELLER. I do not remember the name of the paper. I can find it, however.

Mr. PEFFER. I can say to the Senator from Colorado that it was published in all the papers of the country, and I repeated it in the presence of the Senator from Ohio, and he did not deny it.

Mr. TELLER. I think I have heard the Senator from Ohio say practically the same thing in the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN entered the Chamber.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. TELLER). The Senator from Ohio is now here. Read the statement again.

Mr. TELLER. As the Senator from Ohio is now present, and as some Senators seem to be anxious to raise a question as to whether he ever made the statement, I will read it again.

I read now, as I stated before, from a newspaper report of a speech made by the senior Senator from Ohio, who was presiding over a Republican State convention in the State of Ohio, some time last fall. He said, among other things:

I believe that the policy of the United States adopted in 1853 of coining fractional silver coins in limited quantities from silver bullion purchased at market price, and making them a legal tender for small sums, is the only way to preserve the parity of gold and silver coins at a fixed ratio. This is properly called bimetallic money.

In the absence of the Senator from Ohio I was challenging the statement that that is bimetallism. I was not challenging his belief that that is a proper thing to do, but I say that it is not bimetallism. It is a bimetallism which simply has the support of the Senator from Ohio and practically nobody else.

Yesterday the Senator from Ohio (I think I will not stop to read the statement unless the Senator disclaims it) practically stated that the Republican party is a gold-standard party. He declared that the craze and the delusion of the free coinage of silver had received its death blow by the action of the House of Representatives, and that hereafter we should go on, as I understood him, on the gold-standard platform. If the Senator did not mean that, I do not know what he meant.

As I said, I am not now going into a discussion of this question. I wish to turn for a moment to the declaration that we made at Minneapolis.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator a question about that matter, and as he is now going back to it, perhaps I had better do so at this time than to interrupt him in the middle of his speech.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. Do I not correctly understand the Senator to say there was a contest in the committee all night or a great part of the night in regard to this declaration; that he desired to have a declaration in favor of the unlimited coinage of silver in this country, but that the majority of the committee refused to accept it—would not agree to it?

Mr. TELLER. The subcommittee.

Mr. HOAR. The subcommittee. They were acting for the committee. They would not agree to it. Thereafter this clause, which the Senator from Colorado did not vote for as proposed there, was added. The committee did agree to the declaration. Is it not therefore clear that the subcommittee who drafted and reported that utterance did not understand it as meaning that they were in favor of the free coinage of silver by this country alone?

Mr. TELLER. I am bound to be fair about this matter if I can. I think it left every member of the convention who voted for it at liberty to say, "I am in favor of the use of the two metals as standard money in the best way that it can be secured." What I find fault with——

Mr. HOAR. That disposes of the whole argument of my friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Massachusetts had better let me get through. What I find fault about is that when we declared for both metals as standard money, the policy of the Republican party, as foreshadowed in this Chamber by its majority, as shown by the votes that are given here by more than half of this side of the Chamber, has repudiated that provision even upon the liberal construction which I give it. The people in many sections of the country believed that it meant free coinage, because they said if you have bimetallism you are bound to have free coinage; you can not have bimetallism without free coinage. And that is true. In any event, no matter whether we were to have free coinage at once or not, it meant that silver was to be used as standard money, and if you make it standard money then you make it the equal of gold. It was as far from the gold standard as the East is from the West.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. No; I will not yield. It was not to be considered as being in favor of the single gold standard, and it can not be so considered by anybody, not even by the astute Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who seeks on every occasion to thrust in his ideas, to the embarrassment, sometimes, of others who are speaking.

Nobody can believe that that great convention meant to say, as the Senator from Ohio says, that free coinage was dead. We were pledged to free coinage sometime under some condition, and if we could not find it under any other I suppose it would have filled the bill if we had found it under an international agreement.

What I arraign the Republican party here for is that it has never taken a step to carry out that platform. The only men who have ever attempted to live up to that platform with respect to the tariff and money are the men who are called silver men. And now we are slandered and traduced and are to be turned out of the party because we believe in maintaining all the provisions of the platform and not merely a part of it.

If my strength will admit it, and I trust it will, some day soon I propose to take up and discuss this question, and therefore I do not care to debate it now at length.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I did not have the pleasure of hearing the remarks of the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], but the quotation which he made from a speech made by me was correctly stated, and therefore I have no objection to make on that ground.

My idea of bimetallism is that both metals shall be adopted and used in this country as far as possible and to the extent that they can be maintained at a parity with each other. In order to bring about that condition, as a matter of course the silver dollars and the silver coins must be maintained at a parity with gold. Under the policy which is now well established, not only in the United States, notwithstanding the remarks of Senators, but in every Christian and civilized country in the European world, silver is used to a greater amount and more extensively than it has ever before been used in our time or perhaps in any time in the world.

We maintain the parity of the two metals by limiting the supply of the cheaper one. We buy the bullion from the people of the United States or in the markets of the world, and we coin it into money upon the old basis of 16 to 1. But in order that we may maintain the silver coins at a parity with gold we limit the amount and only make it an act of the Government which maintains those coins, of less market value, at a parity with gold.

In England now they are circulating more silver coin than ever before, and their shilling, although it is worth only 6d. in the markets of the world, is maintained at par with gold. So with France, a country which uses more silver, perhaps, than any other country in the world. The French maintain their silver at a parity with gold, although silver coins there are even less valuable than our own, because they are upon the basis of 15½ to 1.

Now, we who believe in bimetallism as thus defined by me insist that the Government shall maintain the parity of all these coins. We do not adopt the cheaper standard. Why? Because if that system should ever be adopted among the people of the United States the laborer would be cheated of one-half of his hire. In this country now the laboring man gets more dollars, and dollars equal to gold, than in any other country in the world. If, however, we should adopt the free coinage of silver, then, as a matter of course, the cheaper metal would exclude the gold from circulation; we should have the silver standard, and the workingman who got the same number of dollars under a silver standard would be cheated of half the purchasing power of the money which he received as the result of his labor.

The people of this country are beginning to understand this question. I know that the free coinage of silver is quite a plausible idea, but the effect would merely be to cheat the creditor of one-half of his debt. The United States of America has contracted debts upon the basis of gold to the amount now, under the present Administration, of $750,000,000. Suppose we should have the free coinage of silver, and gold were demonetized practically or excluded from circulation, because none but the cheaper metal will circulate, we would cheat the creditors of the Government out of one-half of their investment.

There is the narrow difference between those of us who believe in what I call bimetallism and those who believe in the free coinage of silver. If you open the doors of your mints to all the silver that may come to us from all parts of the world, now estimated to amount to $3,800,000,000, how long will it be before the silver of other countries will flow in here and pass for more than it is worth and I think revolutionize the whole monetary system of our country? I believe, therefore, that if we maintain the two metals as we ought to do, at full use as money, it must be under such circumstances and conditions that there will be no difference in their value as money.

To-day every man who receives a silver dollar knows that it is worth only 50 cents in gold; he could get for it only 50 cents in gold. As a matter of fact the gold is not used, but the money is used. But where there is a difference of even 1 per cent or 2 per cent in the values of the two moneys, the cheaper alone will circulate. So it was in the times of paper money. The poorest bank paper always circulated the most readily. If a bank was in doubtful credit, every man of sense would get rid of the money of doubtful value and would take that money which was certainly to be more valuable. So, now, if we should adopt the single silver standard—that is what is meant by what is called free coinage of silver—as a matter of course we then stand upon the sole basis of silver coin in all our monetary transactions.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator from Colorado rise to interrupt me?

Mr. TELLER. No; I thought the Senator was about through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not have any unkind feelings, I have never said an unkind word against those who favor the free coinage of silver; but let me make a prophecy: The idea of the free coinage of silver took wildly all over the country. Even in Ohio both parties had more or less committed themselves to that policy, the Republican party first and the Democratic party following suit. Yet now in Ohio, where we have a population of 4,000,000, neither party and no party, and no considerable body even of our people themselves, would consent to the free coinage of silver. That sentiment which has grown by the conviction of the people is extending further and further. It commenced, perhaps, in Ohio and extended west until now every State east of the Missouri River is in favor of bimetallism as we have it; that is, limiting the coinage of the cheaper metal, maintained at a parity with gold.

Now, the difference between us and our friends is that they want free coinage of silver. Why do they want it? Do they want to make the dollar cheaper, or do they want to cheat the creditors on debts which were contracted upon the gold standard? It seems to me that that is a dishonest proposition. Of course, that is not intended by those who advocate it, but the result of it will be dishonest. It would enable people to cheat their creditors; it would cheat the laborer out of the fair results of his labor, and therefore we are opposed to it. I venture to prophesy that this sentiment will go further and further. I know myself that even in the States which are called free-silver States there is a growing doubt as to the soundness of their position. I have had letters from men whom I supposed as a matter of course were in favor of the free coinage of silver, who begin to doubt their position, and I believe the time is not far distant when Colorado, one of the richest and most prosperous States in the Union, and likely to become one of the most populous States, will not be content with the cheaper money, but will demand money of the highest value, gold as the standard, with silver maintained at a parity with gold. That principle is now pervading the South. There the feeling was universal in favor of the free coinage of silver, and yet now in every Southern State the most intelligent and respectable people are beginning to change their ground and are coming out in favor of bimetallism as we understand it, the only kind of bimetallism which can exist when there is a disparity between the two metals in market value.

This is my position now. I stand to it not because I would do anything at all injurious to the silver-producing States, but because I would do that which is best for the people of the whole United States of America.

Sir, look at the example of the other countries that have followed, on account of their poverty, the adoption of silver coinage. Look at Mexico and some of the South American States. Even there the feeling is growing stronger, and in Mexico there is a strong party now existing in favor of the restoration of the old coinage of gold. That is a country that produces both gold and silver, precisely like the State represented by my friend from Colorado. I believe that there is such a feeling as that growing up in Colorado. My honorable friend may dispute that, but I know that many of the leading, intelligent men of that State are beginning to feel that the only true mode will be to maintain the present system, to use silver as far as possible, to consume our home products, if you please, and to coin it into money, and then maintain it by the power of the Government at a parity with gold. We take a printed note, a promise to pay money, and it circulates from hand to hand. The best money we have ever had in the United States is the legal-tender money, the United States notes. Those notes are maintained without trouble, and yet the cost of that money is probably but a mill in a dollar. That note is so maintained; and that is my idea about bimetallism.

I therefore reindorse what I said to the convention at Zanesville during the last year, where a great convention composed of more than a thousand of the best men of the State of Ohio, with absolute unanimity, declared for that kind of bimetallism. They were in favor of the use of both kinds of money. The Democratic convention, following soon after, adopted substantially the same ground. That was the fixed and settled opinion of that body of men at Zanesville, men as intelligent as any portion of the people of the United States. The same thing has occurred in other States, until now I believe that bimetallism as we have established it by law is not only the fixed rule of action in our own country but that it will even be adopted by all the silver States of South America and by Mexico.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio will not divert me into answering his old speech on the silver question that I have heard every time the question has been up for the last twenty years. It has been refuted, contradicted, and its fallacies exposed, but the Senator will always repeat it, I suppose, as long as the question is before the public.

The question here is, what did the Republican platform mean by bimetallism? If it did not mean that we should go to bimetallism to-day it meant at least that we believe in bimetallism and that under any construction which could be put on it we should go there as speedily as we could. The question now is whether we who believe in bimetallism as bimetallism is defined by the economic writers of the age are recreant to Republican principles or whether we can be driven out of our party because we do not agree with this most astonishing, unheard-of, and unusual bimetallic definition of the Senator from Ohio, which it seems that the Republican party is about to accept. That is the question, Mr. President; it is not the question whether we can maintain free coinage or not. If the Senator from Ohio and the Senators who agree with him have got wiser than the convention they had better wait until they go to St. Louis, and change the platform. The question is, did we not declare for bimetallism? Did we not say we are in favor of it? Does not that give us a right to insist upon having bimetallism and still keep within the party?

Mr. SHERMAN. The convention to which the Senator refers always assumed the same kind of bimetallism that I have alluded to.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. They always insisted as a condition that the money coined from silver should be maintained by the Government at a parity with gold. That has been declared over and over again, and it is not necessary even to repeat it now.

Mr. TELLER. That is not a correct statement. That convention never suggested a bimetallism so ridiculous as I have read to the Senate. I believe if that had been suggested in the convention it would have been laughed out of the convention. The Senator can not put the Republican party on that kind of bimetallism. Why did we want to say anything about it if that was the kind of bimetallism? Everybody knew that you could not get along without subsidiary silver money, and that is all that the Senator is now contending for; and he is contending that when you have subsidiary silver money you have got bimetallism. Does he mean to say that Great Britain has got bimetallism, does he mean to say that Germany has got bimetallism because they use subsidiary silver money? Mr. President, he knows better. Everybody knows better. Bimetallism means, as I have stated, the use of the two metals as legal-tender money upon equal terms. Since I made that statement a gentleman handed me a copy of the RECORD, and I quote from a speech made in the House the other day by a gentleman from Minnesota. By the way, I think that if the Senator from Ohio would read that speech he might get some views that would do him good, and some information he does not appear to have. I read now from what Mr. CHARLES A. TOWNE, a member from that State, said:

> Mr. Maurice L. Muhleman, deputy assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in his recent book, Monetary Systems of the World, page 12, says—

I need not say of course that this man is a gold-standard man. He would not have much to do with the present Administration if he were not. This is what he says about bimetallism:

> By bimetallism, strictly defined, is meant the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver into coins of full debt-paying power.

Now, Mr. President, what does the English commission say, a commission created in Great Britain to consider this very question, a commission composed of 12 men, 6 of them being gold men and 6 silver men? One of them who was a gold man has since become a silver man, but when they divided they divided into equal parts. Here is their definition of bimetallism, of the entire 12. I repeat, when the convention made that declaration in 1892 there was nowhere to be found within the lids of any book a suggestion by any author that the bimetallism the Senator from Ohio contends for was bimetallism at all. Now, hear what the commission say:

> A bimetallic system of currency, to be completely effective, must, in the view of those who advocate it, include two essential features: (a) An open mint ready to coin any quantity of either gold or silver which may be brought to it; (b) the right on the part of a debtor to discharge his liabilities, at his option, in either of the two metals at a ratio fixed by law.

Mr. President, I say again that the Republican party did not stultify itself in 1892 by declaring that any country that maintained subsidiary silver was a bimetallic country. It is almost, I may say quite, an insult to the intelligence of any member of that party to suggest that that is a proper definition of that platform. Nobody but the gold-standard men ever pretended to believe it meant that, and they know it does not mean that and did not mean it.

Mr. President, the only way they can force upon that great organization, that great Republican party which has done so much for this country, this foreign system, this English system, this odious system of gold standard, is by deception and fraud and by playing on the American people what in common parlance might be called a bunco game.

Now I will read further. This is from the New York Evening Post, a paper that I understand has never uttered a kind word for silver.

Mr. HAWLEY. Or anybody else.

Mr. TELLER. Or anybody else, the Senator from Connecticut sitting near me says. Certainly not for the silver men. It is suggested to me that it is owned by British capital. I understand that that is the truth as to nearly all the great metropolitan press. The New York Evening Post says:

> There are some people (a diminishing number, however) who hesitate to avow themselves in favor of the single gold standard, although they are opposed to any change from the present system. There are others (also a diminishing number) who think that because a certain limited number of silver dollars are in circulation we have bimetallism or the double standard in this country.

Great heavens, Mr. President, have the 10-cent pieces circulating in this country made us a bimetallic country? That was left for the Senator from Ohio, and while he had made the suggestion before this paper published it, they had not seen it.

> This is a totally false conception, as false as it would be to assume that we have a paper standard because a limited number of greenbacks are afloat. * * * The "gold bugs" have no change of standard in contemplation. They are satisfied with the present posture of affairs, so far as that goes. The "expulsion of everything but gold as real money" took place in 1873, and continues unabated.

Mr. President, that is sound doctrine and sound law. When you make silver subordinate to gold it is no more standard money than a national-bank note. A man must be ignorant of the philosophy of money or unwilling to admit the truth and the logic of his position when he claims that because you use silver with gold and subordinate to gold you have bimetallism. What we contend for is silver as standard money; silver that shall measure values as gold measures values; that the double sum of silver and gold in the world shall determine prices.

Mr. President, we are not crying in the West nor in the East for what the Senator from Ohio chooses to call the best money. What is the best money? The best money, according to the gold-standard definition, is the money that will buy the most of human sweat, of human toil, that will buy the most of human productions; and if you can put down wheat to 10 cents a bushel, the Senator from Ohio will consider that the best kind of money that will buy it at that price; if you can buy the laborer's labor for 10 cents a day, that will be the best money; and that, he says, the people of my State will cry for. When they do, when they are so dishonest, when they are so ignorant, I shall no longer represent them on this floor with the feeling that I represent a great, free, and intelligent people.

Mr. President, the American people believe in bimetallism according to the traditions and according to the writers on political economy for a hundred years. I do not care what the Senator says about the death of silver, he will find that its corpse is a living corpse that will rise up here to haunt him and his gold-standard, dishonest-money advocates to the end of time. Unless the American people plant themselves upon the double standard, that will maintain not only the equity of contracts, but the stability of prices, we can not have prosperity, for it is the only thing that will bring to this country prosperity and progress, that will put an end to the discontent that is rising up in every part of the country, that gives you a Democratic majority one year and a Republican majority the next, and probably a Populist majority the year after. Our safety lies in honest, sound money, made up of the two metals that have been in use from time immemorial. He who says I am dishonest because I advocate this is either dishonest himself or ignorant of the history and the condition of the world; he is ignorant of the fact that silver money has always been the money of mankind, the money that has touched more hands of toil than the gold dollars, the money that has done infinitely more to move the wheels of progress than all the gold that has ever entered into the circulation of the world.

Mr. President, we will not discard silver. It may be that for a time the advocates of the so-called sound money may deceive the people. They can not do it always. They can not do it long. If the Republican party puts itself under the lead of the Senator from Ohio and adopts the gold standard it will be a party of the past, and the glory and splendor of its achievements will be obliterated and destroyed in the infamy of that transaction.

Mr. STEWART. I do not propose to prolong the debate——

Mr. WHITE. I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry. I understand that the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations is before the Senate. I do not wish to disturb the Senator from Nevada, but I suggest that if this debate, which is very interesting and very entertaining, and to which we have been listening with a great deal of attention, is to proceed, we had better defer the Cuban matter until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator from California had allowed me to proceed I would have been through by this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. CALL. I want to have it distinctly understood that the regular order is temporarily laid aside, by unanimous consent, and it is subject to be called for at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the order.

Mr. STEWART. If I should attempt to refute all the nonsense, falsehood, and absurdity that has been condensed in the debate here on the other side, of course it would take until 2 o'clock to-morrow, but I did not rise for any such purpose. I rose to call attention to the Democratic doctrine as announced by the present Administration. Mr. Carlisle said at the banquet of the Manhattan Club in New York on the 25th of February last:

> In other words, it is proposed that, instead of continuing the monetary system based on a gold standard, where it was placed by Democratic legislation during the Administration of Andrew Jackson, and where it has been practically ever since, it shall be so changed as to conform to the monetary system of China, South America, and the small South American States.

I will now read from Andrew Jackson's law to which the Secretary alluded, entitled "An act further in regard to the establishment of a mint and regulation of coins of the United States," which law was passed on the 18th day of February, 1837, and signed by Andrew Jackson. The portion that I read is as follows:

> That the standard for both gold and silver coins of the United States shall hereafter be such that of one thousand parts by weight, nine hundred shall be of pure metal and one hundred of alloy, and the alloy of the silver coins shall be of copper, and the alloy of the gold coins shall be of copper and silver, provided that the silver do not exceed one-half of the whole alloy. * * *
> That of the silver coins, the dollar shall be of the weight of 412½ grains. * * *
> That of the gold coin, the weight of the eagle shall be 258 grains. * * *
> NOTE.—Four hundred and twelve and one-half grains of silver equals $1; 258 grains of gold equals $10; 4,125 grains of silver equals $10. This makes the ratio between the two coins the same as now, namely, a fraction less than 16 to 1.

That made the ratio 16 to 1. It further provided—

> That gold and silver bullion brought to the mint for coinage shall be received and coined, by the proper officers, for the benefit of the depositor.

Now, Mr. Carlisle tells his audience in New York that the present laws are the same as those which were passed by the Democratic party in Jackson's time and signed by Jackson; that the single gold standard was the standard of Jackson. I have simply read from the statute, which, it seems to me, raises a question of veracity between the Secretary and the statute, and I think the burden of proof is on the Secretary to prove that the statute is a lie.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 3281) to authorize reassessments for improvements and general taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 6408) authorizing the sale of title of the United States to certain tracts of land in the District of Columbia to Margaret Shugrue, Caroline Lochboehler, and John R. Scott.

The bill (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FREIGHT AND PASSENGER RATES IN FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant, the report of Mr. J. D. Pirrong, of Wewahitchka, Fla., respecting freight and passenger rates of railway companies in that State; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WAR IN CUBA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations on the 5th instant relative to the war in Cuba.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, on the 24th of the present month I offered a substitute for the various resolutions reported to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations with reference to Cuban affairs. I ask that the substitute be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read the substitute submitted by Mr. WHITE, as follows:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We trust that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been committed, will at as early a date as the facts will warrant recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent government of her own choice.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I presume that there is no one entitled to a seat in this Chamber who does not sympathize with the struggling patriots in Cuba. I assume that there is no Senator who would not rejoice could he witness the establishment by the people of that island of a government of their own choice. But while holding these views and experiencing these sympathies it is important that we should proceed in an orderly manner and in accordance not only with the customs and usages of this and other enlightened nations, but also in compliance with the provisions of the organic law under which we all claim to act.

The Committee on Foreign Relations has reported a concurrent resolution which it is expected will receive the support of the Senate and House. In the first place, if we are to approach this subject through any resolution designed to be of itself effective as a declaration of belligerency, I am of the opinion that the Constitution requires such resolution to be joint. Within a few days a discussion arose here with reference to a resolution designed to affect the thirteenth section of the last river and harbor act, and it was argued with much force by several Senators of distinguished ability that as that section had relation merely to matters of departmental procedure and did not arise under the Constitution, therefore it was unnecessary that a resolution passed for the purpose of suspending the operation of that provision should be presented to the President or be considered by him. But Senators holding this view stated that whenever Congress seeks to exercise constitutional powers by means of a resolution receiving the assent of both Houses, then the same will not be valid unless submitted after adoption, as in the case of a bill, to the President. Indeed, it is difficult to read section 7 of Article I without reaching that result. Therefore, the concurrent resolutions now under advisement will, if passed and not submitted to the Executive, be of no legal force, and can only amount to an expression of the sentiments and opinions of the Senate and House:

> Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

As stated by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] yesterday, there is no Congressional enactment affecting this subject, and the committee resolution and that which I offered do not arise under procedure prescribed by any statute. If, therefore, the organic limitation of the powers of Congress which I have repeated does not relate, among other things, to a resolution declaring belligerency or proclaiming independence, I can not find any subject of moment to which the restrictive language of that provision can be held applicable. Hence, if we are to make a declaration announcing belligerency, the resolution can have no effect unless it is presented to the President. For reasons which I shall endeavor to suggest, I am doubtful whether such a resolution can have any effect unless actually approved by the Executive. True it is immaterial whether it be styled concurrent or joint, but we proceed here upon the theory that no resolution called concurrent is presented to the President. I regret that I am unable to elaborate upon this interesting topic. I am constrained to deal with the subject as briefly as possible. If it is sought to make a valid declaration of belligerency, the resolution must be passed under the Constitution and should be joint and presented to the President.

But, Mr. President, there is not only a question of policy involved as well as a matter of duty in the form of this declaration; there is likewise an issue as to our authority. I feel confident that the power does not reside in the Houses of Congress, independent of the President, to declare belligerency. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] stated yesterday in discussing this phase of the subject as follows:

I dispute the power of the President of the United States, of his own motion and without the assistance of Congress, to recognize belligerency between two foreign Governments, because the President of the United States has no right by his proclamation to change the commercial and other relations between the people of this country and the people of a foreign country. But being the representative of the United States in virtue of its sovereignty as affects foreign countries, he has the right to recognize the independence of a foreign country, because that recognition has no effect upon our own people. It does not change our relation to that country in the slightest degree. It does not compel us to pursue commerce under laws which regulate war instead of laws which regulate peace.

Then I addressed the following inquiry to the distinguished Senator:

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] permit me to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] a question, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me? Do I understand the Senator from Alabama to deny the power of the President, without the concurrence of Congress, to recognize the belligerency or to issue an effective proclamation of belligerency as to the contending parties?

To this inquiry the Senator from Alabama replied thus:

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. President, in the same discussion, construing somewhat similar provisions of the Constitution supposed to be more or less related to this topic, the distinguished Senator also said that in his opinion Congress had power to declare war without reference to Presidential action or consultation—that the resolution, or whatever it might be, so declaring need not go to the Executive, and he conceded that the various subdivisions of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution bore the same relation, so far as the wording is concerned, to the first part of that section; but he argued that the eleventh subdivision, granting power to declare war, etc., meant that Congress, without reference to the Executive, might effectively proceed.

The first section of Article I of the Constitution declares:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Thus legislative power is vested in Congress, and yet no one pretends that an ordinary bill must not receive the Presidential signature. I can not conceive of any method of reading section 8 of Article I which will authorize the conclusion that any peculiar rule applies to Executive functions under subdivision 11. The legislative prerogative is not greater, as far as words go, under that subdivision than in the instances disclosed by many other grants contained in that important section. It is conceded that no bill with reference to post-offices and post-roads, providing and maintaining a navy, raising and supporting armies, etc., can be made effectual without the usual Executive signature, or nonaction, or the repassing of the measure over the veto by the constitutional two-thirds vote. To announce any other rule with respect to the power to declare war or concerning any other part of the constitutional delegation of authority would be to disregard without excuse the obvious meaning of language and to ignore all recognized construction.

But, Mr. President, I affirm that the question of the recognition of the existence of a revolutionary government is vested in the Executive. Whether this power is exclusive it is unnecessary to decide, though I shall allude incidentally to this phase. When the Senator from Alabama stated that he denied the power of the Executive, unaided by Congressional action, to recognize belligerency, it seems to me that his statement was unsupported by precedent or reason. I can not find any other authority for it. True, Mr. President, a joint resolution, signed by the President of the United States, recognizing belligerency, would operate, if not by virtue of the action of Congress, certainly so because it was approved by the Executive. I do not find it necessary to contend that Congress can not pass a bill recognizing belligerency over the veto of the Executive. I can find no such instance, however. I trust that no conflict of this nature will ever arise, and until occasion requires I prefer to reserve my opinion as to the legality of such procedure. The very case from which the learned Senator from Alabama read, the Prize Cases, it seems to me, entirely overthrows his contention in this regard. I call attention to the following phraseology, reading from part of the opinion to which the learned Senator did not advert. I quote from 2 Black, page 670:

Whether the President, in fulfilling his duties as commander-in-chief in suppressing an insurrection, has met with such armed hostile resistance and a civil war of such alarming proportions as will compel him to accord to them the character of belligerents is a question to be decided by him, and this court must be governed by the decisions and acts of the political department of the Government to which this power was intrusted. He must determine what degree of force the crisis demands.

It must be observed that the unaided effectiveness of the Executive act was here conceded to be proper exercise of power by the political department of the Government, and Congress in this instance was not regarded as constituting a portion of "the political department."

From the case of Kennett et al. vs. Chambers, a decision by Chief Justice Taney, and reported in 14 Howard, pages 50 and 51, I read:

It is not necessary, in the case before us, to decide how far the judicial tribunals of the United States would enforce a contract like this, when two States acknowledged to be independent were at war and this country neutral. It is a sufficient answer to the argument to say that the question whether Texas had or had not at that time become an independent State was a question for that department of our Government exclusively which is charged with our foreign relations. And until the period when that deparment recognized it as an independent State the judicial tribunals of the country were bound to consider the old order of things as having continued, and to regard Texas as a part of the Mexican territory.

I understand the Senator from Alabama to claim that while the President of the United States is vested with exclusive jurisdiction to acknowledge the independence of a country, that that officer has not the same jurisdiction as to belligerency.

What is the effect of a declaration of belligerency? Is it anything, when properly made, to which a nation has a right to take exception? Manifestly not. In such an instance we assert neutrality. The President of the United States issues his proclamation declaring that this country will stand hands off; that we will not interfere. It is not a proclamation of war; it is a proclamation of peace; it is not an announcement of interference; it is an announcement of noninterference; it is not opening ourselves to the charge that we are attempting to injure a friendly nation, but it means that we have concluded that there are contending parties whose armed conflict is sufficiently important to be dignified by the term war and that we will remain impartial spectators. But, on the other hand, recognition of the independence of a revolutionary country is often the subject of vigorous protest.

It passes without saying that no nation is rudely dismembered save after vigorous contest and exhaustive effort. The history of our country demonstrates that we have never recognized the independence of a state which has successfully revolted without subjecting ourselves to the criticisms of the mother country. There is much more danger, much more probability of conflict with a foreign power in consequence of the recognition of the independence of a revolted government than when we merely recognize belligerency. No nation can be expected to contemplate with satisfaction the loss of her possessions, and, unlike the able Senator from Alabama, I regard the power to recognize independence, which he concedes to be in the Executive, as much more important than the authority to recognize belligerency, which he denies to the Executive. Said Secretary Seward in a letter to Mr. Adams, our minister to England (1 Messages and Documents, 1861–62, page 79):

To recognize the independence of a new state, and so favor, possibly determine, its admission into the family of nations, is the highest possible exercise of sovereign power, because it affects in every case the welfare of two nations, and often the peace of the world.

The precedents showing Executive assertion of the power to recognize belligerency as well as independence are many.

On December 9, 1891, while Mr. Harrison occupied the Executive chair, he sent to this Chamber a message containing the following:

The civil war in Chile, which began in January last, was continued, but fortunately with infrequent and not important armed collisions, until August 28, when the Congressional forces landed near Valparaiso and, after a bloody engagement, captured that city. President Balmaceda at once recognized that his cause was lost, and a Provisional Government was speedily established by the victorious party. Our minister was promptly directed to recognize and put himself in communication with this Government so soon as it should have established its de facto character, which was done.

He also said (and this is directly in point):

During the pendency of this civil contest frequent indirect appeals were made to this Government to extend belligerent rights to the insurgents and to give audience to their representatives. This was declined, and that policy was pursued throughout which this Government, when wrenched by civil war, so strenuously insisted upon on the part of European nations.

Here was a manifest assertion of the power to determine whether or not belligerent rights should be accorded, a decision which in that instance was, in my opinion, most unwisely made.

I can not understand the reasoning which leads to the denial of the jurisdiction of the Executive, through the State Department, to declare neutrality, and consequently to affirm at least belligerency. No one should doubt that if the President of the United States had in the Chilean case, or in that now before us, announced that a state of public war existed, and had issued the ordinary proclamation of noninterference, our judicial tribunals would have been compelled to follow the Executive declaration. There are not one or two but numerous decisions referring not only to Executive right to proclaim independence, but also to announce belligerency. Chief Justice Marshall's views in this direction are clearly stated in United States vs. Hutchings, 2 Wheeler's Criminal Cases, page 546. The distinction referred to by the Senator from Alabama has not been heretofore urged. The Prize Cases, already cited, contain ample justification for my claim. It was there held by the Supreme Court of the United States that when Mr. Lincoln at the opening of our civil war declared the blockade, he thereby recognized the existence of a condition of public war and the consequent presence of belligerents. The Supreme Court not only held that the President of the United States had power to recognize a belligerent, but they intimated that he did so even though he did not intend that his proclamation should be so construed. It was decided that the Executive announcement of a blockade in effect conceded that the South was at war with the North. I cite the following from the Prize Cases opinion:

The proclamation of blockade is itself official and conclusive evidence to the court that a state of war existed which demanded and authorized a recourse to such measure under the circumstances peculiar to the case.

Whenever there is war there are belligerents. An admission of war is a concession of belligerency. I quote again from the Prize Cases:

The condition of neutrality can not exist unless there be two belligerent parties. In the case of the Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheaton, 337, this court say: "The Government of the United States has recognized the existence of a civil war between Spain and her colonies, and has avowed her determination to remain neutral between the parties. Each party is, therefore, deemed by us a belligerent nation, having, so far as concerns us, the sovereign rights of war."

In the minority report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and in several addresses here made, I find criticisms of the course of Spain in acknowledging the belligerency of the Southern States. But if Spain were wrong we will not therefore be justified in committing a similar error. But she was not guilty of an impropriety. The fact is, as already shown, that Mr. Lincoln recognized the belligerency of the Confederacy before similar action had been taken by England, France, or Spain. It is universally held, by domestic as well as foreign writers on international law, that we had no rational ground of objection to the conduct of European powers concerning the recognition of the Confederate States. (Glenn's International Law, pages 29, 30; Woolsey's id., sixth edition, section 41; Pomeroy's id. (Woolsey's edition), page 290; Ford vs. Surget, 97 U. S., 594, and the Prize Cases, 2 Black, page 670.) An English publicist (Hall's International Law, page 39) fully sustains this position.

So here is a case not only settling the power of the Executive to recognize belligerency, but deciding, as I have said, that he exercised that power without even intending the result legally deducible therefrom.

In the case of the Ambrose Light, decided by Judge Brown in New York, and reported in 25 Federal Reporter, it was held that President Cleveland had recognized the belligerency of Colombia because of certain orders officially made by him, though not with that design. The State Department vigorously combated this conclusion, and claimed that there had been no recognition; but everyone admitted the power of the Executive, the sole question being whether the authority had been exercised. I cite this case to show that our courts have held that recognition is not only a subject of a Presidential jurisdiction, but may even be accomplished unintentionally by that departmant.

The Ambrose Light decision is lengthy, and I do not propose to do more than to shortly refer to it. I shall do so again in connection with another topic. The subject is discussed by Judge Brown with great fullness, and the conclusion is reached that the power rests in the Executive. Various expressions have been made by different jurists in our own country upon this subject, and it must be admitted that it has not been explicitly decided in so many words that Congress, without the President, can not recognize—though I think such inference reasonably clear—but it is patent that the Executive may recognize without the aid of Congress. The effect of this conclusion I will shortly discuss.

I wish at this point to note several additional adjudications wherein the subject of recognition of belligerency and independence have been mentioned.

In the Hornet, 2 Abbott, U. S., 35, a case tried before Judge Brooks in 1870, in the United States district court of North Carolina, the phrase "Executive power" is used.

In United States vs. Baker, 5 Blatchford, 56, and United States vs. Jones, 137 U. S., 202, we find legislative and executive spoken of; also in United States vs. Palmer, 3 Wheaton, 610, and in the Nueva Anna, 6 Wheaton, 193. In Gelston vs. Hoyt, 3 Wheaton, 324, the power is described as being exercised by the Government.

In the Ambrose Light, 25 Federal Reporter, 409; United States vs. Itata, 56 id., 505; United States vs. Trumbull, 48 id., 99, it is said that the right to recognize belligerency rests in the Executive.

Kennett vs. Chambers, 14 Howard, 47, is instructive upon this subject, and contains an allusion to the proceedings of this Government regarding the acknowledgment of the independence of Texas which it is well to note.

Mr. Wharton, in his very able International Law Digest, which is familiar to us all, quotes a number of authorities, and, as showing his own view, on page 551 of volume 1 he heads the section "Such recognition (i. e., belligerency) determinable by Executive."

Passing a step further, permit me to ask, what will be the effect if we attempt to establish the rule that while the Executive has the power to recognize without Congressional concurrence, Congress has similar authority to act without the Executive? To what result must this finally lead us? If the President, without Congressional assistance, has absolute power to declare neutrality, thereby conceding belligerency, which, as I say, I take to be well established, and if Congress has similar absolute power over the same subject-matter, we then have two independent departments of the Government, each vested with the unqualified authority to render the same final judgment. What the consequences might be if the Executive proclaimed belligerency and Congress declared the circumstances to be not such as to warrant the proclamation and sought to annul it, or what might be the consequences if Congress passed a concurrent resolution, as proposed, formally recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban patriots, and the Executive declined to act upon it, holding that the condition of war does not obtain, are serious propositions.

It can not be that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the creation of such clashing authority. If the distinguished Senator from Alabama admits, as he did yesterday, that the power to recognize the independence of a nation is vested exclusively in the Executive, I submit that it follows a fortiori that the power to recognize belligerency is similarly reposed. If the Executive may recognize, as has been the practice from the foundation of the Republic, I incline to believe that he alone has this power. The clothing of each department with the full jurisdiction to decide the same issue is to invite confusion and beget irreconcilable disputation.

Mr. President, it is not now, and I hope never will be, essential to determine this question. I refer to it because I do not care to be a party to the establishment of a precedent to which I can not give my assent. I wish it understood that any resolution for which I may vote touching this controversy is merely the expression of opinion which I do not conceive to have the force of law.

Is there any reason to suppose that the Executive will not act vigorously when the proper time comes? If we have such reason does the proposed concurrent resolution better the situation or remedy the anticipated evil? In the first place, there is at this moment no proposition here which purports upon its face to absolutely recognize belligerency, and I do not think it wise to adopt such a resolution, because I do not wish to wantonly place this body in seeming or actual conflict with the Executive.

There is another ground which appears to me very strong in support of the contention that the recognition power is lodged in the Executive. There is before the Senate a document which was read by the Senator from Alabama, and which I deem quite important. I refer to House Document 224 of the present session. I read a few lines for purposes of illustration:

No. 2699.] CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Havana, January 7, 1896.

SIR: With reference to the proclamation of the captain-general of the 2d instant declaring a state of war to exist in the provinces of Havana and Pinar del Rio, copy and translation of which accompanied my dispatch No. 2695 of the 4th instant—

At this point I find a note stating that the proclamation mentioned is not printed. From this I conclude that the omitted paper has not been revealed to Congress. No one appears to controvert this supposition. When the House adopted the resolution calling for this correspondence it did so in the following phraseology:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the House of Representatives, if not inconsistent with the public interests, copies of all correspondence relating to affairs in Cuba since February last.

The House passed the usual resolution in the regular form which custom authorizes. Manifestly information has been withheld—no doubt properly. Time out of mind, if I may use that expression with reference to this very modern Government, it has been the custom to withhold information the disclosure of which the Executive deems incompatible with public interest. The document thus legitimately withheld may contain essential and controlling facts upon this subject. That it is important would seem to follow to some extent from the very circumstance that it is retained. Has the Executive the right to thus deny information? Our Chief Magistrates have always done so, pursuant to unchallenged custom and in compliance with recognized usage, evidenced by many hundred resolutions calling upon the Executive for diplomatic information. The President is not directed; he is merely requested, and always with the qualification which I have noted. The Executive right to withhold delicate diplomatic correspondence is incidental to the Presidential office. Can it be that the Constitution has placed upon Congress the burden of deciding and the duty to determine issues concerning belligerent or other relations to foreign powers and has not at the same time compelled the President to give us everything within his knowledge? Can it be that we are to pass upon a part of the case and not upon the whole? Can it be that under the law we are deprived of material evidence and yet are expected to render final and determinative judgment upon an imperfect record—a fraction of the aggregate proof? I say not. The President has before him all information. He reviews a complete history. Plainly, he is in a better condition to judge of the true state of affairs than are we. He has the means to secure all relevant information.

Having in charge the diplomatic relations of the Government, he is, or should be, better advised than the Senate or the House of Representatives or both.

Mr. President, I refer to this controversy not because of its bearing upon this isolated case, but to show that under the governmental scheme pursuant to which we are acting it is improbable that it ever was the intention to place the power to recognize either belligerency or independence in such a condition that a conflict could arise between Congress and the Executive for the settlement of which no adequate remedy is provided.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from California insist or argue that the President of the United States in his discretion may withhold information from Congress, and then when he withholds the information he can act upon it himself without informing us of it, and conclusively bind this Government either to a declaration of belligerency or any other condition he wishes to impose upon us?

Mr. WHITE. Not so broadly as that, but the President of the United States has the power to withhold information. This the Senator does not deny. From the beginning of this Government the Executive has recognized or refused to recognize belligerency, and his determination has passed unchallenged. No one has heretofore disputed Executive authority to accord belligerency. There is not a case, and I do not think the Senator from Alabama can discover an instance, where the belligerency of a country has been recognized by Congress despite the Executive.

Mr. MORGAN. Or by the Executive without the consent of Congress.

Mr. WHITE. Undoubtedly, yes. The Senator is certainly in error. The cases are uniformly against him. The prize cases and the Ambrose Light ought to suffice. In the latter cause it was determined that Mr. Cleveland recognized the belligerency of Colombia by indirection, although the State Department claimed he did not accord such recognition. (13 Albany L. J., page 125.) During the efforts of the South American Republics to gain their freedom the President recognized belligerency and for many years thereafter consistently refused to acknowledge the independence of the revolted territory.

This recognition of belligerency was always executive. Subsequently Congress ratified Presidential liberality, but such action was a mere affirmation of that which was already conclusive. No one ever disputed the adequacy of Presidential action. The ratification by Congress was indirect. So in the case of Texas and Mexico. While President Jackson refused to recognize the independence of Texas for years, still belligerency was recognized openly and clearly by the act of the Executive, and if the Senator from Alabama will peruse the opinion of Attorney-General Butler, reported 3 Opinions of the Attorneys-General, page 120, he will find an announcement which plainly supports my argument.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the Senator from California proceeds, I wish to call his attention to a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I call the Senator's attention to a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the first proposition the Senator has announced, that every concurrent or joint resolution must be sent to the President, that the Constitution on that subject is mandatory, and that a resolution can not become operative as a law unless it is sent to the President of the United States.

Mr. WHITE. Such a resolution as that pending here now, if the Senator will pardon me—a resolution arising under the Constitution and not dependent upon mere statutory or rule regulation?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Here is the case of Hollingsworth et al. against Virginia, 3 Dallas, decided by the unanimous opinion of the court. The case arose upon a motion to discontinue a suit pending in a Federal court after the amendment of the Constitution which forbids the States to be sued in a Federal tribunal. The case as stated is as follows:

> The decision of the court in the case of Chisholm, executor, vs. Georgia (2 Dall. Rep., 419) produced a proposition in Congress for amending the Constitution of the United States according to the following terms:
>
> "The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State."
>
> The proposition being now adopted by the constitutional number of States, Lee, Attorney-General, submitted this question to the court: Whether the amendment did or did not supersede all suits depending, as well as prevent the institution of new suits against any one of the United States by citizens of another State?

Messrs. Tilghman and Rawle argued in the negative, and they stated this proposition:

> The amendment has not been proposed in the form prescribed by the Constitution, and therefore it is void. Upon an inspection of the original roll it appears that the amendment was never submitted to the President for his approbation. The Constitution declares that "every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or, being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives," etc.

The court, Chase, Justice, in commenting upon that position, in a note at the bottom of the page—this is the only opinion that is delivered upon that point—says:

> There can surely be no necessity to answer that argument. The negative of the President applies only to the ordinary cases of legislation. He has nothing to do with the proposition or adoption of amendments to the Constitution.

I argue from that, of course, that a joint resolution or a concurrent resolution of the two Houses proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States embodies about as important a political movement as can be conceived of. If it results in a change of the Constitution of the United States, as it did in this case, nothing can be more important, and yet the concurrent resolution referred to in that case never was submitted to the President of the United States. The original rolls show that it was submitted to him, and yet after the ratification of the amendment it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that it was not necessary to submit the resolution to the President because it was not ordinary legislation.

Mr. WHITE. I may be wrong about it, but I do not see the slightest relevancy of the case cited by the Senator from Alabama. Article V of the Constitution provides the method of amendment and it states:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention, etc.

There is a special method provided for the adoption of a resolution looking to that end. It is a separate article, devoted to a specific subject. If the construction of the Senator from Alabama is correct, the section of the Constitution upon which I rely means nothing.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from California that that very point was raised in this case.

Mr. WHITE. Of course it was.

Mr. MORGAN. It was raised in this case, but——

Mr. WHITE. And it was decided by the court.

Mr. MORGAN. But the court rested its decision entirely on the ground that it was not ordinary legislation, and that the President did not have anything to do with it.

Mr. WHITE. So I understand. "Ordinary legislation" refers to such Congressional action as is here proposed. All Congressional effort under section 8 is plainly ordinary legislation. There is no difficulty about that, and the present attempt being under the grant of section 8, must be solved without regard to the peculiarities of section 5. I referred a moment ago to the case of Texas. I find, Federal Reporter, page 425, the following from the opinion of Attorney-General Butler:

> Where a civil war breaks out in a foreign nation, and part of such nation erect a distinct and separate government, and the United States, though they do not acknowledge the independence of the new government, do yet recognize the existence of a civil war, our courts have uniformly regarded each party as a belligerent nation in regard to acts done jure belli. * * * The existence of a civil war between the people of Texas and the authorities of the other Mexican States was recognized by the President of the United States at an early day in the month of November last. Official notice of this fact and of the President's intention to preserve the neutrality of the United States was soon after given to the Mexican Government. This recognition has been since repeated by numerous acts of the Executive, several of which had taken place before the capture of the Pocket.

There is a positive opinion, entitled to great weight, that the President has the right to announce belligerency without Congressional cooperation. Mr. Wharton, in section 71 of his Digest, says:

> The question of recognition of foreign revolutionary or reactionary governments is one exclusively for the Executive, and can not be determined inter nationally by Congressional action.

Mr. Seward was an able lawyer, a distinguished publicist, and his views merit serious consideration. In a letter written to Mr. Dayton, then our minister to France, he refers to this point and passes upon it with clearness and positiveness. I ask the Secretary to read from Secretary Seward's letter to Minister Dayton.

The Secretary read as follows:

> I send you a copy of a resolution which passed the House of Representatives on the 4th instant by a unanimous vote, and which declares the opposition of that body to a recognition of a monarchy in Mexico. Mr. Geofroy has lost no time in asking for an explanation of this proceeding. It is hardly necessary, after what I have heretofore written with perfect candor for the information of France, to say that this resolution truly interprets the unanimous sentiment of the people of the United States in regard to Mexico. It is, however, another and distinct question whether the United States would think it necessary or proper to express themselves in the form adopted by the House of Representatives at this time. This is a practical and purely Executive question, and the decision of it constitutionally belongs not to the House of Representatives, nor even to Congress, but to the President of the United States.
>
> You will of course take notice that the declaration made by the House of Representatives is in the form of a joint resolution, which before it can acquire the character of a legislative act must receive first the concurrence of the Senate, and secondly the approval of the President of the United States, or in case of his dissent the renewed assent of both Houses of Congress, to be expressed by a majority of two-thirds of each body. While the President received the declaration of the House of Representatives with the profound respect to which it is entitled as an expression upon a grave and important subject, he directs that you inform the Government of France that he does not at present contemplate any departure from the policy which this Government has hitherto pursued in regard to the war which exists between France and Mexico. It is hardly necessary to say that the proceeding of the House of Representatives was adopted upon suggestions arising within itself, and not upon any communication of the executive department, and that the French Government would be seasonably apprised of any change of policy upon this subject which the President might at any future time think it proper to adopt.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

WILLIAM L. DAYTON, Esq., etc., etc., etc.

Mr. WHITE. In an opinion already referred to, the decision of Judge Brown in "The Ambrose Light," 25 Federal Reporter, page 443, that jurist says:

The additional facts proved show, however, such a subsequent implied recognition by our Government of the insurgent forces as a government de facto, in a state of war with Colombia, and entitled to belligerent rights, as should prevent the condemnation of the vessel as prize. The communication from the Department of State to the Colombian minister, bearing date the day of the seizure, seems to me to constitute such a recognition by necessary implication. It could not have been based upon any facts, or have reference to any state of facts, not in existence at the time of the seizure; and it should be held, therefore, to arrest and supersede any subsequent condemnation for those acts of war which such a recognition authorizes the insurgents to carry on.

There the court grounded its judgment upon the proposition that the Executive, by making a certain proclamation in reference to the blockading of the Colombian ports, had recognized belligerency. Mr. President, I go further yet and maintain that after the Executive has once recognized belligerency the authorities are that such recognition can not be withdrawn except by agreement. This feature of the subject is discussed by Mr. Hall in his work on International Law, pages 37 and 38.

If we are to follow the decisions of our own courts; if we are to pay any attention to the uniform practice of our State Department; if we are to be guided to any extent by able writers, like Mr. Wharton, who for years was the trusted adviser of our State Department and whose erudition won the commendation of publicists everywhere, we must conclude that in any event recognition of belligerency or independence can not be accomplished without Executive participation. It is not necessary for me to rest my contention upon the proposition that Executive jurisdiction is exclusive, though it does seem to me that such is the law.

The resolution last reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations reads thus:

That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Is it intended that this resolution when adopted shall amount to a proclamation of neutrality and a declaration of belligerency, or is it only advisory? If the latter, it is of no more efficacy than any of the other resolutions submitted. If it is intended to operate directly, then we have the spectacle of the Congress of the United States issuing a proclamation of neutrality without any consultation whatever with the Executive. I venture to assert that there is no precedent and no authority anywhere for such a position. Certainly none has been cited, and the distinguished Senator from Alabama is so conversant with the diplomatic relations of this Government, past and present, that if there had been any such precedent he would have mentioned it. In my opinion we should proceed either by joint resolution, to be submitted to the President, positively declaring belligerency and announcing neutrality, or we should adopt an expression of opinion and sympathy as suggested in the resolution which I have proposed. I prefer the latter course, for the reasons already outlined.

I am not prepared to assume that the Executive has been derelict. I think we can trust Mr. Cleveland and his distinguished Secretary of State to act wisely and patriotically in the matter of our foreign relations. They have manifested no indisposition to maintain the honor and the integrity of this country. The stand so recently taken by the President concerning foreign affairs is approved by the American people. Surely no one can attribute want of firmness or fear to either of these distinguished officers. Can it be that they desire to witness Cuba in the permanent grasp of a cruel master? Can it be that if a proclamation of belligerency is of any value to the contending revolutionists the same is withheld without grave reason? I will discuss in a few moments the legal effect of such a declaration and the position in which it would place the United States and the people of that island.

But as far as the Department of State is a subject of consideration I must say that I am entirely confident that nothing will be done either hastily or illegally and that there will be no undue delay. I repeat that I trust the Congress of the United States will not put itself in antagonism to the Executive upon a question of the recognition of belligerency; certainly not without the entire case being presented. This Government has never been emotional in the matter of the recognition of belligerency.

I referred a moment ago to the case of Chile. Mr. Harrison, in the extract from his message which I read, sent in here in 1891, spoke of the fact that the agents of the insurgent government of Chile had attempted to obtain an audience. He said:

During the pendency of this civil contest frequent indirect appeals were made to this Government to extend belligerent rights to the insurgents and to give audience to their representatives. This was declined, and that policy was pursued throughout which this Government, when wrenched by civil war, so strenously insisted upon on the part of European nations.

He then refers to his unsuccessful prosecution of the Itata. What was the condition in Chile at the time that recognition was thus refused? That condition was briefly this: The judicial department of Chile decided that the President had usurped certain authority; the legislative department almost unanimously supported the judiciary; both judicial and legislative officers were driven from their homes at the point of the bayonet—they fled for their lives, and Balmaceda assumed supreme control, even closing the courts. The navy, with inconsiderable exceptions, joined in the demonstration against Balmaceda. The insurgents, as they were styled, took possession of the harbor of Iquique. They held absolutely and exclusively several of the northern states of the Republic and maintained undisputed dominion over those provinces and dominated the whole coast.

The harbor of Valparaiso was blockaded, and Balmaceda was unable to carry on commerce, while his enemies sailed over the ocean at will. And yet under that condition of things Mr. Harrison refused to recognize the belligerency of the insurgents, although they represented at the very outbreak of hostilities the judicial and legislative branches of the Government, and although the courts of this country afterwards decided that their organization really constituted the Government from the beginning.

Now, here was a case where I am free to say I think recognition should have been accorded, because there was manifestly a state of war, and the so-called insurgents maintained civilized rule and conducted in a regular way all governmental functions. At least two diplomatic agents from foreign powers were there, regularly accredited. The courts were in session.

They took prisoners of war, treated them in accordance with modern usage, and maintained in all respects an enlightened establishment. Yet we refused to recognize them, and did, I might add, everything which one nation could do to provoke another. In the midst of our efforts to belittle them the unrecognized insurgents suddenly crushed Balmaceda, and the President then, without the aid of Congress, recognized their independence.

I cite this case not because I think that the President of the United States was justified in withholding a recognition of belligerency, though he did so without protest from anybody here, but because I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this Government has of late years especially been very loath to engage in any transaction which could antagonize a friendly people.

Mr. President, I do not know, I am not in a position to affirm that I know, that the insurgent Government of Cuba is in a condition absolutely to justify the accordance of belligerent rights.

I think it is probable that such is their status, and I draw that inference mainly from the statement on page 51 of House Document 224 to which I referred. If Spain has proclaimed the existence of war, other nations are, of course, free to recognize the same. If one of the enthusiastic advocates who has here pleaded eloquently the cause of Cuba—for instance, my distinguished friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]—were appointed minister to the Cuban Republic, where would he go? Where would he meet the diplomatic officers of that Government, which, I am sorry to say, appears to me to be in the saddle? Where is the seat of governmental authority? Where is the place where the judiciary administers its functions? Where does the Executive sit and where are the legislative obligations discharged? I do not know. Who knows? It is true we are told that a constitution has been adopted, and there are reported legislative proceedings printed on our desks; but I am not satisfied that there is any permanently fixed and operating and accessible republican government on the island.

When we have been called upon to recognize belligerency we have usually been brought into direct commercial contact with the people seeking recognition. But our unlucky neighbors have no commerce; they have no navy; they hold no ports. No case of piracy can arise with reference to them, because they have no maritime standing.

These are reasons suggesting themselves to my mind why it is necessary to make a careful and painstaking investigation to discover the actual facts of the case. The authorities read by the Senator from Alabama are well founded where they announce that there must be some settled parity between the contending forces to warrant the recognition of even belligerency. We may think or guess that recognition should be allowed, but we can not know unless we have all the evidence before us. Without a reasonable probability of success, unless there is something like equality in the standing of the parties contending, recognition should not be granted. The mere justice or the injustice of the struggle can not determine the question of recognition or nonrecognition. The rules usually prevailing in such cases are stated in Dana's Wheaton, eighth edition, page 34, note 15; Lawrence's International Law, sections 162, 163, 164; Pomeroy's International Law (Woolsey's edition), section 236. I do not deem it advisable to do more than is indicated in the proposed resolution which I have offered.

I prefer to leave the final determination to the President. I favor this course not only because of the somewhat dubious conditions surrounding the matter, but because I think it is the law, and that to this rule we should steadfastly adhere. At this point I will quote from the message of President Grant, transmitted to Congress after Cuba had long been in revolt. He said:

In my annual message to Congress at the beginning of its present session I referred to the contest which had then for more than a year existed in the Island of Cuba between a portion of its inhabitants and the Government of Spain, and the feelings and sympathies of the people and Government of the United States for the people of Cuba, as for all peoples struggling for liberty and self-government, and said that the contest has at no time assumed conditions which amount to war, in the sense of international law, or which would show the existence of a de facto political organization of the insurgents sufficient to justify a recognition of belligerency.

During the six months which have passed since the date of that message the condition of the insurgents has not improved; and the insurrection itself, although not subdued, exhibits no signs of advance, but seems to be confined to an irregular system of hostilities, carried on by small and illy armed bands of men roaming, without concentration, through the woods and the sparsely populated regions of the island, attacking from ambush convoys and small bands of troops, burning plantations and the estates of those not sympathizing with their cause.

* * * * * *

Applying the best information which I have been enabled to gather, whether from official or unofficial sources, including the very exaggerated statements which each party gives to all that may prejudice the opposite or give credit to its own side of the question, I am unable to see, in the present condition of the contest in Cuba, those elements which are requisite to constitute war in the sense of international law. The insurgents hold no town or city; have no established seat of government; they have no prize courts; no organization for the receiving and collecting of revenue; no seaport to which a prize may be carried or through which access can be had by a foreign power to the limited interior territory and mountain fastnesses which they occupy. The existence of a legislature representing any popular constituency is more than doubtful.

This opinion was announced in 1870, but President Grant held the same views when he penned his seventh annual message in 1875. (1 Wharton's International Digest, section 60.)

Newspaper articles have been read here as proof of the commission of horrible crimes. We are in the habit in this Chamber of reading newspapers in evidence as though absolute verity pertained to such publications.

Mr. President, newspapers very often contain truth and sometimes they avoid the truth. There are many individuals in the world who frequently speak truly, and there are other individuals who commonly do not adhere to facts. Newspapers, to some extent, color information given in their columns. Sensations are popular. Who can afford to affirm that all the narrations of atrocity, savage almost beyond conception, which have been given the public with reference to the transactions in Cuba are true? I believe General Weyler to be a cold, relentless, and heartless man. I think the record shows this conclusion to be justified. If he committed the outrages which are charged against him here and elsewhere I am at a loss to account for his existence. He could not long survive such crimes. The vengeance of bereaved sufferers would overtake him. It is my belief that the case is bad enough when the truth is told, but I do not wish here or anywhere, but particularly here, to charge against a Government with which we are at peace, whether that Government be strong or weak, whether its administration of national affairs be such as to challenge our admiration or otherwise, any dark transactions of which we do not have indubitable proof.

The Senate, I understand, is specially charged with certain functions pertaining to our foreign policies. We should approach with caution the examination of accusations made against a friendly power. Haste, excitement, and denunciation have no place in such deliberations.

The actual occurrences of this disturbance are sufficiently sad to meet all the demands of the most sensational. It is inexcusable to assume that sanguinary rumors, wholly unsupported by evidence, are correct and even moderate recitals.

I would personally rejoice to witness the Cuban people free from alien control. I feel that it is not in accordance with the best interests of the United States that any portion of this continent or the adjacent islands should be governed from across the waters. I do not, however, find it requisite to exhibit gory portrayals of alleged Spanish cruelty in order to sustain my position, or to overrule or overturn the undisputed and unvarying policy of a century for the purpose of meeting this particular exigency.

Mr. President, it may be well to inquire what the effect of the recognition, which seems to be desired so greatly by the Cuban patriots, will be upon their cause and likewise upon the United States. In the first place, I affirm that as to the right to trade with the people of this country and to purchase arms, ammunition, supplies, etc., the insurgents are as favorably situated now as they can be after a recognition by us of their belligerency. Secondly, I assert that as far as we are concerned, though this to me is a minor consideration, we will assume in the event of a declaration of belligerency burdens not now upon our shoulders.

When the Senator from Alabama had the floor last Thursday the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] inquired of him as to the effect upon this country of a recognition by us of the Cubans; and the Senator from Alabama was asked whether it was not a fact that the right of search would be accorded to the naval vessels of Spain in the event of a recognition. Undoubtedly such would be the result. The Senator from Alabama, as I understood him, said yes, but that such search must be made at the peril of those who seized the vessel. The rule upon that subject is very succinctly and fully and conclusively stated in a case called "The Thompson," a prize case, reported in 3 Wallace, page 155.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I referred in that connection to the treaty of 1795 between Spain and the United States. I hope the Senator from California has examined the treaty.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; I have examined it. I can not find that it affects this question materially, and I will refer to it hereafter. I now read the syllabus in the case of the Thompson:

1. Prize courts properly deny damages or costs where there has been "probable cause" for seizure.
2. Probable cause exists where there are circumstances sufficient to warrant suspicion, even though not sufficient to warrant condemnation.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me to interpose there to say that I had reference in my question not only to the principle of the liability of seizure to be defended or justified by probable cause, but to the liability of search. If Spain has a colony that she is not at war with, but with which she has only some local disturbances, and attaches a United States vessel on the high seas, she has no more right to enter with that vessel than she has to enter the port of New York, even if she can show absolutely that what was on board was destined for her insurgents, unless it came within the 3-mile limit of her shores. But if she is at war, then she may search every American vessel at her discretion on the high seas. There is no question about her right to stop the New York, as I understand it, at her discretion. She may stop the New York or the Paris on the high seas whenever she deems that the vessel is designed to aid the party that might be at war. That is my point.

Mr. WHITE. I appreciate the question addressed to me by the Senator from Massachusetts and am disposed to agree with him.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg leave to say that I differ totally with the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. I do not understand the position of the Senator from Alabama, and I should be glad to hear him state it.

Mr. MORGAN. Vessels approaching the ports, whether blockaded or not, of one of the belligerents are liable to search for the purpose of ascertaining whether they contain contraband of war. That liability, however, is regulated by the treaty of 1795, which prescribes the particular manner in which the search shall be made, and excludes Spain from the right of search, even when the ship is passing along the 3-mile limit, unless she has contraband on board.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator mean to state that the treaty excludes Spain from the right of searching any vessel?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not; but conditions are provided by treaty which are not in accordance with international law.

Mr. WHITE. I do not intend to conclude this evening, and as a copy of the treaty is not before me at this moment I will defer a critical examination. At all events, taking the limitation suggested by the Senator from Alabama, the right of search does obtain within a restricted area, at least. There is no doubt about that?

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. WHITE. In the next place, Spain can, in the event of our declaration of neutrality, blockade her ports. There is no dispute as to this. Then any American citizen on the Island of Cuba today who is injured, who loses his property by reason of insurgent raids, may have the basis for such a claim as Mora successfully asserted and collected. But this will not be the rule if after belligerency is declared and neutrality proclaimed the damage is suffered. Whatever may be the effect of the liberal treaty referred to by the Senator from Alabama, I think it will be found that the inconveniences to which our commerce would be subjected in the event of a proclamation of neutrality would be many and great.

I will now make a few observations as to the rights of the Cubans in revolt to purchase contraband material here.

When the late Chilean civil war was in progress the Junta, or anti-Balmacedan party, occupied the same legal position with regard to the United States as do those who claim to represent the Republic of Cuba. They were unrecognized. They had sought recognition without avail. Therefore the situations may be considered parallel. Under such conditions the Junta sent a vessel to San Diego and there were placed upon her, within the jurisdiction of the United States, rifles, ammunition, etc. The vessel sailed with that cargo to Iquique. The munitions of war had been purchased in New York and had been transported across this continent and placed upon a schooner in the harbor of San Francisco and sent thence to Clemente Island, situated within California waters. The United States sent the cruiser Charleston to Iquique and took the Itata and cargo back to San Diego and libeled her under the provisions of the Revised Statutes upon which this Government now relies in the matter of the prosecution just established in New York. The parties who purchased the arms were arrested and brought to trial. Here, then, is an analogous case, a case upon all fours with that presented when the Cubans send an ordinary merchant ship to this country to buy war supplies for home consumption. Yet the district court of the United States, and afterwards the circuit court of appeals, decided that the Itata and those who manned her were innocent and were not amenable to any of the neutrality laws of the United States, and that the Chilean insurgents had a right to buy and take away the coveted consignment. In that case it was determined that the Government could only prosecute the defendants under the provisions of sections 5283 to 5286 of the Revised Statutes, which refer to neutral duties, unless they could be treated as pirates, a proposition impossible under our departmental rulings. It was intimated, but not decided, that there is no Federal statute under which mere unrecognized factions can be punished. This quære was incidentally made by Judge Ross, who tried the case at nisi prius (United States vs. Trumbull, 48 Federal Reporter); and a similar hint was thrown out by Judge Brown in the Carondolet (37 Federal Reporter). There are expressions in Gelston vs. Hoyt (3 Wheaton, 245) and United States vs. Quincy (6 Peters, 445) to the same purport. The case, however, was squarely settled upon the merits, and the effect of the adjudication is that recognition of either belligerency or independence is not essential to justify trade in contraband merchandise.

President Harrison, in the message to which I have already alluded, in commenting upon that decision said:

> A trial in the district court of the United States for the southern district of California has recently resulted in a decision holding, among other things, that, inasmuch as the congressional party had not been recognized as a belligerent, the acts done in its interest could not be a violation of our neutrality laws. From this judgment the United States has appealed, not that the condemnation of the vessel is a matter of importance, but that we may know what the present state of our law is, for if this construction of the statute is correct there is obvious necessity for revision and amendment.

While, as I have remarked, the lower court did not, as stated by Mr. Harrison, base its decision upon that ground, and the message is incorrect to that extent, nevertheless such was the intimation. No action was taken by Congress pursuant to the Presidential request; no legislation was had amending the provisions of the statute cited or making the penal provision applicable specifically to mere insurrectionists. These rights with reference to trade have been long recognized. No one stated the law more plainly than Judge Story in "The Santissima Trinidad," 7 Wheaton.

But if it be true that the insurgents in Cuba have the same right to procure arms and supplies under the present condition of affairs as they would if the United States recognized them as belligerents, where is the vast importance attributed to this recognition? What privileges would they thus obtain? Outside of a certain moral advantage the sole theoretical benefit would be a curtailment of the rights of Spain. As it is now, the insurgents have no national status and Spain is not prohibited from coming to our ports and arming her vessels, and she may fit out military expeditions here or take any steps competent to her in normal times. In the event of recognition Spain would be also liable under our neutrality statute. That is one advantage which would accrue to Cuba in consequence of belligerency. But practically what would this amount to? Spain is not engaged in fitting out expeditions in this country. There is no sympathy for her here. She can procure no men to enlist in her cause; she can obtain no aid and comfort in America. She may, like her foes, buy supplies and arms in our markets, but that is her right in any event. Thus it will be seen that but little benefit can follow even effective action for recognition.

What potency accompanies any resolution we may adopt? We all desire to see Cuba liberated, but how can she achieve her independence except through her own efforts? If our Government were not careful in the enforcement of her neutrality laws, perhaps the insurgent cause might advance more rapidly. If these people were more carefully advised there would not, I am persuaded, be serious difficulty in getting much-needed ammunition and other war material, but expeditions can not be fitted out here nor can men enlist for hostile service and arm ships in our waters for warlike enterprise. No one proposes that we shall declare war against Spain, and unless we do so the excited language daily repeated here is not appropriate.

Mr. President, our wishes are for Cuban freedom, but can we accomplish this by mere naked declaration? Senators have condemned Spain and have criticised her policies with severity, but all this is futile. We should appreciate the truth that we can not peaceably, or with due respect for international obligations, go further than sympathetic expression. If the President determines to announce that the Cubans in revolt are entitled to the rights of war they will still be subject to sections 5283–5286 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. This would be true if Cuban independence were recognized by us and must remain true while war lasts. Our declaration of neutrality itself implies that we will vigorously enforce the law as against all parties to the contest. We are in honor bound to do so. It is well to keep these facts before us. All should remember that in no way can we relieve the people of Cuba from the effect of our neutrality laws unless we boldly deny Spain's right and ourselves take charge of the issue and declare war.

Mr. President, I would prefer to conclude to-morrow rather than to go on now.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 27, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 26, 1896.

CONSULS.

Samuel Comfort, of New York, to be consul of the United States at Bombay, India, to fill a vacancy.

Samuel H. Keedy, of New York, to be consul of the United States at Grenoble, France, to fill a vacancy.

James H. Mulligan, of Kentucky, to be consul of the United States at Cape Town, South Africa, to fill a vacancy.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL OF ARIZONA.

George J. Roskruge, of Tucson, Ariz., to be surveyor-general of Arizona, vice Levi H. Manning, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

E. Prentiss Bailey, to be postmaster at Utica, in the county of Oneida and State of New York, in the place of James Miller, whose commission expired January 15, 1895.

Mary Kate Cleveland, to be postmaster at Waterville, in the county of Oneida and State of New York, in the place of Frederick H. Coggeshall, whose commission expired December 17, 1895.

Albert Snyder, to be postmaster at Greencastle, in the county of Franklin and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Charles H. Ruthrauff, whose commission expired December 23, 1895.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Pay Department.

Lieut. Col. James Price Canby, deputy paymaster-general, to be assistant paymaster-general with the rank of colonel, February 24, 1896, vice Terrell, retired from active service.

Maj. Frank Morrell Coxe, paymaster, to be deputy paymaster-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, February 24, 1896, vice Canby, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 26, 1896.

POSTMASTERS.

Julius A. Little, to be postmaster at Wadesboro, in the county of Anson and State of North Carolina.

William B. Dayton, to be postmaster at Port Jefferson, in the county of Suffolk and State of New York.

W. N. Pritchard, to be postmaster at Chapel Hill, in the county of Orange and State of North Carolina.

W. D. Gaster, to be postmaster at Fayetteville, in the county of Cumberland and State of North Carolina.

William F. Marshall, to be postmaster at Gastonia, in the county of Gaston and State of North Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY M. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ANNULMENT OF LAND PATENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (H. R. 5474) to provide for the extension of time within which suits may be brought to vacate and annul land patents, and for other purposes, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the first amendment, and shall ask a separate vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "ten" and insert "six"; so as to make the clause read: "Shall only be brought within six years of the date of issuance of such patent."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the House contained very unusual provisions. It proceeds upon the theory that it is an extension of section 8 of the act of March 3, 1891, which provides as follows:

That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent heretofore issued shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within six years after the date of the issuance of such patents.

Now, the first section of this bill as passed by the House—and passed in response to the special message of the President asking for legislation upon this subject—provides not for the extension of the statute which I have read, but it limits that statute to two kinds of patents, to wit, those based on railroad and wagon-road grants. The bill as passed by the House left the five years limitation as it was in the act of 1891, but changed the limitation for future patents "therein referred to," railroads and wagon roads, from six to ten years. Having refused to permit any corrections for fraud or mistake except as to railroad and wagon-road grants, we are now asked to limit the time as to these to only six years. I am perfectly satisfied, from the testimony before the committee during the consideration of this bill, that the grants which ought to be examined and adjusted can not be properly examined within the time fixed by the Senate amendment. Indeed, I doubt whether the work can be done within the time fixed by the bill as it passed the House. Therefore I am opposed to the change from ten to six years.

If this bill becomes a law it introduces into the Department and into the courts an entirely new proposition for consideration in adjusting and dealing with these land grants. By the act of March 3, 1891, Congress was content with a statutory limitation and trusted that act to give to the purchasers all of the rights that were granted them not in conflict with settlers. But here is a proposition to limit the right of investigation to two kinds of grants, and while it pretends to do this, at the same time it in effect proceeds to confirm them, for it provides that "no patent to any lands held by a bona fide purchaser shall be vacated or annulled, but the right and title to such purchaser is hereby confirmed." This is done without regard to amount and without restriction as to the time of the purchase, and the good faith is not required to be shown beyond the holder of the land.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the gentleman from Arkansas to say that the Senate amendment, as now proposed to be concurred in, would not give the relief that was sought by the President and the Land Department and which was the special object of the bill proposed by the House?

Mr. McRAE. I think that would be the effect; at least it would so reduce the time allowed for the examination and adjustment of these grants as to make it practically impossible to do so with the present force allowed the Department.

This bill, I say, Mr. Speaker, would introduce a new subject of inquiry for the Department—that of investigating the claims of all persons who claim to be bona fide purchasers. The lands have been or will be all sold by the railroads, and of course the purchasers will allege their own good faith, and under this bill nothing can be done until these questions are settled. With this additional duty upon the Department of the Interior time becomes important, and I venture to predict that all of the time that is prescribed by the Senate amendment will be taken up in the consideration of the claims of those persons who allege that they are bona fide purchasers from railroad companies, and the errors and frauds of the grants themselves will be practically untouched at the end of six years, thereby defeating the declared object of the bill; and under the mandatory terms of the bill the Department can not prevent it.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves with a bill, the alleged object of which is to extend the time of the Department to adjust the grants, while at the same time it contains a declaration that they shall be confirmed by the affirmative action of the Department or by the judgment of the courts, if they elect to go into court; and so, instead of canceling the fraudulent patents, the effect of the bill, if the amendment be adopted, will be to confirm all of the land that may hereafter be, or that has been heretofore, sold to bona fide purchasers. It invites collusion and legalizes fraud of the worst character.

The bill may be a little better than nothing; but I think the principle we surrender in order to get it is worth a great deal more than all the land that will ever be recovered under its loose and dangerous provisions. In short, the bill when stripped of all verbiage helps no one except the purchasers of railroad lands, and it does this in utter disregard of the rights of the Government and of the settlers who claim under the public-land laws. Perfect and complete immunity is given the railroads against suits for fraud and errors in patents for lieu lands by the proviso to the first section of the bill, and this is substantially all they want and all they ask.

Mr. Speaker, I can do nothing except to warn Congress of the danger of any such legislation. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and myself sought to do this when the bill was pending in the House, and now, as the majority is about making this dangerous and unusual experiment, I appeal to you to give the Department the longest time to investigate. According to the progress made during the last five years in the investigations of these grants it would take sixteen years to make the adjustments, unless the Committee on Appropriations shall see fit to increase the force of the General Land Office. I admit that we can not reach what in my judgment is the fatal defect of the bill by nonconcurring in the Senate amendment, but we can at least make an effort to secure for the Department and for the President, who are charged with the investigation of the grants, the time which the House has already voted to give for that purpose.

For my own part I do not believe that there ought to be any limitation against the Government, but if there is let it be a reasonable one, so that the work may be done correctly. If we pretend to do something, let us not at the same time so construct the bill as to prevent its accomplishment. No; you had better throw off all disguise and say to the railroads, take the grants, sell the lands, get what you can for them, without fear of investigation. That is what you have done indirectly, and you furnish all the machinery for obtaining executive or judicial confirmation if thought necessary. The bill gives authority to the Department not to purge the grants of fraud, but to require it to stamp the seal of confirmation upon all of the lands that are held by bona fide purchasers, notwithstanding they may appear upon the records to be covered with fraud, although claimed by settlers under our land laws. The bill is in the interest of the railroads and not the settlers.

I hope the amendment will be nonconcurred in.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to follow my colleague upon the committee——

Mr. BARNEY. I would ask the gentleman from Arkansas is there not great fear, unless we concur in the Senate amendment, that the statute of limitations will expire on the 3d of March next, and that therefore there is urgent necessity for our acting at once in this matter?

Mr. McRAE. I think there is no danger of defeating the bill, because if we nonconcur the bill will go into conference, which can be held to-day or to-morrow, and we can thereby make at least an honest effort to get the time fixed in the House bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to follow my colleague upon the committee in discussing the merits of the original proposition. Substantially the only thing that is now before the House is this proposition of the Senate to strike out "ten" and insert the word "six." In the existing law, the act of 1891, which has not been repealed, but which is still in full force, it is provided that all suits on patents theretofore issued shall be brought within five years from that time, and that on patents thereafter to be issued the time shall be limited to six years. The House bill changed this time of six years to ten. The amendment of the Senate is to strike out the word "ten" in the House bill and adopt the original law of six years. Six years would then be the time in which the Government can hereafter assail a patent. That, it seems to me, is ample time. The Government officials will be more careful hereafter, with the experience they have had; and with the aid of the published adjudications of the Supreme Court they will be enabled with greater accuracy to adjust these patents, and hereafter the questions are not so likely to arise; but six years certainly will be ample to set aside all patents that may hereafter be assailed after being issued.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do you concede the statement made by the gentleman from Arkansas, that the passage of this bill surrenders the rights of the Government to all except two classes of grants?

Mr. LACEY. It does not surrender anything; it only makes an extension of time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do you extend that to any except two?

Mr. LACEY. The extension of time as recommended by the President in his message would have limited it to wagon-road grants and railroad grants, but the Senate has also included canal grants, there being also a small grant for that purpose involved. In the message of the President no statement was made as asking specifically for additional time with reference to patents to private individuals, such as desert-land claimants, homesteaders, and preempters, and the whole object of the message seemed to be to get unlimited time in which to assail the land-grant patents to railways and like patents; and this limitation is now extended by this bill five years longer, and the Senate says as to future patents six years, instead of ten years, as the House bill provided, shall be the time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one more question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the objection to getting a conference on this bill, and trying, if you can, to get some of the relief that the gentleman from Arkansas insists ought to be obtained?

Mr. LACEY. Because I do not want the relief asked by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then you are not in favor of the House bill?

Mr. LACEY. I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he is not in favor of the House bill as it passed?

Mr. LACEY. I voted for the House bill. My own preference, if I could have had it, would have been to change this so as to make it five instead of ten years, but the committee made it ten years. Yesterday the matter was laid before the committee and it agreed to the Senate amendment, with the exception of my friend and perhaps some others. At any rate, the majority of the committee were in favor of accepting the Senate amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for extending the present limitation of six years to ten years as to future patents. The real contention between the gentleman from Arkansas and myself is this: He favors unlimited repeal of all limitation laws, so as to enable the Government in the future, at its will at any time, to file a bill to attack and to set aside any patent that may be issued of any kind, to a private individual, to a railway, or to a canal; on the other hand, the majority of the committee contend there ought to be a limit as to these things; and where land has been sold to outsiders, to an innocent purchaser, that their rights should be confirmed and that they should be relieved from litigation. That is the ground upon which we are divided. This mere question as to whether there should be ten years or six years in the future is not very important; and this bill must pass now substantially, if at all, because the limitation will expire next Monday, and if we go into a conference the chances are that this bill may be defeated.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the gentleman forgets that a conference report is privileged and can be presented at any time, and even supervenes a motion to adjourn.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; I understand that.

Mr. McMILLIN. And there is not the danger that the gentleman apprehends from allowing this matter to go over for the present.

Mr. LACEY. If there were anything in the action of the Senate which I thought ought to be changed, I should ask a conference; but I think, on the contrary, if we were going to change the word "six" it ought to be made "five" instead of "ten."

Mr. McMILLIN. But is there not danger of the bill failing by your opposition to the House measure?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. I am not opposed to the House bill. At the same time I did not regard every feature of that bill as perfect. For instance, the word "canal" has been inserted—a change which I think it well to make, as it appeared before the Senate committee that there was one canal grant which ought to be adjusted.

Mr. NEILL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he thinks there ought to be a statute of limitations as to fraud in favor of these railroad companies?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. There is a limitation now of so many years in which to adjust their grants.

Mr. NEILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. Suit can be brought within five years. We are proposing to give five years more; and it is important to the gentleman's State and to other States that there should not be clouds cast upon the titles of patented lands, the great bulk of which have been heretofore sold and have passed into the hands of settlers. Even though there may have been actual fraud twenty, thirty, or forty years ago in reference to some of these grants, yet after patents have been issued there should be some limitation as to the time within which the Government should exercise activity and determine what patents, if any, are fraudulent or wrong, in order that suits may be brought, the facts determined, and facilities offered for settling up that country.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, yield to a question? I desire to ask the gentleman if he thinks there should be any statute of limitations against the Government for the protection of titles acquired by frauds?

Mr. LACEY. I think it is. I think five years enough. There are only 60,000,000 acres of unadjusted lands; 12,000,000 acres were adjusted last year. At that rate all these controversies can be adjusted inside of five years. But if five years should be found inadequate a further extension of one or two years might be granted by a supplemental act of Congress. But let me state to the gentleman from Arkansas that if we now give ten years the Interior Department will not touch this matter during the next five or six years; whereas if we now give only five years the work will be continued with the present activity. The Department has adjusted more grants of land during the last year (being the final year of the five already granted) than it adjusted within the previous three.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee [Mr. LACEY] has not convinced me, and I hope he has not convinced other members of the House, of the justness of his position. The railroad companies have had all the advantages in this matter. I know that such has been the fact in my State. Now we are asking something in behalf of the people, for whom the public lands should be held.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], as the Chair understands, asks the previous question.

Mr. LACEY. I withdraw the demand for a moment and yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House with any lengthy discussion of this bill. When the bill originally came before the House I opposed its passage in the form in which it now stands. I then gave my reasons why I thought it was better to have no limitation as to the forfeiture of these public lands where the patentees have obtained them by fraud or mistake. But the House saw fit to extend for a certain number of years the time within which forfeiture could be had rather than repeal the statute of limitations entirely. The bill went from this House fixing that limitation at ten years. It now comes back from the Senate with the limitation fixed at six years.

I consider there is every reason why the time should be extended as far as possible if we are going to have any limitation at all. I wish to call the attention of members of the House to the facts that were developed before the Public Lands Committee in the investigation had during the consideration of this bill. We then had before the committee the officers of the Public Land Department. They were examined as to the forfeiture of these public-land grants. It was disclosed in that investigation that there was in the Public Land Department but one set of books that could be inspected in the determination whether or not it was proper to forfeit these public-land grants, and it was developed that only a certain number of men could be employed in the examination of those books, so that necessarily the time for investigation must be extended or these men could not get at the facts and determine what grants had been acquired by fraud or mistake and what grants had been acquired properly.

Furthermore, on the investigation of the facts before the Public Lands Committee the officers of the Public Land Department in testifying before the committee stated that at the rate at which they had progressed in the past, sixteen years more would be required to examine and inquire into these public-land grants. And with the testimony before the committee stating that it would take sixteen years to examine this question and determine whether the Government of the United States was going to be deprived of land that properly belonged to it, we had fixed in our original bill ten years for the forfeiture of grants in the future. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, if these officers, who are limited in their investigation to one set of books, whose numbers are necessarily limited, are held down to the investigation of the past grants, how in reason can they examine into the validity of the grants that are occurring now? You see that the cutting down of this time will absolutely deprive the Department of a full opportunity to investigate the rights of the Government of the United States and determine whether land is being taken away from it that properly belongs to the Government. For that reason I think the House should nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and we should insist on standing on the bill as it left the House and went to the Senate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would be obliged to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LACEY] if he would withhold his demand for the previous question for a moment.

Mr. LACEY. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. McMILLIN. Only a few minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, and will give him more time if he needs it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the statement that has just been made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], it strikes me there is only one decent way of doing this business, whatever we are going to do, and that is to let this matter go to conference, and let the conference committee report to this House the best they can do. There is no danger that this bill will be lost if there is any strenuous effort to save it. The time does not expire until next Monday. Conference reports take precedence of everything else and are about the only thing that can take precedence, even of a motion to adjourn. Only a few days ago the Committee on Public Lands brought into this House a proposition saying that ten years was short enough time for this limitation. The Commissioner of the Land Office estimated at that time that it would take sixteen years to do the work, and yet to-day we are called upon to surrender, not simply the six years between ten and sixteen, but to surrender four years of the time that the committee itself said we ought to have when they reported this bill. Now, if there have been frauds in connection with the disposition of these lands, they ought not to be covered up. There ought to be no legislation to condone those frauds, but every effort in behalf of the people should be made for the free, fair, and full investigation of the question.

For one I insist that no ill can come from letting this go to conference, and if gentlemen want to rush it through in hot haste, if they are determined to have legislation that shall benefit the people who have profited by these frauds, rather than benefit the people who are entitled to these lands, let the country know who is doing it. I do not believe this bill should be rushed through, when the inevitable result will be to curtail the time for the Government to have justice done.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seem to have it.

Mr. LACEY. Division.

The House divided.

Mr. McMILLIN. We withdraw the demand, and will take the vote on the proposition itself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] demanded the division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes none.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the first amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LACEY. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 43.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LACEY. I should be glad to have this amendment reported. I think perhaps there is some misapprehension as to the amendment before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this amendment be reported again. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "ten" and insert "six."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] demands the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 156, nays 93, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—156.

Adams,	Ellis,	Huling,	Pickler,
Apsley,	Evans,	Hull,	Pitney,
Arnold, Pa.	Fairchild,	Hurley,	Powers,
Atwood,	Faris,	Jenkins,	Prince,
Baker, Md.	Fenton,	Johnson, Ind.	Pugh,
Baker, N. H.	Fletcher,	Johnson, N. Dak.	Quigg,
Barham,	Foote,	Joy,	Raney,
Bartholdt,	Gamble,	Kerr,	Ray,
Belknap,	Gardner,	Knox,	Reeves,
Blue,	Gibson,	Kulp,	Royse,
Bowers,	Gillett, Mass.	Lacey,	Russell, Conn.
Broderick,	Graff,	Leighty,	Scranton,
Brosius,	Griffin,	Leonard,	Settle,
Brown,	Griswold,	Linney,	Simpkins,
Brumm,	Grosvenor,	Linton,	Smith, Ill.
Bull,	Grout,	Long,	Spalding,
Burrell,	Grow,	Lorimer,	Sperry,
Burton, Mo.	Hadley,	Loudenslager,	Steele,
Burton, Ohio	Hager,	Low,	Stephenson,
Calderhead,	Halterman,	Mahany,	Stewart, N. J.
Cannon,	Hanly,	Mahon,	Strode, Nebr.
Chickering,	Hardy,	Marsh,	Sulloway,
Clark, Iowa	Hatch,	McCall, Mass.	Tawney,
Clark, Mo.	Heatwole,	McCall, Tenn.	Tayler,
Codding,	Heiner, Pa.	Meiklejohn,	Treloar,
Colson,	Hemenway,	Mercer,	Updegraff,
Cooke, Ill.	Henderson,	Miller, Kans.	Van Voorhis,
Cooper, Wis.	Henry, Conn.	Miller, W. Va.	Wadsworth,
Cousins,	Henry, Ind.	Moody,	Walker, Va.
Crowther,	Hepburn,	Mozley,	Wanger,
Dalzell,	Hermann,	Murphy,	Warner,
Danford,	Hilborn,	Noonan,	Watson, Ohio
Daniels,	Hill,	Odell,	Wellington,
Dayton,	Hitt,	Otjen,	Willis,
Dingley,	Hopkins,	Overstreet,	Wilson, Idaho
Dolliver,	Howe,	Payne,	Wilson, N. Y.
Doolittle,	Howell,	Pearson,	Wood,
Draper,	Huff,	Perkins,	Woomer,
Eddy,	Hulick,	Phillips,	Wright.

NAYS—93.

Anderson,	Downing,	McLaurin,	Stallings,
Bailey,	Elliott, S. C.	McMillin,	Stewart, Wis.
Baker, Kans.	Erdman,	McRae,	Stokes,
Barney,	Harrison,	Meredith,	Strait,
Bartlett, Ga.	Hart,	Meyer,	Strowd, N. C.
Bartlett, N. Y.	Hendrick,	Miles,	Sulzer,
Bell, Colo.	Hutcheson,	Miner, N. Y.	Swanson,
Berry,	Johnson, Cal.	Minor, Wis.	Talbert,
Black, Ga.	Jones,	Money,	Tate,
Boatner,	Kendall,	Neill,	Terry,
Buck,	Kyle,	Ogden,	Tucker,
Clardy,	Latimer,	Otey,	Turner, Ga.
Cobb, Ala.	Lawson,	Owens,	Turner, Va.
Cobb, Mo.	Layton,	Richardson,	Tyler,
Cockrell,	Lester,	Robbins,	Underwood,
Connolly,	Lewis,	Robertson, La.	Walsh,
Cooper, Tex.	Little,	Russell, Ga.	Washington,
Cox,	Livingston,	Sauerhering,	Williams,
Crisp,	Lockhart,	Sayers,	Wilson, S. C.
Crowley,	Maguire,	Shuford,	Woodard,
Cummings,	McClellan,	Skinner,	Yoakum.
De Armond,	McCreary, Ky.	Sorg,
Dinsmore,	McCulloch,	Sparkman,
Dockery,	McDearmon,	Spencer,

NOT VOTING—106.

Abbott,	Cowen,	Kiefer,	Shafroth,
Acheson,	Crump,	Kirkpatrick,	Shannon,
Aitken,	Culberson,	Lefever,	Shaw,
Aldrich,	Curtis, Iowa	Leisenring,	Sherman,
Allen, Miss.	Curtis, Kans.	Loud,	Smith, Mich.
Allen, Utah	Curtis, N. Y.	Maddox,	Snover,
Andrews,	Denny,	McCleary, Minn.	Southard,
Arnold, R. I.	De Witt,	McClure,	Southwick,
Avery,	Dovener,	McCormick,	Stahle,
Babcock,	Ellett, Va.	McEwan,	Stone, C. W.
Bankhead,	Fischer,	McKenney,	Stone, W. A.
Barrett,	Fitzgerald,	McLachlan,	Strong,
Beach,	Foss,	Milliken,	Taft,
Bell, Tex.	Fowler,	Milnes,	Tarsney,
Bennett,	Gillet, N. Y.	Mondell,	Thomas,
Bingham,	Hainer, Nebr.	Morse,	Towne,
Bishop,	Hall,	Moses,	Tracewell,
Black, N. Y.	Harmer,	Newlands,	Tracey,
Boutelle,	Harris,	Northway,	Walker, Mass.
Brewster,	Hartman,	Parker,	Watson, Ind.
Bromwell,	Hicks,	Patterson,	Wheeler,
Catchings,	Hooker,	Pendleton,	White,
Clarke, Ala.	Howard,	Poole,	Wilber,
Coffin,	Hubbard,	Price,	Wilson, Ohio
Cook, Wis.	Hunter,	Reyburn,	Woodman.
Cooper, Fla.	Hyde,	Robinson, Pa.
Corliss,	Kem,	Rusk,

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DE WITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote upon this question.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House, and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. DE WITT. I fear I was not in the Hall in time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. HALL.

Mr. FARIS with Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. HUBBARD with Mr. SHAW.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. TRACEY with Mr. ELLETT of Virginia.

Mr. BLACK of New York with Mr. COWEN.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas with Mr. MADDOX.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. POOLE with Mr. CLARKE of Alabama.

Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. BANKHEAD.

For this day:

Mr. MILNES with Mr. TARSNEY.

Mr. AITKEN with Mr. CULBERSON.

Mr. LEFEVER with Mr. COOPER of Florida.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. WILSON of South Carolina.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. RUSK.

Mr. MORSE with Mr. MOSES.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska with Mr. BELL of Texas.

Mr. WHITE with Mr. MCKENNEY.

On this vote:

Mr. ANDREWS with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. LOUD with Mr. CATCHINGS.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The remaining Senate amendments were then concurred in.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—VAN HORN VS. TARSNEY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the debate on this contested-election case has been running without limit, as it was the desire of the committee to give gentlemen on each side who had examined the question an opportunity to be heard. There are still several gentlemen who desire to speak on the part of the committee, and on consultation with my colleagues of the minority I find that there are some gentlemen on that side who desire to be heard. It appears impossible, therefore, to get a vote to-day, but a vote will certainly be had to-morrow.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Does the gentleman desire to fix now the time when the vote shall be taken to-morrow?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should be glad to do so, but that seems to be impossible, as it depends on certain contingencies now unknown. My opinion is that the vote will be taken about the middle of the afternoon to-morrow, but I can not say positively.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Can the gentleman say that it will not be taken before 3 o'clock?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes; I think that can be said with safety.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman say that the vote will be taken between 3 and 5 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think that arrangement can be made. At all events, the vote will be taken to-morrow without fail.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is quite satisfactory to this side.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether it is absolutely necessary that we should spend all that time on that case. Why can not we finish it to-day?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Because there are several gentlemen who desire to be heard, and who, I think, can be heard by the House with profit.

Mr. DALZELL. The questions at issue are within a narrow limit, and there is an appropriation bill ready to be taken up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. They may seem to be within a narrow limit to a man of the capacity and intelligence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [laughter], but——

The SPEAKER. In the meantime is there any gentleman who desires to be recognized to continue the discussion of the case? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are several gentlemen who are ready to proceed. Inasmuch as gentlemen on this side have occupied most of the time so far, I think we shall ask the other side to proceed this morning.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Very well; we will occupy an hour on this side.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, at the general election held in the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri in November, 1894, I was returned as elected by a plurality of 745 votes. Shortly after the election, allegations were made of misconduct on the part of election officials and of fraudulent voting and fraudulent counting of ballots in that election. A contest for the representation of that district was inaugurated, based upon those allegations of misconduct and fraud. That case is before you to-day. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not before this House in the form or manner that contested-election cases are usually presented to this body. The committee of the House charged with the investigation and the making of a report in this case came to the conclusion, and so reported by a majority vote, that in four precincts in that Congressional district there was fraud, there was misconduct of election officials, which, in the judgment of that majority, annulled the election in those precincts. Therefore they reported to this House that no votes cast in any of those four precincts had been taken into consideration in their findings and conclusions; in other words, that they had thrown out of their consideration all the votes cast in those four precincts, whether legal or illegal, and that they report in favor of the seating of the contestant, because on the face of the returns from the remaining precincts of the district he appears to have a plurality of votes. The contestee asserts that the full case is not before the House, that all the facts necessary to be known to members in order that they may discharge their duty conscientiously and justly under the obligations of their oaths of office are not in the record in this case, and in order that they may have the benefit of a knowledge of all the facts essential to a proper and judicial determination of this case there is pending before this House a resolution on the part of the contestee to recommit to the Committee on Elections this case, with instructions that that committee shall, by such means and in such manner as it shall prescribe, proceed to take that essential and necessary testimony now available, so that the House may arrive at a just and proper determination.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Speaker, to enter to any extent into the details of the testimony in this case. It is asserted that there was a conspiracy formed prior to that election with the purpose of changing the result and announcing a false result of the election concerning certain offices candidates for which were to be voted for at that election. It is asserted that, in pursuance of that conspiracy and in carrying it out to a successful consummation, misconduct on the part of the officials charged with the supervision of that election was resorted to, and that many fraudulent votes were counted as having been cast by legally qualified electors which never were cast at all. I stand before this House to-day not to discuss that question, because it is true, and has been asserted by the contestee at all times as earnestly as by the contestant, that there was misconduct and that there was fraud connected with that election. But I am here to say that in the thousand pages of this record there is not even an intimation, there is not an insinuation that any of that misconduct or any of that fraud was procured or caused to be done by me or that it was done by any person in my interest or that it was intended to result in my benefit. I am here candidly and fairly to give to this House all the information which I possess concerning that election, and let the results fall where they will. I want to take this case up, however, as logically as I may; and, briefly speaking of each of these four precincts, bring the House to an understanding of the true condition. The conclusion of the committee is that no vote cast in the fifty-second precinct, Ninth Ward, of Kansas City, should be counted because there was misconduct on the part of the officers and actual violation of the election laws, as they assert, at that precinct. What are the facts connected with that precinct as shown in this record?

One man named T. J. Canney testifies that on the night or afternoon of the day before the election he was sent for to come to the house of one Findley, who is shown in this record to be a common gambler. Canney has undertaken to show us in this record what transpired between him and Findley. I have read his testimony with care. I can not gain from it sufficient information to tell you intelligently what took place there. He says that Findley talked to him of crooked work that was to be done at the polls next day. He tells us about Mr. Findley saying to him that that work was to be "finer than silk" and that no one would "get onto it." But nowhere does he detail or state what that work was to be or what part he was to take in it—what part he was to play in the drama that was being unfolded to him. He was sent for, according to his testimony, to act as one of those who were to do that unlawful work; and yet he fails to say where he was to do it, when he was to do it, how he was to do it. But he does testify with clearness and explicitness that on the next day, at the hour of noon, he went to his dinner; that he was gone forty minutes; that when he went to his dinner there was a pile of ballots prepared by the distributing judges that had upon them, as the law required, the initials of those judges, prepared to hand to the voter as he would come in; that there was a pile of those ballots thus prepared upon the table when he went out to dinner, and when he came back he found that there had been taken out from a ballot box and distributed in piles the unscratched Republican ballots and the scratched ballots of each party; that he saw two of those judges take out 115 of those straight Republican ballots that had been legally cast; that he saw them take 115 ballots that never had been cast and make them straight Democratic ballots, transcribing from the books the numbers of these legally cast Republican ballots and putting those numbers upon the backs of those fictitious or uncast Democratic ballots; that these ballots were placed in the ballot box and counted instead of the 115 legally cast Republican ballots. Again, he tells us (and I am stating this just as broadly and distinctly as he does in his testimony) that about 5 o'clock in the evening the same process was repeated to the extent of 55 more ballots, making in all 170 ballots. According to his testimony, 170 legally cast Republican ballots had substituted for them in the ballot box and in the count 170 Democratic ballots that never had been cast.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here, as before the committee, I state that if that be true—if those were the facts—then the action of the majority of this committee does not conform to right or law or justice. If that testimony of Canney be true and reliable, then there is no warrant of law, there is no equity or justice, in this committee or this House throwing out all the ballots cast in that precinct and disregarding any poll in it. If that testimony is reliable and those were the facts, justice and right would demand that the 170 ballots counted for the contestee and returned for him should be subtracted and 170 ballots should be added to the returned vote of the contestant. That would be justice; that would be fair; that would be right. There was returned for me in that precinct a majority of 160 or 180—I am not certain which. Instead of taking away from me that majority of 160 or 180, as the action of this committee recommends—on the contrary, a fair definition of legal action would require this committee and this House to count those ballots as though actually cast, and give to the contestant in this case the majority to which he would thus be entitled in that precinct.

But, Mr. Speaker, I care not to dwell upon it here now, because it is not essential to the determination of this case, but fairness and justice to myself and to the honest voters of that precinct demand that I should say that the allegation of those facts stands alone upon the testimony of this one man. He tells us in his testimony that this act was performed in a little room (you understand how under the Australian ballot system small booths are used for the purposes of an election)—that in a little room, perhaps not more than 10 or 12 feet square, these acts at noonday and at 5 o'clock in the evening were performed in the presence of six judges and two clerks—were performed by two of those judges in the presence of three bystanders and in the presence of a regular officer of the police force of Kansas City.

Not one of those eight election officials, not one of those three bystanders, nor this officer of the law, corroborates the testimony of this man Canney. It stands by itself alone. Three of those officials, as their testimony in this record shows, declare upon oath that no such thing occurred, and it could not have occurred without their knowing it, because two of them are the very two named by Mr. Canney as having perpetrated that crime. He was an election officer. According to his testimony he was not only a passive observer of this crime against the law, but he was an active participant in it, for he tells us in this record that he himself strung these fraudulently substituted ballots upon the string on which they were strung to be placed in the box. Not one of these persons corroborates him. In this record he is asked whether he protested against this fraud being done. He answered yes; that he protested to one of these judges; that he protested to him two or three times. He protested to none other. He did not protest to the guardian of the law who stood there in his presence. He did not protest to these three bystanders, citizens who were present, nor was the transaction heard of from him until a number of days afterwards. I say that I do not dwell upon this, but it is only a matter of justice to the House to call its attention to the fact.

The first arrest—and there have been many arrests growing out of the election in that city—the first arrest made, growing out of that election, was made upon the complaint of this man Canney against some of the election officers in that precinct. That was sixteen months ago, or nearly sixteen months ago. They have never been brought to trial yet, not one of them, and it will not be insinuated that the administrators of the criminal law in that city have not been diligent in hunting down the men who prostituted the franchises of the people on that day. They have not been brought to trial, but the case has been set now for the 16th day of the coming month. I call your attention to this fact, that not only is the man Canney wholly uncorroborated by any other person with regard to his testimony, but he is absolutely contradicted by the physical conditions surrounding the transactions or the details of that election, and in addition he is to-day under an indictment for the crime of perjury committed in a matter in no wise connected with the election or election cases, but in another county and in another district is under indictment for perjury committed in a civil suit in which Marshall Field & Co., of Chicago, are one of the parties. So that the testimony of the man Canney alone is all there is of proof of the allegation of improper work done in that precinct.

I would not take your time to go into the minor matters that gentlemen have referred to in connection with this precinct. I could show to you that the insinuation of one physical fact upon which the majority of the committee based its suspicion of the truth of the charges of Canney and assumed, as corroboration of his testimony, to wit: That on the morning of the election, as soon as the judges went into that little house—a house used as a coal or grain house—that when they went in there one of them took a piece of soap and smeared each one of the windows of the room with it. The inference was that it was to conceal from the eyes of watchful persons outside the perpetration of the unlawful acts to be committed therein. But when you take our system of election, its objects and purpose, and consider them, you may—unless you want to construe every act as criminal, instead of presuming it to be innocent—you may find in that act not an insinuation of wrong, but one of absolute honesty to carry out the objects and purposes of the law.

The Australian ballot system has for its prime object and purpose the securing of the absolute secrecy of the ballot. To prevent any man's ballot or the one he has voted being known is the prime object of the system; and with that end in view we have these little places in which the voter may go away from the eyes of his fellow-citizens and prepare his own ballot. Aye, even, we put stalls into the booths into which a man may go and secure himself from the scrutiny of even the officials of elections while he is marking his ballot, so that no man may see or know how he voted. The testimony shows that one side of that little building was composed almost entirely of glass, and had the election officers gone in there in the morning and hung up curtains over the windows or pinned up papers to screen the voters from the scrutiny of those who stood outside, it would not have been presumed to be done with an unlawful purpose. What difference does it make whether they used curtains to secure a laudable and lawful object or smeared the windows over with a substance that, while excluding the gaze of those who ought to be excluded, yet would give to the officials engaged in the election necessary light for the transaction of this official business?

But I will proceed, for I do not wish to exhaust the time of the House. I proceed to the other precincts where there is something substantial when you talk of fraud. When that election was over it was known that something over 1,600 votes had been counted as cast in the three precincts of the Second Ward—the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the city. That was an abnormal return. The usual and customary vote in that ward at previous elections had been a little more than 800, and when fully double the number that usually voted had been cast in that ward and was returned as counted, and when that abnormal vote was shown to have taken place within the ward, it was apparent, almost conclusively, that there had been fraudulent work done in those precincts. Now, I am not here to say that there was not. I am here, as I always have been since that election, asserting that there was fraudulent work done there; that there were crimes committed against the ballots that day, and that the perpetrators of them should be brought to justice and the truth known to all men.

But, Mr. Speaker, this contest was inaugurated but a short time after the election. The testimony had to be taken soon after the election. It was so taken. The contestant produced evidence showing general fraud and general misconduct on the part of the officers, tending to show the conspiracies spoken of by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE] on yesterday—piled up testimony, showing in a general manner that fraud was perpetrated, that there was general misconduct on the part of the officers, but nowhere presenting evidence as to the specific manner in which it was perpetrated or the extent of the perpetration. That case was left, so far as the contestant was concerned, in that shape. It was brought within the rule of the law that where fraud and misconduct of this character are shown, and where the legal can not be segregated from the illegal and the true result ascertained, then and then alone this drastic process of throwing out the legal as well as the illegal has sometimes been justified.

Now, what could the contestee do? The contestee had no more knowledge than had the contestant at that time. It was the duty of the contestant, if he could produce evidence at that time, to have shown the specific manner of the perpetration of these frauds and their extent. It was his duty, if it was within his power, to have put into this record the evidence that would demonstrate to this House how many fraudulent votes were cast or counted and for whom they were cast and counted. That duty was as strong upon the contestant, certainly, as it was upon the contestee. He could not do it, nor could the contestee. Why? Because the knowledge of the manner of the perpetrating of the frauds, the knowledge of the extent of the frauds, the knowledge of who was the beneficiary of the frauds, so far as this Congressional contest was concerned, was locked at that time in the bosoms of the criminals who perpetrated the fraud, and there was no machinery either in his power or mine to extract that hidden knowledge from the bosoms of those criminals. Therefore the record closed in that condition.

At the earliest moment, as soon as evidence began to be ascertainable that would clear up this doubt and uncertainty, as soon as it began to be apparent, then on the very first day that it was possible for the contestee to move, just as soon as the Speaker of this House announced the formation of the committees of the House, just as soon as he had by his order created a Committee on Elections, I came into this House and presented a resolution, supported by affidavits that went at least to a part of the evidence, that would close up a part of this difficulty, and that there might be no allegation of negligence or delay upon my part, asked for its consideration, and that the case might be reopened and the testimony then available and essential to your correct determination of this case be introduced into this record before you would be called upon under your oaths to decide this question of law and fact with the essential facts left out. That was more than two months ago. If that resolution had been promptly acted upon, if it had been favorably reported to this House, it would have enabled the contestee to have had, not what he can get now, but what was essential and material then and is essential and material now, although not going to the extent that the evidence is adducible at this time—he would have been enabled to have produced that testimony, had it in the record, and these gentlemen of the committee could have considered it the very day they considered this half-made-up record.

Now, I do not intend to delay the House in the discussion of legal questions, but I want to call your attention to just one provision of law, and the one which governs in a case presenting the issue that this now presents.

McCrary, in his work entitled American Law of Elections, at page 272, says this:

> To set aside the returns of an election is one thing; to set aside the election itself is another and a very different thing. The return from a given precinct being set aside, the duty still remains to let the election stand and to ascertain from other evidence the true state of the vote. The return is only to be set aside, as we have seen, when it is so tainted with fraud or with the misconduct of the election officers that the truth can not be deduced from it. The election is only to be set aside when it is impossible from any evidence within reach to ascertain the true result, when neither from the returns nor from other proof, nor from all together, can the truth be determined.

It is upon that law we base the determination of the issue presented here. Now comes the question: Can you from other evidence purge these polls, segregate the legal from the illegal, ascertain with reasonable certainty of intent what was the true vote, and for whom that true vote was cast in these precints? I believe I shall be able to demonstrate to you that we can. It could not be done when this record was made up. It has been said upon the floor of this House in this discussion that there has been a question whether the contestee has not been guilty of laches, of negligence in not having procured the testimony that he asserts is now available. I will not discuss that further than to say, as I have already said, that the knowledge of the extent of those frauds was locked in the bosoms of the criminals who perpetrated them, and no power was given to me to draw that knowledge forth.

Are we in a different situation since? I said a little while ago that the officers of the law had been vigilant in seeking evidence, in bringing indictments and seeking conviction of all suspected of complicity in these frauds. Many of these election officials have been indicted, and a number of them have been tried since this record was made up. Some of them have been convicted since this record was made up, and in these trials that have taken place evidence that was then not attainable has been developed, and it is here before you for your consideration if you will but open the door and let it in that you may peruse it. When this record was made up, as certain of the witnesses concluded their testimony, they were asked to attach certain exhibits to their depositions, to hand them to the notary that he might attach them. Among others was the custodian of the poll books of the election. He was requested to hand to the notary, that that notary might attach to the deposition, copies of the poll books in these precincts. These exhibits thus attached to those depositions were not visible to the contestee or his counsel, or the contestant or his counsel, I think, until they appeared in print. Then, a key having been found, with the use of that key it was made plain and visible to whoever would read that 600 of the ballots cast in that ward, 200 in each precinct, were conclusively fraudulent and would be shown to be fraudulent by the exhibit of these poll books.

They were in alphabetical order. Mr. Speaker, the first man who comes to a precinct to cast his ballot in the morning has the figure 1, or should have it, marked upon the back of his ballot, and against his name upon the poll book together with his number upon the registration list. The second voter is marked 2, and so on in regular numerical order throughout the voting of the day. Now, when you take up these poll books you do not find 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and so on, following each other; but when you have gotten the key to the cipher you find that number 1 is here and that his name commences with the letter "A"; when you come to number 2, in another part of the poll book, his name commences with the letter "A." You may come back here, upon the same part of this first page and find 3, and his name commences with the letter "A"; and so on with B, C, D, and the other letters in the alphabet; but you have first to find 1 on one page and then go somewhere else and find 2 and then find 3 before you get the solution of that key, and that key discloses the manner in which it was done.

It is also shown that prior to this election, when no Congressional election was contemplated, but away back in the months of August and September, 1893, planning to perpetrate frauds in a municipal election in the following spring, a large number of fictitious names were placed upon the registration lists. Copies of these names were preserved by these conspirators having them upon their registration lists, and these alphabetical votes nearly all correspond with the fictitious names that were then put upon the registration lists. So it is demonstrated beyond any question that about 200 ballots in each of these precincts were absolutely fraudulent and fictitious. The only thing that is not disclosed concerning them is for whom they were counted as having been cast in the election for Congress; that is, with reference to this 600, or any of them.

Now, in addition to that known testimony, known of all men to that extent, at least, as to these 600, there is other additional testimony. Since this case was argued before this committee, since the report was made by this committee, on the 8th day of the present month, one Wallace G. Miller, whose ex parte affidavit was read from that desk yesterday, has made a confession that that affidavit was ex parte, but on the 22d day of this month, which was last Saturday, this man Wallace G. Miller was a witness in a criminal trial in which the frauds perpetrated at this election was the issue. First, I may say that some time ago he was convicted for participating in these frauds. Though the prosecuting officers had been most efficient, though case after case had been tried, though judges and lawyers sifted hundreds of witnesses, it was not developed—the machinery, the character, or the extent of these frauds—was not developed until since these reports were made in this case.

Now, this man Miller, on the 22d of this month, only last Saturday, was placed upon the witness stand after he had been convicted. He had been convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. After sentence he made disclosures to the prosecuting officer, and the judge of the criminal court set aside his sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary, so as to make him a legal and competent witness; and on last Saturday he went before a jury where they are trying the chief, as they denominate him, of this conspiracy, one John May; and this Miller went upon the stand there and testified as to the full details of these matters. I hold in my hand the Kansas City Journal, that bears the name of the contestant, or at least the contestant is known as its chief editor. That paper contains a synopsis of Miller's testimony of that day. He says that he was a judge in the sixth precinct in the Second Ward; that they put into the ballot box—they prepared the night before the election and put into the ballot box on the morning of the election—200 ballots, fraudulent ballots; that they put them in and they numbered them from 1 to 200. He says that during the day they put in some thirty-five or forty more illegal ballots; voted for men whom they knew were absent. He said the balance of the ballots counted and returned were legally cast by legal voters. If we believe him—and certainly he has said enough that we shall hear him, whether we believe him or not—he segregates the illegal from the legal votes in that precinct and enables this House to determine what was legal and what was not.

Again, in this same trial, another man, named Cryder, who was a judge in the seventh precinct, gives the same character of testimony. He gives the same detailed testimony in the trial court. He says the same process was resorted to in that seventh precinct; that they put in 200 ballots before a legal ballot had been cast, and that there in that precinct they put in from thirty to forty others during the day, and that the whole crime was comprised in that and that alone.

Now, let us see if we can segregate. Last night at midnight I received this telegram:

KANSAS CITY, February 25, 1896.

Hon. J. C. TARSNEY, Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Tuck and Paddock, fifth precinct judges, Second Ward, turned State's evidence and testified in the May case at Lexington to-day. Evening papers say that both swore that 200 fraudulent votes had been prepared by them the night before in Kruger's drug store, 100 for Van Horn and same number for you, and were put in the box; that 200 more such ballots were prepared and voted during the day while no voters were in the booths; that such votes were divided equally between you and Colonel Van Horn; that May came in and asked how they divided the votes, they replied that they gave one to Van Horn and one to Tarsney. May replied, "That's right, give them half and half"; that 400 such votes were cast in this precinct; that they fixed the 200 the night before, while Miller and three others were stuffing the sixth and seventh precinct boxes the same way. According to the papers' account of the evidence to-day, the fraudulent votes were divided equally. From the evidence and from the marking we feel certain that the fraudulent votes can be easily separated from the true. It appears from the trend of the evidence to-day that the whole history of the Second Ward will be developed within the next few days. Paddock and Tuck are now Kruger's drug clerks. Miller was his law clerk.

YEAGER & STROTHER, Attorneys.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman state who signed that dispatch?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yeager & Strother.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. They are your attorneys?

Mr. TARSNEY. They are my attorneys; but if there is any doubt as to the authenticity of this dispatch, the paper which contains this information will be here in to-morrow's mail before this case is disposed of. Nobody will question the veracity of the gentleman, because Mr. Yeager, while he is my attorney, is and has been for years president of the public school board of Kansas City, elected by the nonpartisan vote of that great city.

Now, I do not put this telegram in as evidence of the facts which it recites. One statement in it I do not believe is correct. I put in this telegram not for the purpose of establishing the facts it alleges, but to show this House that the truth is being developed and made available for the consideration of the House day by day, as that conspiracy, under the power of the courts, is being unwound. I want to do justice to the contestant by saying, as to one of the statements in this telegram, that I do not believe it is absolutely true that there were 400 fraudulent ballots put into that box and equally divided between the candidates for Congress, but the statement is significant of the fact, which must appear and will appear all through this record and everywhere else, that there was no disposition upon the part of the men who committed these crimes to commit them in the interest of the contestee. I was not a factor in the matter. You will ask, who was it done for and in whose interest? I answer you from this record, I answer you from the facts that have been developed. It was done in the interest of some local candidates on both tickets. It was done in the interest of candidates for justice of the peace, for constable, for county marshal, and for prosecuting attorney. That is what the record develops. And it was done by men of both parties. They were nonpartisan in crime. The Congressional district was not considered doubtful. The justice district and the district in which these local officers were candidates was considered doubtful. Therefore this work was done that they might be elected. Party tickets had to be used, and men like myself and the contestant had some of these fraudulent ballots cast for them, not with the intent of benefiting them, but because it was necessary to use our ballots in order to carry out the result aimed at by the conspirators. The office of justice of the peace is of more importance to the men who did that fraudulent work than that of governor of a State or that of Representative in this Chamber. It is more valuable in its salary and in its emoluments. So were any of these other offices. There is not one of them that is not more valuable in salary and emoluments than the position of a Representative here is. Therefore it was for that purpose that this work was done, and it was done by conspirators within the ranks of both parties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question is, can you, from the evidence I have shown you to be now available and that is not in the present record—can you arrive approximately at the true result in those precincts? If so, under this law it is your duty to do it. It is your duty to do it, because to do otherwise would be to establish a principle injurious indeed. It would be to establish the principle sought to be established by the report of the majority of this committee, a principle which would open the gates to the destruction of popular suffrage. Let me show you the dangerous extent to which that principle might be practically carried. Say, sir, that your district is composed of 100 precincts. In 97 of those precincts the balance between the two parties is about equal, so that it can be determined approximately before an election that you and your competitor in those 97 precincts will not differ more than 100 or 200 votes in the result. But in the other 3 precincts there is a legitimate majority for your party of, say, a thousand or more.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, by unanimous consent, Mr. TARSNEY's time was extended indefinitely.

Mr. TARSNEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if fraud or misconduct of election officers can be shown in those precincts, and then if the law and the practice be that, fraud or misconduct being shown, you shall throw out all of the ballots cast in those precincts, all that your competitor would have to do would be to have some election officials in those precincts commit some act of misconduct, cast some fradulent ballots, no matter whether for you or for himself, the result would be the same—all that would be required would be that fraud should be shown, whereupon out would go your thousand or more majority in those precincts, and not only would the legal voters of those particular precincts be disfranchised and deprived of their choice of representation in this Chamber, but all the legal voters who cast their ballots for you in the other 97 precincts would likewise be disfranchised and deprived of their right to representation here.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, this is a dangerous principle that you would invoke and establish as a rule to determine who shall represent constituencies in this Chamber. It offers inducement and reward to criminals to perpetrate the crimes that we are here to-day condemning. I anticipate that you will pause, and pause long, before you subscribe to that dangerous principle, when there is no necessity for you to give it countenance, when we say to you, "It is your duty under the law, if you can, to segregate the illegal from the legal votes," and say to you further, "Here is the evidence that is necessary and available for that segregation, to save the rights of honest voters who honestly cast their ballots in those precincts." We say to you now, "Here is the evidence that clears up all this doubt and uncertainty," and when we say that, is the American House of Representatives going to write it in the history of this Government that, with this knowledge before them, they shut the doors and said: "It is not truth we want; we prefer to deal with this question, a question involving the rights of representation of 210,000 of our fellow citizens, we prefer to determine it by the doubts and the presumptions and the uncertainties that crowd the record in this case, a record which is not half made up."

I was a candidate for Congress in this same district in 1888. I was a candidate in that district in 1890. At the election in those three precincts when there was no pretense of fraud, when there was no pretense of misconduct, when there was no suspicion that tainted the election, when there was no cloud cast on the electors of those precincts, on that day of election in 1890 I received a majority of 242 votes in that ward.

I was a candidate for Congress in that district in 1892. Then again, under like circumstances, with nothing to induce a full outpouring of the voters, with nothing to stir up excitement or to call out the voters at that election, I received in that ward a majority of 331 votes. A purging of those ballots to-day will show in those three precincts a larger majority of ballots, cast by honest citizens, honestly cast, than I received upon either of the two occasions I have mentioned. Yet the contestant in this case comes to the walls of that ward, comes to the walls of those three precincts, with a plurality in his favor of less than 200—less than 200 plurality in the district—and facing a majority in that ward never when honestly cast and honestly counted falling short of something more than that plurality of his.

You are determining the right of representation in this Congress of 210,000 of your fellow-citizens. This is not a question of personal right; it is not a question of the right of the contestant or the contestee. This is not private interest that you are litigating. It is the right of constituencies. It rises above the mere personal right of the contestant or the contestee. So far as I am personally concerned, it little matters to me whether I hold a seat in this Congress or not; but it does matter something to me, fellow-Representatives, whether after seven years of at least endeavor for faithful service in this Chamber—whether if I go out of this House to-day, the majority report shall be recorded in the records of this body as the action of this House, when that majority report—although the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STRODE], like the gentleman he is, yesterday almost commenced his speech by exonerating me from the suspicion of participation in these frauds—the majority report does not; and it does matter to me if ten years hence or twenty years hence when the lawyers of this body are examining other election cases, and will read that majority report, they should be unable to determine from it whether the contestee in this case was not the criminal instigator, the prime mover, of the band of conspirators whose record is blackly written in that report. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] so much of my time as he may desire, reserving the portion which he may not use.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a Representative from Missouri, I am and ought to be deeply interested in the correct determination of this contest. I have not awaited the action and report of your committee, but I procured a copy of this record and have examined it with all the care and attention that time and opportunity would permit. I have been aided therein by the briefs of the contestant and the printed argument of the contestee. Colonel Van Horn approached me on the floor of this House and asked me, as a Missourian, who by reason of my more than quarter of a century of practice in her courts and a term of years upon her bench ought to be somewhat familiar with her laws, to speak in his behalf. I said to him, "Colonel Van Horn, I want the record in this case, and I shall not vote to unseat John Tarsney unless after a full and fair examination I am convinced that he ought to go." I talked with my friend Mr. Tarsney, and I asked him for his brief and arguments, and I said to him (speaking familiarly), "John, I shall not vote to turn you out unless after a full, free, and honest examination of this record I shall feel fully justified in so doing."

Mr. Speaker, I do not bring to the consideration of this question any personal feeling for or against either of these parties. My relations with the genial gentleman who now occupies the seat have been far more intimate, far more companionable than have ever been my associations with the gentleman who is contesting the seat. I shall not be influenced by any partisan feeling. No Republican can justify from a political standpoint a single addition to the already overwhelming majority on this side of this Chamber. But above and beyond that, I hope, I believe, I know, Mr. Speaker, that I am one of those who hold that the people of the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri have alone the right to say whether their Representative on this floor shall be a Republican, a Democrat, or a Populist, and when they have declared their wish, neither you nor I have any right to challenge their selection from either personal or party reasons. The record in this case discloses, and the parties admit, that stupendous frauds were perpetrated in the Fifth Congressional district of Missouri at the election in 1894; and right here I say to this House that I for one absolve my friend, the sitting member, from any participation in anything that was done illegally at that election in the Fifth Congressional district.

Mr. Speaker, we are met at the outset with an apparent conflict upon the case between the majority of the committee and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], to whom I listened with much interest yesterday. I agree with him upon his proposition of law; and I congratulate him upon the clear, concise, and logical argument that he made. Upon the abstract proposition of law, I agree with him; but, Mr. Speaker, the contention between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] and the majority is merely one of abstraction. The members of this House are not here simply to open a law school to determine abstract questions of law; they are here to apply the principles of law to concrete questions of fact, and I say to my friend that I think I can convince even him that the position on which he bases his argument is a mere matter of abstraction, because, Mr. Speaker, admitting everything that my Democratic friends contend for, admitting that this committee could go out to Kansas City and open those ballot boxes, I stand here to say that such a proceeding could not possibly change the result. Why? I want the House to distinctly understand this question. Outside of the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward alleged frauds are charged to have occurred in Elmwood precinct, just without the limits of Kansas City, and in the fifty-second precinct in said city, concerning which the rule invoked by the gentleman from Ohio could not apply.

Certain frauds are charged in the Elmwood precinct. It is alleged that from 142 to 170 votes were polled for Mr. Tarsney at Elmwood by men who were not legal voters in that precinct, because they were not residents thereof. That can not be determined by an investigation of the ballot boxes. The question whether they were residents of that precinct or not is a question of fact which is to be determined by the parol testimony contained in the record in this case. Again, in the fifty-second precinct it is charged that 170 Republican ballots were bodily taken out of the box after they had been cast, and that 170 Democratic ballots were substituted therefor. That issue can not be determined by the application of the rule invoked by the gentleman from Ohio, because you would have to not only open the ballot boxes, but subpœna every person who voted at that precinct, put him on the stand, and take his testimony as to how he did vote. Consequently I say that if the alleged fraud at Elmwood and the alleged fraud in the fifty-second precinct be proved, if you believe the testimony offered by the contestant concerning those precincts, then, granting that the ballot boxes if opened in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts will show all that is claimed by the contestee, still Colonel Van Horn will have been elected by a substantial majority.

However, if you do not find that the frauds alleged in the Elmwood precinct and the fifty-second precinct were committed, then the purging of the ballot boxes of the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts may become essential. Now, I hope the gentlemen on the floor understand the question at issue—the concrete question involved.

There is another reason, however, outside of the one already presented, why it would do no good to adopt the course proposed by the gentleman from Ohio and the minority of the committee, and that is a legal one; and I admit, Mr. Speaker, that it is only a matter of first impression. The lawyers upon this floor will understand what I mean by that term. I am of opinion that you could not get into those ballot boxes. Why do I say that? Because of our peculiar constitution, and because of the construction the supreme court of the State of Missouri has placed thereon. I call your attention to it now, and I have asked good lawyers on the other side of the House to give their attention to it also, and I would be pleased to hear from them concerning it. There is a constitutional provision which may stand in the way, and to which I desire now to refer. The eighth article of the constitution of the State of Missouri, in its third clause, provides as follows:

All elections by the people shall be by ballot. Every ballot voted shall be numbered in the order in which it shall be received and the number recorded by the election officers in the list of voters opposite to the name of the voter who presents the ballot. The election officers shall be sworn or affirmed not to disclose how any voter shall have voted unless required to do so as a witness in a judicial proceeding: Provided, That in all cases of contested elections the ballots may be counted, compared with the list of voters, and examined under such safeguards and regulations as may be prescribed by law.

In the very same article another section of the Constitution provides when, where, and how contests shall be had in election cases:

The trial and determination of contested elections of all public officers, whether State, judicial, municipal, or local, except the governor and lieutenant-governor, shall be by the courts of law or by one or more of the judges therein. The general assembly shall, by general law, designate the court or judge by whom the several classes of election contests shall be tried, and regulate the manner of trial and all matters incident thereto.

In other words, it provides that the ballots shall be only examined in a judicial contest, and the Constitution, as I have shown, provides expressly how, where, and when these judicial contests shall be held.

There is a little history in connection with this subject that I may as well relate at this point. In 1884 there was a contest in the city of St. Louis. There had been some ballot-box stuffing and some repeating, and the records of the Federal court show that 30 of the "heelers" and ballot-box stuffers of the city of St. Louis were convicted by the Federal court for frauds committed at the election.

At the city election the Hon. David R. Francis was elected mayor of the city of St. Louis upon the face of the returns. Mr. Ewing brought a suit in the courts to contest that election, and asked that the ballot boxes be opened. The supreme court dismissed the case, because it found that the legislature had neglected to confer upon any court the jurisdiction to try and determine a case of contest for a municipal office. In other words, it was simply an omission of the legislature to provide a law covering contests of that kind. Thereupon Mr. Ewing sued out a writ of quo warranto, and asked that the court order the ballot boxes to be opened and the ballots counted; and I hold here the decision of our supreme court, which I will not undertake to read, but which says that in a proceeding of that kind the ballots can not be counted, and that the word "contest," as used in the constitution, means a statutory contest.

That is not all. When they indicted the numerous conspirators at Kansas City for frauds perpetrated at the election of 1894, the grand jury sent a subpœna duces tecum to the recorder of voters, commanding him to bring the ballots before the grand jury that they might examine them. That recorder, to whom the subpœna was directed, was a Mr. Arnold, a most honorable, upright, and excellent gentleman. He took that subpœna to his attorney. His attorney advised him that under the constitution and the rulings of the supreme court he could not obey the subpœna except in violation of his oath of office and the provisions of the constitution. Thereupon they put him under arrest. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and the supreme court discharged him, holding that under the constitution even a grand jury can not go into the ballot boxes and examine the ballots therein contained.

"But," say some gentlemen to me, "Judge BURTON, do you hold that this House, which, under the Constitution and the law has the right to determine the election, the returns, and the qualifications of its own members, can not go into these boxes? Is not this General Government paramount to the State?" To the latter question I say yes, but Congress never has attempted, and I hope never will attempt, to override the constitution of a State unless the constitution of the State is in violation of the Federal Constitution. I therefore suggest to my Democratic friends, "What method have you of entering these ballot boxes? How can you examine them?" You may have a law. I am not familiar with that branch of the subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has considered this question: Whether it is permissible for the constitution of a State to prescribe the manner of the election of Representatives in Congress, the Constitution of the United States saying that the time, manner, and place shall be prescribed by the legislature of the State?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I have considered that question, and I answer no. I do not claim that the State has any such right, but I say that in the absence of a Federal law when you go into a State you have to pursue the machinery of the State. That is what I mean. I present it to the constitutional lawyers upon the other side. I do not say that I am right. I said that as a matter of first impression; I think I am right.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Suppose that under the constitution of Missouri it had been expressly provided that under no circumstances should Congress be permitted to recount the ballots in a Congressional contest. Do you think that would be good?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly not. I do not contend for anything of the kind. I am only saying this, that unless Congress exercised its power and prerogative, and made some enactment under and by virtue of which you can go into the ballot box, where is your power? I submit it to you, gentlemen, as a matter of first impression. I may be wrong, and I do not want to assert anything here that I do not know to be true. I submit it for whatever you may consider it to be worth.

Second, if you go out there and open the ballot boxes, what are you going to find? My friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] made this illustration: He said, "You will find in that box the ballot of John Smith. John Smith is one of the men whose names were marked as having voted who did not vote. You have his name on the list; now examine his ballot." Very well, I concede that; but suppose, Mr. Speaker, that after this trouble arose—and there was ample time, knowing what was coming, as those gentlemen did know, not here, but in the courts of the land—they had scratched the name of John Tarsney off that fraudulent ballot purporting to have been voted by John Smith and had written the name of Colonel Van Horn in its place, and then had gone down the list until they came to the name of Frank Jones, who was a legal voter and who voted for Van Horn, and had scratched Van Horn's name off and written Tarsney's name thereon in order to even up, would the opening of the ballot box discover that? No. You would have to go over every vote in that box and subpœna Frank Jones and every other purported voter to show that his vote had been altered.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask whether that could not be done—whether you could not so investigate it?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Certainly it might be done, but it would take almost until the day of judgment to do it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. It would not be necessary to write the name of Mr. Tarsney on the ballot. All that it would be necessary to do would be to take a piece of india rubber and rub off the scratch over the Republican ticket.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No, my friend; you are wrong. You do not know the law of the Missouri ballot or you would not make that statement.

The Missouri ballot is the easiest ballot scratched in the world, if you want to commit a fraud of that kind. I will tell you how. We vote what we call a "blanket ballot." It is larger than this page of a newspaper. The name of every candidate is printed upon the ballot. They are put in what the law calls "groups," but what we will call columns. In the first column is the Democratic ticket; in the second is the Republican; in the third is the Populist; in the fourth is the Prohibition; in the fifth is the Socialist, or any other ticket that has been nominated.

One of the judges hands one of these ballots to the voter. He must do his voting on one of these columns. To illustrate, suppose I am a Democrat. I go into the booth, and what is the first thing I do? I scratch off the Socialist ticket, then the Prohibitionist ticket, then the Populist ticket, then the Republican ticket, and then I have nothing but the Democratic ticket left. Now, suppose that, being a Democrat, I want to vote for Colonel Van Horn. I have to go down to John Tarsney's name and scratch his out and write Colonel Van Horn's in, notwithstanding the fact that Van Horn's name is printed in the Republican ticket in the next column. If I simply scratch Tarsney's name off the Democratic ticket and permit Van Horn's name to remain unscratched in the Republican column it does not count. Now, you will see how easy it would be to take the ticket that had been voted by Frank Jones and run a pencil through Van Horn's name and write under it "Tarsney." As you have to write in order to vote a scratched ticket, there is no ground for suspicion because of the writing. Every man who attempts to vote an independent ticket has to scratch out one name and write in the name of another.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me at this point to interrupt him for a matter of information? Let me first ask who furnishes these tickets?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The clerk of the county in the outside counties, and the recorder of voters in the city of Kansas City.

Mr. BRUMM. Are these tickets furnished with a stub? Is there a stub attached to them by which you can keep a record of what becomes of the tickets?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No, sir; they are not so furnished.

Mr. BRUMM. Not with a stub attached?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. Then it is not the Australian system.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, we call it the Australian system; "but a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. And something else that was bad would smell as bad under any other name.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes; under some other name it would smell as bad.

Mr. BRUMM. But the point I wanted to ascertain was as to whether under your system you facilitate or permit the spurious ballot to be deposited, or, in other words, whether you have anything in the system by which you can keep a record of the ballots furnished to voters. That is the better way to put it.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No; not in the way you suggest.

Mr. BRUMM. Do you in any way?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes. If every judge or clerk of election is honest, and if the custodians into whose hands the ballot boxes have been returned are honest, then they are a check upon themselves.

Mr. BRUMM. But if they are dishonest, then what?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. If they are dishonest, I regret to say it, they can rob almost any man of his election; I mean if the whole gang who have control are dishonest. Take this very case. After the votes had been counted; after they had gone into the hands of the recorder of voters; after the judges had promulgated the votes, which showed that the Republican candidate for county attorney and the Republican candidate for marshal had been elected by a small majority, somebody in the office of the recorder of voters changed the tally sheets so that the canvassers of returns found and declared that the Democratic candidate for county attorney and the Democratic candidate for marshal in Kansas City had been elected.

Mr. BRUMM. But the point——

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I will answer your question, but in doing so I will give you a little history. On the refusal of their certificates the county attorney and marshal-elect brought suit in the courts. Upon exhibition of the tally sheets, by holding them up to the light, you could see that they had been altered and changed. Thereupon the Democratic candidate for county attorney went into open court and confessed judgment of ouster.

Mr. BRUMM. But that does not seem to answer the point I want to get at. It seems that in this case, or in a number of cases, it appears a number of fraudulent ballots were ground through by the action of the election board.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BRUMM. What I want to get is: Where did they get these ballots; where could they get them if you had the Australian system?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Why, under the law of the State of Missouri the county officers furnish the judges, on the morning of the election, with the ballots. There are six judges; two of them are distributing judges, two receiving, and two counting judges. In other words, the clerk of the county court, or in the city of Kansas City the recorder of voters, furnishes the proper number of ballots proportionate to the whole number of voters of the precinct. They are given out by the distributing judges to the voters.

Mr. BRUMM. As he comes to vote?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes; and the voter goes into a booth by himself and fixes his ticket. The law makes it his duty to bring it back if he mutilates it, and he then surrenders it and takes another and fixes it. That is our law. But you can very readily understand how, if the judges are willing, a man can put one or two or more of those ballots into his pocket and go out.

Mr. BRUMM. But where can you get the alphabetical ballots that you speak of, from 1 to 200, unless possibly they are forged papers; and if so, then would it not be the easiest thing in the world to show their forgery by an examination of the ballots themselves? That is the point I want to get at.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Exactly; and when I come to that branch of the case I will explain it, but in the meantime let me say that in the country we do not have any regular registration. In cities of 100,000 or more every voter's name is put on the registration book, the poll book, in alphabetical order. To the left of his name are two columns. The first column shows his registration number. To illustrate: Suppose John Adams is the first man on the list alphabetically, his name will appear at the top of the poll book and immediately to the left will be a column giving his registration number, which may be, for example, 1907. When the voter comes to vote, in the next column to the left is put the number indicating the order in which he has voted; so that by running down the second column you can always tell the order in which the voters have voted. Now, it appears that in each of the three precincts in question 200 men voted in the regular alphabetical order in which their names appeared upon the poll books—which we all concede is an impossibility.

Mr. BRUMM. But still you do not answer my question. Where did they get the ballots from that they voted?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Why, nobody voted them. The judges themselves put them into the ballot boxes in the morning.

Mr. BRUMM. But where did the judges get them?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I have told you that the recorder of voters gave them to the judges. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. If the officer gave them to the judges, then they must have been forged ballots.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Not necessarily. Here, for instance, on election morning there was handed to the election officers in every precinct in Kansas City a poll book containing every name on the registration list, in alphabetical order.

Mr. BRUMM. Do you mean to say that the judges tore out those tickets and gave them to those voters?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No, sir; they did not tear them out of anything. For instance here——

Mr. BRUMM. One moment, if you please. If they did not tear them out, are not the judges charged with the number of ballots that are placed in their hands?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Only as I have stated. For instance, if there are 500 voters in a ward they give them 2,000 ballots.

Mr. BRUMM. The number is immaterial. They are charged with what ballots they get?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes; they are charged, in your mind.

Mr. BRUMM. But are they not charged as a matter of record?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I never heard of their being.

Mr. BRUMM. Then you do not know, and therefore you can not answer my question.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, I do know.

Mr. BRUMM. Then why do you not answer?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I can answer the gentleman's question, but I admit that I can not convince him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. Then answer. Whether you convince me or not is immaterial.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I will try to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BRUMM. There are others here that want to be convinced.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I want to be perfectly fair, and I am here to give the House all the information I can on the subject. Now, it is the duty of the officers to have on hand so many ballots, and they give a certain number to the judges in each precinct on the morning of election. They hand them as many as may be called for, and the balance that are not used are burned up, because they are of no value when the polls are closed.

Mr. BRUMM. Then the officers are not supposed to make a return of the balance of the ballots in their hands?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I never heard of their being required to do that.

Mr. BRUMM. Then the whole affair is an absolute nonentity, a fraud. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I understand the point which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has in mind and I think I can enlighten the House upon it in due time.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I can not understand why those officers do not make a return of the ballots that are not used.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The ballots that are not used do not cut any figure. It is the ballots that are used that cut the figure. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. In our State, and in all well-regulated States, they do make a return of the ballots that are not used.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, then ours is not a well-regulated State. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Before my colleague resumes, allow me to ask a question to explain the matter which has been inquired about by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM]. Is it not true that for every 50 voters at our elections 200 ballots are strung?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And one-half of those are put in the hands of the judges of election—the election board—before the election commences?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And the other half in the hands of a constable to be supplied in case of need?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The gentleman correctly states the law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So that there is an abundance of ballots which might be used and which have not to be counted for either party.

Mr. BRUMM. That is an explanation; I am glad it has been made.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. If I had known that was what my friend from Pennsylvania wanted, I could have given it to him long ago. [Laughter.]

Now, in the first place, as a matter of impression, I doubt whether you can go into the ballot boxes if you go out there; second, I question whether, if you go into the boxes, you will find those ballots in the condition in which they were. My friend says it would take a sleight-of-hand performance to have altered them which would surpass that of Herrmann. Why, my dear sir, some of those fellows up there can, to use a common expression, give Herrmann cards and spades and beat him in that game. [Laughter.]

Now, the third proposition I make is this: Conceding that if you should send the committee out there and they should find every possible vote that Mr. Tarsney or the minority of the committee claim was fraudulent cast or counted for Van Horn, was so cast or counted, still Colonel Van Horn is elected by a substantial majority.

In the first place, the Fifth Congressional district is composed of two counties—Lafayette and Jackson. There is no fraud charged in Lafayette; there is no fraud charged in relation to Jackson County, outside of Kansas City, except in one precinct, Elmwood precinct, which at one time was in Kansas City, but is now outside the city limits.

At this point I want to make a statement (because I do not think my friend Tarsney in his printed argument is exactly fair), and it is upon this idea, that the tide of political revolution which flowed all over the country was seen and felt in the Fifth Congressional district. My friend in his printed argument says, if I remember rightly, that Van Horn received only 162 more votes outside of Kansas City than the Republican candidate for Congress received in the same territory in 1892. Here are the facts, and I have the record before me and the certificate of the secretary of state: In the county of Lafayette Mr. Tarsney received 1,032 less votes than he did in 1892. Colonel Van Horn received 162 more votes than did the Republican candidate for Congress in 1892. In the county of Jackson, outside of Kansas City, Mr. Tarsney received 1,176 less votes, while Colonel Van Horn received 331 more votes. Mr. Tarsney received 2,208 less votes in Lafayette and Jackson counties, outside of Kansas City, in 1894 than he did in 1892, and Colonel Van Horn received therein 493 more than the Republican candidate for Congress did in 1892, making a difference of 2,701. These figures are taken from the returns of the secretary of state published in this record.

Now, I merely introduce this for the purpose of showing to this body that the political revolution which was felt everywhere else was felt up there. And I ask any of you gentlemen to say why it should stop when it reached the barrier of Kansas City, and why the opposite should have proved to be true only when you come into the very wards in which Republican challengers and Republican witnesses were ejected from the polls and into which judges and clerks were colonized from outside precincts.

The first precinct to which I desire to call attention is Elmwood precinct, lying just outside the limits of Kansas City, about four blocks away. I want to call your attention to this point particularly, because it must be determined by parol testimony. There were some suspicious circumstances connected with this precinct before the day of the election. What were they? Under the Missouri law each of the two leading political parties is entitled to three of the judges and two of the clerks at each precinct. That is the law. The usual rule is for the chairmen of the committees of the respective parties to make their selections and hand them in to the appointing power, and these nominees are usually appointed, as they ought to be. Somebody has to look after this, and who should that somebody be unless it is the committee in charge of the political party? I find that my friend from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] in his minority report censures the recorder of voters for not appointing gentlemen whom the Republican committee presented to him for appointment. This precinct, however, was in the county of Jackson, but outside the city.

It was the duty of the county court of Jackson County to appoint the judges and clerks of election for this precinct. What was the first suspicious thing? When the Republican committeeman from Elmwood precinct went to the county court of Jackson County and presented the names of the Republicans whom the committee wished appointed as judges and as clerks the county court refused to appoint them. Why? The evidence shows that they were old residents of that precinct, that they were property holders, that they were upright men. But the county court refused to appoint them. Whom did it appoint? Men whom the Republican committee did not recommend; men that the committee did not indorse and whom they did not want; men whom you and I under this testimony presented here in the report have the right to believe were appointed as Republicans but who were Republicans in name only.

What was the second suspicious circumstance? The polling place was changed from the customary location and placed right adjacent to a disreputable saloon run by a Democratic boss. The Republican committee, so the record shows, went to the county court and complained, saying that the polling place ought to be established in the customary place. The court said the sheriff had charge of the matter. The committee went to the sheriff, but the sheriff refused to make the change. The sheriff was himself a candidate for reelection on the Democratic ticket at that election.

What occurred on the day of the election? In the first place the windows were soaped, just as they were in the fifty-second precinct, and my friend Mr. Tarsney says the object was to protect the voter, who, under our system, has a right to be screened from the observation of those outside—from the gaze of the world—while preparing his ticket. Booths are prepared for that purpose, and the testimony clearly shows that the object in soaping the windows was to shut out from view the misconduct of the judges and clerks.

The law expressly and distinctly allows each political party to have a witness to watch the judges, to examine the count, to see that the judges count off the ballots read, and that the clerks duly make a record of the votes. In this particular precinct the windows were soaped so that nobody could see what took place inside. The second thing they did was to turn out the challenger and the witness on the part of the Republicans, so that there was nobody to challenge the illegal voter and no witness to see that the vote cast was counted.

Third, the testimony discloses the fact that the judges and the clerks in the Elmwood precinct who were appointed as Republican judges and clerks became maudlin drunk during the day and were not in a condition to attend to their duties, had they desired so to do.

Fourth, it appears from the testimony that blocks of men came from the direction of Kansas City—in squads of twelve or fifteen—to this polling place.

They went directly into the disreputable saloon in the neighborhood of the polling place, then they came out and went into the polling booth, and when the Republican challenger attempted to challenge their right to vote there he was ejected and was informed that he must stay away; that he had no business in there. These men, the blocks of voters of whom I speak, went into the booth and it is to be presumed that they voted, and I will give reason for that presumption further on. Then they went off in the direction of Kensington precinct, three-quarters of a mile distant, and did the same thing. It was known that the same proceeding was there gone through with because men followed them from the Elmwood precinct to the Kensington precinct and gave information to the challenger and the officials of the election at Kensington, but the challenger there was not permitted to go into the room and challenge the men who had voted at Elmwood, and when he undertook to challenge them he was arrested and taken down town, as shown by the evidence in this record.

Now, for the purpose of showing a comparison between the votes cast in this precinct in 1892 and 1894, I call your attention briefly to a table that I have prepared. I do not claim that this method is absolutely correct, because some men who voted there in 1892 may have died or moved away, some may have come in since 1892, and it is possible that some of those who voted in 1894 went away since that election was held. But it is tentatively correct; it is at least advisory, and gives some details which are of interest in considering the pending question raised on the vote at that precinct.

In 1892 Mr. Tarsney received in that precinct 202 votes; in 1894 338 votes, or an increase of 136.

In 1894 Mr. Van Horn had 229, and in 1892 the Republican candidate for Congress had 198, a gain of 29 votes for Mr. Van Horn over the election of 1892. The total vote polled was 581 in 1894, and 410 in 1892, a gain of 171. In two years, therefore, in a precinct where the testimony shows that there was no increase of population there was an increase of 171 in the number of the voters. But that is not all. Immediately after the election when the committee on safety, composed of Republicans and Democrats, went into the investigation of the matter of fraudulent votes in Kansas City and vicinity, they polled this precinct; and what did they find? Bear in mind that there were 581 votes polled in this election. The canvassers went from house to house, and after an investigation found but 438 voters in the precinct, 143 less than appeared as voting on the poll books, not to take into consideration men who were there and did not vote at all. But even that is not all. They found that of the 438 voters there were 233 Republicans. How many did Van Horn get? Two hundred and twenty-seven, or 6 less than the Republican voters in that precinct on the day of the election.

How many Democrats? One hundred and sixty-eight, and 30 men who would not say how they voted, whether Democratic or Republican. Add your 30 who refused to say to the 168 who said they were Democrats, and you have, all told, 198 votes, and yet Mr. Tarsney received 338 votes in this precinct. Where did he get them?

Mr. Speaker, still further, on this evidence: These same witnesses——

Mr. RANEY. Are all those facts to which you refer set forth in the evidence, in the record in this case?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. These facts are all in evidence in this record. I take the figures from the certificate of the secretary of state. I do not give a single figure that is not found in that record. These same witnesses who canvassed this precinct in behalf of the committee of safety found that by going to this disreputable saloon and boarding house—it was a combination—that the proprietor claimed that on election day he had 112 men boarding with him, although the capacity of his house was not sufficient to accommodate exceeding 35 men. He could not give the name of a single one. He did not keep any books and he only claimed to know them by numbers. Out of the whole 112 only six or seven could be found. That is the testimony in the record.

In defense, Mr. Tarsney introduced a witness to prove that some time before this some contractor had been building a sewer in that portion of the city, and that there had been employed at one time as many as 800 men, and my friend argues that some of those men who could not be found there shortly after the election were these particular men who worked on the sewers, and that they were legal voters. Now, I want to call your attention to a few words from the lips of that very witness. On page 938 of this record is the commencement of the testimony of this witness, Mr. Pease, put on in defense by Mr. Tarsney. He was examined and cross-examined, and among other things this is what he said:

Q. Well, how many of them voted there that day?
A. I would say, to be conservative, a hundred.
Q. How long had that Gooseneck sewer been in construction at that time?
A. Why, this was in November—it had been some time; I do not know how long. It seems to me that they had been at work on it nearly all fall and summer.
Q. Well, that sewer is completed, is it not?
A. Yes, sir; I think so.
Q. And all these men that were at work there on that sewer have left that community?
A. Oh, yes; shortly after.
Q. Is it not a fact that the men that were employed on that sewer were a class of men who moved around wherever they could get a job?
A. I should say, mostly dagos.
Q. And since they were discharged they went away?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. None of them had any homes out there, did they?
A. Not to the best of my belief.

The witness swears that not one of them had a home in that precinct, and I say that is not the kind of citizens we have in Missouri; that because a man happened for the time being to be working on a sewer, that does not constitute him a resident or a citizen by any means; and I say when you take into consideration the character of this testimony, that they were dagos, that not one of them had a home, that they were unknown, that no man could tell their names, that the saloon keeper with whom they boarded only knew them by numbers, you have a right to find that they were not legal voters, when the testimony further shows that many of them went right from Elmwood down to Kensington and voted again; at least 170 of them cast their votes, and they were counted for the contestee.

The testimony shows that 171 of the persons returned as having voted in this precinct could not be found therein ten days after this election—nearly 30 per cent.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to give my friend the credit of everything I can, and I therefore limit it to the minimum, and I say that under this evidence there is not a man in this House, if he was in the jury box as a juror, under the solemnity of an oath, listening to the testimony of these witnesses, who would not find that at least 142 of the ballots cast in Elmwood precinct were illegal ballots, and that they were cast and counted for the contestee. I therefore charge Mr. Tarsney with 142 fraudulent votes in that precinct.

We now come to Kansas City. I want to call the attention of this House in a general way to some general matters of fraud. In the first place, what did the recorder of voters do that was illegal? The testimony shows that a list of 4,300 fraudulent voters was presented to him to strike off from the registration lists. Did he do it? No. It was made his duty to submit that list of names to a board of revision. He refused to do it, and not a single, solitary one of these 4,300 fraudulent names was stricken off. Understand as to these names—some of them were names of dead men, some were the names of those who had moved away. Many of them were fictitious, registered from vacant lots, vacant tenement houses, saloons, houses of ill fame, and other disreputable places. Canvassers had been sent out who ascertained that these 4,300 names should be stricken off the registration list, and yet Mr. Owsley refused to strike off a single name or to submit that list to the board of revision.

What is the next thing he refused to do? When the Republican committee presented its list of judges and clerks to be appointed, Mr. Owsley refused to appoint them, and the minority of the committee in their report censure him for not doing it. Why did he not do it? What earthly motive could he have for not doing it?

But that is not all. He appointed, if I remember right, about sixty judges and clerks who were not named, who were not indorsed, who were not recommended by the Republican committee. The testimony shows that some of them were unknown, that canvassers went to the places where these men were said to be residing and could not find them, and the testimony shows that in several precincts every judge and clerk of the election was imported for the purpose of perpetrating frauds. They were not residents and not qualified to act. For instance, in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts of the Second Ward there was not a man who acted as a judge or clerk who lived in those precincts. Not one. In the twenty-seventh, forty-eighth, and fifty-third precincts judges were colonized, did not live there, and had no right there.

Mr. Speaker, under the law of Missouri there is a provision for a challenger at the polls and a witness to the count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I thank the House.

I say we have a law giving the right to each political party to have a challenger at the polls and a witness to the count. In Kansas City, when the Republicans made application to Mr. Owsley for the appointment of a challenger and a witness, he refused, and said that "under the peculiar law that prevailed in Kansas City witnesses were not allowed." Well, it raised a great storm, and thereupon Mr. Owsley wrote a letter to the Republican committee (it is published in here) calling attention to the fact that there was a conflict in the law, as he claimed, and that a witness could not be permitted; and he proposed to make up a case and submit it to the three circuit judges of Kansas City, and agreed to abide their decision. The Republican committee accepted his proposition in writing. The case was made up and submitted to the court, and the court decided that Mr. Owsley was wrong, and that in the city of Kansas City, as well as in every other part of Missouri, each one of the two political parties was entitled to a witness of the count. Notwithstanding that fact, the sworn testimony of his own deputy and the testimony of other witnesses show that on the night before the election he not only neglected to inform the judges and clerks of the election that each of the parties had the right to have a witness, but he told them that they, the judges and clerks of the election, were the sole judges of the law, and that they had the right to reject challengers and witnesses, both, if they so desired. Why did he do it?

Now, then, I want to call attention to the number of precincts in which they did eject the witnesses and challengers. In the third, fifth, sixth, seventh, twenty-seventh, and fifty-second precincts they ejected both the challengers and witnesses; in the first, fourth, twenty-second, twenty-sixth, twenty-eighth, forty-eighth, forty-ninth, and fifty-third they ejected the witnesses, and the wards in which the greatest frauds were committed are those in which the challengers and witnesses were both ejected.

Let us take the fifty-second precinct. Mr. Tarsney has gone over the testimony with reference to that. Mr. Canney says that 170 Republican votes that had been legally put in the box were taken out; 115 at one time and 55 at another. The 115 were taken out of the polling place in a lunch basket and the 55 stuck in the stove, and 170 Democratic ballots were substituted for Mr. Tarsney. My friend says that Mr. Canney is not corroborated. He is corroborated. And then my friend argued about the little coal house, or the little granary. The testimony shows that it was a little building in which were three grain bins, and the judges who had the counting got over into one of these bins where they could not be seen by the voters or other parties. The testimony of another man corroborates Canney. This witness saw Hanson down on his knees scratching ballots in the bottom of one of these bins, and when asked what he was doing, Hanson said he was merely marking the rejected ballots.

Mr. Speaker, when we compare the vote in that precinct with the vote of 1892, what is the result? In 1892 we find that Mr. Tarsney received 219 votes. In 1894 he received 363, a gain of 144, notwithstanding the political revolution. The Republican candidate for Congress in 1892 received 246 votes, while Colonel Van Horn received only 183, a loss of 63 votes, in a ward that was openly and notoriously Republican theretofore; and so it is that that fact to this House is advisory and one from which we have the right to say that Mr. Canney's testimony is true. But Mr. Tarsney says that Canney ought not to be believed. Why? Because he is a particeps criminis.

Well, now, I will admit that when we look at his testimony we ought to be governed by the law, that the testimony of an admitted accomplice should always be received with great caution and that it ought not to be believed unless it is corroborated directly and strongly by other testimony or by physical facts. The physical facts in this case show that they had wiped out a majority in a Republican ward and given a majority to Mr. Tarsney. This Mr. Canney went down to Jefferson City, and upon the strength of his statement the Democratic governor refused to issue commissions to the Democratic county attorney and marshal, and finally the Democratic candidate for county attorney went into open court and confessed a judgment of ouster. But Mr. Tarsney says that that man Canney has since been indicted.

That is true, Mr. Speaker. He has been indicted, but when and where and how? The other side have been reading telegrams, and I am going to read one. My friend Tarsney says that notwithstanding these men were indicted upon Canney's complaint more than sixteen months ago, they have not been tried. Whose fault is it? Go to the records in the courts of Kansas City and Independence and ascertain. Time and time again they made application for a continuance, and finally they swore against the Democratic judge upon the bench and took their cases down to Cass County, and they have been standing there, and the State has been ready to try them upon the testimony of Canney. But that is not all. I want to read this telegram received from Harrisonville, from a man who does not live in the Fifth district, but who is known throughout the length and breadth of that country as one of the best lawyers in the State, a high-minded, pure, and upright American citizen. Here is the telegram:

HARRISONVILLE, MO., February 7, 1896.

Hon. CHARLES G. BURTON,
Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

On January 16, 1896, an indictment was procured in this county against T. J. Canney, who was one of the judges of election in the fifty-second precinct in Kansas City, Mo., in the fall of 1894. This indictment was for perjury alleged to have been committed in September, 1894. Canney is one of the witnesses against Ed. Findley and others, indicted for frauds in the Ninth Ward at the election in 1894, above mentioned, etc., and whose trials are soon to take place. At the time of Canney's arrest several of Findley's intimate friends, having learned in some way that the arrest was to be made before day on Sunday morning, January 26 last, were present, and asked to be allowed to take the warrant and make the arrest, but the sheriff from this county refused the request. When arraigned in court on Monday following, Canney demanded a trial as soon as possible, but the State, not being ready, procured the case to be continued until next May. The circumstances attending the case, the interest the defendants in the election-fraud cases have manifested in having Canney indicted, the long time that had elapsed between the alleged perjury and his indictment for it, and the fact that he has been in Kansas City during all the time, together with the very flimsy and absurd basis for the charge against him, all point strongly to the conclusion generally held by the public here, and which I believe to be correct, that Canney was indicted to weaken his testimony and thereby help the defendants in the trial of the election-fraud cases.

That does not come from any attorney in this case nor from any man who is interested.

Now, gentlemen, I say that, applying the testimony in this case, it is clear that these men absolutely stole out of the box 170 Republican votes that were cast for Colonel Van Horn, and in lieu thereof put in 170 votes for Mr. Tarsney.

The gentlemen of the minority consent to let that vote go. They say you can not purge that. Exceedingly generous! Upon its face it robs Mr. Tarsney of a majority of 180, but as a matter of fact it robs Mr. Van Horn of a majority of 160.

Mr. MAGUIRE. If the gentleman will pardon me for interrupting him, the minority does not object in its report to going into that precinct and doing the best that can be done. What it says is that upon the evidence now before the House it does not appear that that precinct can be purged. Neither side has shown that it can be purged.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, I say that if you open the ballot boxes, then you must take the name of every man who voted and send out a subpœna for him, and then, if you can find him, you must bring him in and put him upon the witness stand and ask him how he voted. That is the only way you can purge that fifty-second precinct.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That may be so as to the fifty-second precinct, but as to the fifth, sixth, and seventh the case is different. We have already in the record the testimony which shows what names were fraudulently voted.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Exactly. I am coming to those. Now, I proceed to the Second Ward, and I am right glad that my friend Tarsney read the telegram from his attorney, Mr. Yeager. I know Mr. Yeager. He is the president of the public school board at Kansas City, and as honest and upright a man as lives in all the State of Missouri, and when he telegraphs here that Miller, upon the witness stand, and that Krider, upon the witness stand, have testified so and so I believe him, and I congratulate myself, because the testimony stated in that telegram verifies the examination that I made of this record two weeks ago.

Now, let us take this fifth precinct, or, rather, I will take the three precincts together. It is admitted by my friends on the other side that 200 votes in each one of those three precincts were put into the boxes before the polls were opened. There are several ways of proving this. Bradbury, a witness, testifies to it. It is corroborated by the poll books themselves. It is admitted by everybody. I want to call attention to a few facts. The total vote cast in the fifth precinct in 1892 was 351.

In 1894, at the spring election in Kansas City, the Democratic party divided into two bodies, putting up two candidates. A political fight of that kind brings the vote all out. So that in Kansas City, in the spring of 1894, there was a very full vote. Now, bear that in mind all the time. At the Congressional election in 1892, 351 votes were polled. At the spring election in 1894, 377 votes were polled; but in 1894, at the Congressional election, 621 votes were polled.

In the sixth precinct there were polled, in 1892, 155 votes; in the city election of 1894, 186; in the Congressional election of 1894, 509. In the seventh precinct there were polled, in 1892, 243 votes; at the spring election of 1894, 246 votes; and at the Congressional election of 1894, 514 votes. Total in the whole ward at the Congressional election of 1892, 749 votes; at the spring election of 1894, 809 votes (the largest vote ever polled in that ward); but in 1894 there were polled in that ward 1,644 votes.

Mr. BRUMM. You mean there were that many returned?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, I mean returned; I thank the gentleman for the correction. The increase over the Congressional election of 1892 was 895, and the increase over the spring election of 1894 was 835.

Now, it is admitted that 600 votes were put in the box before the polls were opened. The committee of safety within two weeks sent out into that ward a couple of canvassers who on making a house-to-house canvass found that many men whose names appeared upon the poll book as having voted were registered from vacant lots—some of these were within four blocks of the office of the recorder of voters; some of them even registered on the river, 40 feet out from shore. Those two canvassers reported that within two weeks after the election 1,011 persons returned as having voted in that ward could not be found in either of those precincts. Is not that rather remarkable—1,011 men returned as voting who within two weeks could not be found in those precincts? The argument is made that that is a peculiar ward. Well, it is a peculiar ward. It is such a ward that if some gentlemen should go there they would at once ask that certain places might be pointed out to them in order that they might avoid them. That is the character of the ward. There is no such population there as this return of votes would imply. There can not be. There were about 900 fraudulent votes cast in that ward.

I have been watching the trial of Mr. May; and I read the testimony of Mr. Krider and of Mr. Miller. Both of them, if I remember rightly, testify that in the sixth and seventh precincts 200 fraudulent votes were put in the box and that every one of them was put in for Mr. Tarsney; they do not charge Mr. Van Horn with a single one of them. When it comes to the fifth precinct Mr. Miller says that 101 of the 200 fraudulent votes put in, in the first instance, were for Mr. Van Horn.

It was charged upon this floor this morning that Mr. Yeager had telegraphed that Mr. Miller had testified that in the fifth precinct 400 votes were put in and that they were divided equally between the two candidates. That is a mistake upon its face. Why? Because Mr. Van Horn received only 201 votes all told in that precinct; and if they had given him 200 fraudulent votes, it would have left only 1 legal vote for him in all that precinct.

Mr. Speaker, I have made an analysis for another purpose. Let us take the seventh precinct; I want to show this body that in that precinct Colonel Van Horn could not have received a fraudulent vote. Why? In the Congressional election of 1892 Mr. Tarsney received 148 votes in that precinct; in the city election of 1894 the Democratic candidates for mayor received 119 votes. In 1894 Mr. Tarsney received in that precinct 449 votes. In the election of 1892 the Republican candidate for Congress received 94 votes. In 1894, in the spring election, Mr. Davis, Republican candidate for mayor, received 121; Mr. Van Horn received in this election only 57. Colonel Van Horn's vote was 37 less than that of the Republican candidate for Congress in 1892, and 64 less than Mr. Davis, the Republican candidate for mayor, received in the spring of 1894. The Tarsney vote in 1894 was 301 more than in 1892, and 330 more than the Democratic vote at the city election in the spring of 1894, when they had a full vote. I say, then, it is evident beyond any question that every fraudulent vote put into the ballot box in the seventh precinct was for the contestee.

Take the sixth precinct and what do you find? In 1892 Mr. Tarsney received 108 votes. In the city election of 1894 for the Democratic candidate for mayor 101 votes were cast. In 1894 Mr. Tarsney received 420 votes. In the Congressional election of 1892 the Republican candidate received 46; in the city election of 1894, 85; and Mr. Van Horn received in 1894 but 84 votes, only 39 votes more than the Republican candidate for Congress in 1892 and one less than the Republican candidate for mayor received in 1894. And yet, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Tarsney's vote in 1894 was 312 more than he received in 1892 and 319 more than the Democratic candidate for mayor received in the city election in the spring of 1894. Therefore the fraudulent votes cast in this precinct must have been counted for Mr. Tarsney.

But let us take the fifth precinct. In 1892 Mr. Tarsney received 279 votes, in the city election the Democratic mayor received 309 votes, and in the Congressional election of 1894 Mr. Tarsney received 413 votes. In 1892 the Republican candidate for Congress received 67 votes, in the spring election the Republican candidate for mayor received 66 votes, and in the 1894 election Mr. Van Horn received 201 votes.

I believe that in that fifth precinct, for some reason or other, when they came to put in the first 200 fraudulent votes they divided them equally between the two candidates for Congress. Why do I believe that? Mr. Tarsney ran 134 votes behind his ticket and Mr. Van Horn 137 votes ahead of his. There is no testimony as to why Mr. Tarsney should run behind and Mr. Van Horn ahead of their respective tickets in that precinct. Besides, it is apparent from the telegram that Mr. Tarsney read on the floor to-day that they put 200 fraudulent votes in the box before they opened the polls in the morning, and 40 more during the day, or 240 in all, and divided them equally between the two. Now, I charge Van Horn with the votes received by him at that precinct over and above that received by the Republican straight ticket, and it amounted to 137 votes.

I claim that under the testimony presented in the record it clearly appeared that Mr. Tarsney received a minimum of 142 fraudulent votes in the Elmwood precinct and 170 in the fifty-second precinct, which was stolen from Mr. Van Horn by the judges of election, and that he received the difference betweeen 134 and the entire fraudulent vote polled in the fifth, sixth, and seventh precincts. It is admitted that in these three wards 600 fraudulent votes were polled. But that is not all. I have told you that the polling officers show that 1,011 men could not be found after the election, and in addition the testimony shows that they specifically proved that 146 men whose names appeared as having voted were not there and did not vote. Add this 146 votes to the 600 and we have 746 votes. Tarsney is charged only with a minimum. I do not say that the 1,011 which could not be found were fraudulent, but give him the benefit of every doubt, charge him with the minimum of 746 votes, and take from that 746 votes 137 to which I have already referred as voting for Van Horn, and we have left 609 votes to be charged to him. Then, Mr. Speaker, we charge Mr. Tarsney with 609 fraudulent votes in the Second Ward and charge Mr. Van Horn with 137 fraudulent votes. There is no evidence to show that he got but 101, because that is all the clerks in the Kansas City office say they discovered. But give him the other 36 to make good measure, and let us see what the final result will be.

Mr. Tarsney's total vote as reported by the secretary of state was 16,538. Take the 609 fraudulent votes of the Second Ward, the 170 substituted in the fifty-second precinct, and the 142 in the Elmwood precinct, and we find a total of 921 votes, which we subtract from the total of 16,538, making his actual vote 15,617.

Again, the secretary of state reports the total vote of Mr. Van Horn as 15,793. Take from that the 137 fraudulent votes that these gentlemen think they can prove to be fraudulent if you send some commission out there to look into the ballot box; add to that the 170 votes stolen from him in the fifty-second precinct, and you have a total vote for Van Horn of 15,826 after making all corrections. The difference in favor of Colonel Van Horn over the contestee then is 209 votes.

If we give to Mr. Tarsney everything that is possible for him to get under his claim, and that is all he did claim, it is impossible to conclude otherwise than that Mr. Van Horn was elected by the number as shown—209 majority.

Mr. TAYLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. TAYLER. In the computation that you make do you not necessarily repudiate the proposition contained in the majority report that you must entirely disregard the returns from the fifty-second precinct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not object to being catechized.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I shall not object to being catechized, because I stated, Mr. Speaker—probably my friend was not here—that on yesterday I heard one of the most magnificent legal arguments that I ever listened to in my life, and if I had had any doubts before, which I did not, that argument would have convinced me. I do not believe in the proposition of law, as enunciated by the majority of the committee, as an abstract proposition. I believe that under that rule we should be compelled to throw out 340 votes that the testimony clearly shows Colonel Van Horn is entitled to in the fifty-second precinct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. In other words, the gentleman thinks the committee were too tender of Mr. Tarsney?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I do not care how you put it. I do not believe in that principle of law, because it establishes a bad precedent. I also believe in the further principle that the law does not require you to do unnecessary things. Therefore, if by sending out this committee or a subcommittee we should accomplish everything that is claimed, and the evidence contained in this record would still convince us beyond a doubt that Colonel Van Horn is elected, we ought not to resort to that unnecessary thing.

I was going to say when I was interrupted that upon this record everybody admits that Colonel Van Horn was elected; but on a Sunday not long ago there appeared in a Kansas City paper an affidavit from eight clerks in the office of the commissioner of voters, which affidavit I hold in my hand. What is it? In substance, these eight gentlemen testify that in counting the ballots in some contest they discovered that in the fifth precinct, of the 200 ballots that had been voted, or rather been put into the box and charged against the voters alphabetically, 101 of them bore the name of Colonel Van Horn, Mr. Tarsney's name having been erased. Upon the strength of that affidavit Mr. Tarsney went before the committee and asked that the committee take this testimony. Now, I want to show you that I have followed my friend Tarsney's idea all the way through, because here is what he says. I will not read that portion of his argument in which he admits there are 600 fraudulent votes.

Mr. Tarsney, in his printed argument, says:

If the 135 ballots referred to in these affidavits are essential in determining this contest, then you must know for whom they were counted before you decide this cause.

That is all there is in his original application. He claims that there were 135 votes that had been counted against him, when they ought to be counted as fraudulent, against Colonel Van Horn. I concede it. If these 135 votes are essential to the determination of this contest, then I believe with my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], and against the majority of the committee, that we ought to go out there and purge that vote, if it can be done. But if they are not essential—and I do not see how under this testimony it is possible to believe that they are—then I say it is simply a waste of time. I have endeavored to demonstrate why they are not essential, why it is unnecessary, because I say the testimony ought to satisfy any reasonable, thinking man, beyond not merely a reasonable doubt but beyond any doubt, that in the Elmwood precinct Mr. Tarsney received not less than 142 and as high possibly as 170 fraudulent votes.

We ought to be satisfied by the testimony that 170 legal votes for Colonel Van Horn were abstracted, and that 170 illegal votes were put into the box and counted for Mr. Tarsney, and that, allowing him everything that is substantiated by the evidence produced, and the evidence which he offers to produce, if you will investigate you will find that Colonel Van Horn could only possibly be charged with 135 or 137 votes, and that Mr. Tarsney must, by the irresistible logic of mathematics, be charged with the remainder, and that, adding those together and subtracting them from the general result, Mr. Van Horn, under any and all contingencies, has been elected by a majority of at least 209, and in my humble judgment by a majority, figured from these records, of 480.

Mr. MAGUIRE. In order to reach your conclusion you reject the determination of the majority to throw out the fifty-second precinct?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. You further go beyond the report of the majority of the committee and deal with the Elmwood precinct and show frauds committed there?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That has not been discussed by the majority?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. No, sir.

Mr. MAGUIRE. So that if you should uphold the majority resolution, it would be against not only the proof, but also against the facts set forth by the majority.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want to call attention to the fact that the majority of the committee distinctly stated in their report that there was ample proof of frauds in other places, and it was simply for lack of time that they did not analyze those.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I am not concealing my position. I have stated, and reiterate it, that as to the bald, naked proposition of law I stand with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER]. I also admit and concede the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]. He is right; upon his theory it was absolutely unnecessary to go into the Elmwood precinct or the other precincts.

Mr. MAGUIRE. My suggestion was that if this course of the gentleman was to be taken it would carry with it the necessity that the majority report should be recast.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. They may take their pleasure about that, but I am only giving what I believe to be the bottom facts, and in arriving at my conclusion I am doing no violence to my conscience or to my judgment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Permit me to say that I have no doubt the gentleman from California would like to have the report of the majority recast. He is making his whole fight in this House for that purpose.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I have no fight either against the majority or the minority. I am submitting what I believe to be true.

My friend Mr. Tarsney said that he was no party to this conspiracy; and I reiterate it that as a Missourian I absolve him so far as this record shows or my knowledge extends from any part or parcel in the infamous proceedings that have characterized the elections in Kansas City for the last ten years. We have had a gang up there who have robbed the people of the county and of the city; and it has been the effort at every election to maintain in office men who would not prosecute; men who would see to it that indictments were not found. Under ordinary circumstances the Kansas City district was regarded as Democratic; and they did not suppose, I presume, that what they were going to do would have any result upon the Congressional election. The tidal wave struck the country and Mr. Tarsney fell behind. He fell 2,701 votes behind the vote of 1892 in the rural county of Lafayette and in the farming portion of Jackson County. But they went in to perpetuate the gang, and in that attempt perpetrated the frauds which robbed the contestant of his right to a seat in this House.

In conclusion I wish to read an editorial from a Democratic newspaper that supported Mr. Tarsney in the campaign, because, in language better than my own, it clearly expresses the condition of affairs. I say a Democratic paper—it calls itself an independent paper—but it is a paper that sees nothing wrong in the Administration; that finds it impossible to believe that Mr. Cleveland can do any wrong; and by the doctrine of natural selection, if on no other, it has always stood by Mr. Tarsney, and warmly supported and maintained him in the campaign of 1894; and here is what it says:

It is the usual history of contests for seats in Congress that they drag along for a greater part of the term in question, resulting in a tardy decision, with a salary for each claimant. This is not likely to be the case with the Van Horn contest. The House Committee on Elections has decided, by a strict party vote, in favor of unseating Tarsney, and it is expected that this recommendation will be ratified at an early date by the large Republican majority in the Lower House of Congress.

It is to be regretted that the career of Mr. Tarsney in Congress is to be cut short in this way. He is the best Representative that the Fifth district has had in some years. His usefulness in Congress has grown with his experience, and by the law of merit he was entitled to a reelection. Had the Democrats made a clean and honest campaign in 1894 there would have been no doubt about Mr. Tarsney's success. There is a natural Democratic majority in the district, and under normal conditions it would have been recorded in favor of Tarsney. But the gang which has run the Democratic party in Jackson County for some years past has become so offensive to decent people of all parties that its support is a positive injury to any candidate who is so unfortunate as to be the object of its favor. If Mr. Tarsney shall be unseated he will have to thank the political crooks who have clouded his title by their scoundrelism. He is the victim of the pluggers and heelers who set out to steal the election in Jackson County in 1894, and he is now paying a costly penalty for having been in bad company.

The whole business goes to show that no party is benefited in the end by resorting to crooked methods to achieve its purpose and that nowhere is honesty better policy than in the management of political affairs.

And so I believe that the gang of "pluggers and heelers" have so impressed the people of Kansas City that they would have voted down any man whom the Democrats could have nominated in 1894 who was the recipient of the gang's support, I do not care what might have been his ability or his private character. For my friend I regret it. I sincerely hope that if the political revolution shall roll the other way, and Kansas City and the Fifth Congressional district shall return to its normal condition, my distinguished friend will come here with no cloud on his title as a Representative from that district. I thank the House. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me just one question? I think it is a question that goes to the gist of this whole matter. Do I understand you to say that under the constitution of your State, if this case should be remanded, the Congressional committee could not have access to the ballots?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I say as a matter of first impression I so believe.

Mr. BRUMM. And that you have a judicial decision as to that constitutional provision?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. We have a judicial decision as to the constitutional power——

Mr. BRUMM (continuing). That you can not touch them in a Congressional contest?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I do not so say—only as a matter of first impression. I have not examined the authorities as to the power of Congress under the circumstances.

Mr. BRUMM. Then it really has no bearing upon the question of access to those ballots?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Except, simply, so long as a legal question is unsettled, you and I as individuals must have our own views with reference to it. That is all. I do not quote it as an authority. That is a matter of my views only that the attorneys on the other side may take and look into. I place and predicate my result upon the fact that, taking the testimony as a whole, even if you do go into the boxes and count the ballots, still it can not change the result.

Mr. BRUMM. But you will not say we can not get possession of the ballots or access to them?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I do not say that. I say I doubt whether you can.

Mr. PARKER rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire what arrangement, if any, has been made with regard to the division of time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentlemen on the other side are entitled to the floor, and I suppose they have an understanding as to who shall speak.

Mr. BAILEY. We ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I consider an election matter one in which party plays no part. Every member of this House is interested in the mode in which elections are carried on and decided. Any man may have his seat contested by a member of another party. What is done to-day on one side may be done another day on the other side. Here, as in all courts of justice, the mode of administration is of much more importance than the issue in any particular case. In this matter, too, the very issue seems to be as to the mode of doing justice. As I understand this case—and I take the facts from my friends, whom I believe to be dispassionate, both sides being honest in their belief as to the mode in which the House should investigate this question—as I understand this case, these ballots were all numbered and marked, so that if they have been preserved, and if they have not been tampered with since they were counted, the votes which were cast for "padded" names can be recognized and separated from the true votes and the ballots can thus be purged and the tally corrected.

Mr. Speaker, it appears that there was a certificate issued in this case. I do not care how fraudulent that certificate may have been, it bears the presumption of truth until it is successfully attacked. It is attacked. The contestant here says: "I received more lawful votes than the sitting member." The principle of law, a great principle of law, is that he must prove that fact or prove why the fact can not be proved. The first thing to do is to try to prove the fact, to go to the ballot boxes and try to find out the true result. Why? Is it only because such an investigation may prove that the contestee is entitled to his seat? Certainly not. You are told frankly that the probabilities may be the other way. The real reason why you should seek that evidence is because it is the best evidence, and it is our duty to get the best evidence. It is our duty to ourselves as a precedent for other cases.

Has anybody seen tried—as I have seen tried—the effect of attempting to disfranchise a district by throwing out its vote entirely? The very voters who thought there was fraud are the men who will say: "Our honest votes ought to have been counted, but they were not counted;" and those men will vote the next time against those who threw them out. I do not care whether it is against us or against somebody else. It is public misfortune that the question should ever come up as to whether the votes cast in a particular precinct or district must all be thrown out in order to get at the result of an election. It is a still greater misfortune when subsequent elections are influenced by the prejudices arising from such action instead of being determined fairly on the real issues.

But I am told, Mr. Speaker, that in this case we can not go to the ballot boxes. Why? The constitution of the State provides that it may be done in any judicial proceeding. Is not this judicial? Would not an inquiry by the legislature of the State of Missouri be recognized as judicial? Is not an inquiry by the legislature of the United States as judge of the election of its members to be recognized by Missouri as judicial? And if not, is not the paramount power of the Constitution of the United States and of representatives of its people to go and count those ballots to be so recognized? But we are told that the ballot boxes may have been tampered with in the meantime.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not deal with possibilities; we deal with facts as we find them. We do not deal with possibilities for a great many reasons. In the first place, it is pretty hard to change ballots that are in a ballot box. We had 8,000 fraudulent votes in a county of my own State and every one of them could be identified, because they were stamped with a machine that had a little smaller type than the regular one. In endeavoring to trace the falsification of books and records every man here has probably had some experience. You always find something about the fraudulent work that looks wrong. Therefore when we are inquiring as to these fraudulent votes, I say go and try whether we can not ascertain the truth by an examination of the ballot boxes.

Now, I want to call attention to one fact set forth in the brief for the contestant, which seems to me conclusive on this point. It is there stated that the recorder, Owsley, was a scamp, and he certainly was. He had those ballot boxes from November until February, when an honest man appointed by Governor Stone took possession of them. The return on the tally sheet, made up on the 11th of November, while Owsley had the ballot boxes still in his possession, was altered, it was said, so that the return handed in was wrong, and was proved to be so, not merely by its appearance but also by going inside of the ballot box, where they found the duplicate of that return, made on the day of election, which showed the true figures and showed that the other paper had been changed.

Now, if Owsley had wanted to alter anything in those ballot boxes, of all things he would have been most likely to have altered the duplicate. If he was going to tamper with anything, certainly he would alter that, but the box when opened in February by the honest man proved to contain the true tally sheet. I think that is pretty conclusive evidence that those ballot boxes, although in bad hands for three months after the election, were not entered until the new recorder came in and took possession of them and until they were opened under the order of the court. And that being so, all that is asked—and I agree here with the minority report of one member of this committee—all that is asked here is that we should go and get the best evidence, if we can. If that evidence should prove that the contestant is elected, will it not be something to have proved that, so that no one can ever object? Will it not be something to have counted the votes of the men who were honestly entitled to vote, instead of offending them by throwing out their votes? If it should prove that either man is elected, will it not be right to have maintained the strong precedent of this House, the strong precedent of every court dealing with elections, that you must go first to the ballots to see if you can count them before you adopt the plan of disfranchising any district?

Mr. Speaker, I try to speak of this matter dispassionately. No man can address so large a House as this with proper interest in the question without seeming in earnest; but I want to say to this House that I believe every party in this case to be honest and that the earnestness shown on every side should make every member of this House exercise his judgment as a judge as to what should be the honest, the square, the righteous, the forceful way of carrying conviction with any decision that may be arrived at by this House. We do not want to know what probably was written on those false ballots, if we can know what actually was there. We do not want to draw conclusions from previous elections by a mere comparison of figures, if we can have the ballots looked at to see how the votes that were falsely returned actually read and were counted. If those fraudulent votes were cast for one or the other party and even if we can not find all the voters—if we find a system, we have corroboration of either theory that is here in contest; and it is much more important that the decision of this House should be without doubt in such a matter than that there should be a little delay for the sake of reaching a right decision.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] desire to proceed now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Some gentleman of the minority is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman who has just concluded is a representative of the minority.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I understand that very distinctly; but the majority have consumed thus far much more than their share of the time. The floor is open now for any gentleman desiring to be heard on the other side. The object is to divide the time equally.

Mr. BAILEY. So far as we are concerned, we are ready.

[None of the committee being ready to proceed, several members urged Mr. POWERS to take the floor.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as none of the trains will take the rest of these passengers, I think I will get aboard. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, this case seems to me to be attended with very great peculiarities. In the first place, it seems to be conceded by the majority in this case that Mr. Tarsney, the sitting member, is entirely guiltless of any fraud that was perpetrated in Kansas City at the last election. But they say that he must lose his seat upon the doctrine of that old case reported away back in some of the earlier books—the case known as In re Poor Old Dog Tray. [Laughter.] He was in bad company and therefore he must be turned out. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I have always doubted the soundness of the ruling in that old case. It has always seemed to me that poor Tray was a great moral hero, because the bill of exceptions shows that he came out of that fracas without even the smell of smoke upon his own garments. [Laughter.]

The sitting member, then, is absolved from all responsibility for the fraud which was committed. It was committed in the interest of other parties; and he unconsciously has received the benefit of that fraud and is to respond here by losing his seat. I agree that if the fraudulent ballots that were provided and cast in the interest of other parties operated to increase Mr. Tarsney's vote, so that his majority is tinctured with that fraud, that majority must be reduced to the extent of the fraudulent votes that he may have received. But what is the history of that transaction? As I gather it from the discussion on this floor—and I have had no other source of information—it seems that this fraud was concocted by certain parties in Kansas City that belonged to both the political parties; that there were Republican conspirators and Democratic conspirators; that the purpose, end, and scope of that conspiracy was to compass the election of certain local officers in that city. It resulted for the time being in accomplishing the end that they set out for; but after a little investigation the conspiracy was unearthed, the officials who had undertaken to get benefits from it were turned out of office, and the conspirators were turned into the penitentiary—just where they ought to go.

Now, how does that leave the contestee, the sitting member? Apparently, from the report of this committee, these fraudulent votes enter into and make up the majority with which he comes here under his certificate. But he comes in and says that if you will go one step further in this investigation—if after taking all the evidence as to this fraud that you have taken and which he concedes establishes the fraud—if in addition to that you will go one step further in your investigation and resort to the best evidence that the law recognizes in cases of this kind and examine the ballots themselves, you will find that the fraud which was consummated in that district was not extensive enough to reduce his majority so as to deprive him of his seat. He says that he himself throws out all the fraudulent votes that it is contended he received by force of this conspiracy, yet he says that there still remain in the ballot boxes legal votes enough to warrant this House in adjudging that he is lawfully entitled to his seat. The majority of the committee say no. Why? "Because," they say, "we are convinced that if we should make that examination it would still appear that Mr. Van Horn is elected." But is that a sensible reason to urge before the House of Representatives, charged under oath with the settlement of this question upon the basis of law and justice? What would you say of a judge who would refuse to listen to a witness on the ground that whatever the witness might say, he, the judge, had made up his mind and was satisfied that notwithstanding the testimony of the witness the plaintiff should have a judgment?

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is important that we not only decide the case right as judges ourselves, but that we decide it in a way that all parties in the contest will feel that it is decided right. The same rule applies to this case as would apply to any proceeding in a court of justice. Any judge who would deny to a party before him a full opportunity to be heard, even if he had the suspicion that the hearing of the man would not change the opinion he had already formed, would be written down as a tyrant, and in the classic language of this Hall would be written down "a czar." [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Have you read the testimony in this case, or any part of it?

Mr. POWERS. Yes, sir; I have read a part of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How much?

Mr. POWERS. Enough to satisfy me that you are wild in the way you are proceeding. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman is fortunate in exciting laughter, but unfortunate in not adding any information to the case or answering my inquiry. The question I asked the gentleman was based upon the statement he had just made, and I merely asked him, for information, whether he had read the testimony in the case with care.

Mr. POWERS. I will say in answer to my friend from Indiana, that I have read it far enough, and have heard enough from the gentleman from Indiana himself to have discovered that he has stopped just short of the facts in the case.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Has the gentleman read the report of the majority of the Committee on Elections?

Mr. POWERS. I have read it, and all the reports.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I understood the gentleman to make certain statements of fact which would indicate that he had not read the report of the committee.

Mr. POWERS. You asked me if I had read the evidence, and I replied to you that I had read the evidence, or a part of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman made several statements which clearly showed that he was entirely ignorant of the contents of the report of the committee. He has also shown that he has not the least knowledge of the facts on which the committee based its report, or the testimony before the committee, and I merely addressed him my inquiry to show to the House just where he stood.

Mr. POWERS. Well, my friend inquired if I had read the evidence in the case. I replied that I had read some of it. He now asks me if I have read the report. I reply to him that I have read it, and I say that upon reading that report of the committee and the report of the minority of the committee, and after hearing the debate upon the floor of the House during the pendency of this question, it is perfectly evident the majority of the Committee on Elections stopped just one step short of where they ought to have gone in considering the matter. Even if they are satisfied that by examining these ballots it will still appear that Col. Van Horn is elected, it is nevertheless their duty, in justice to themselves, in justice to Col. Van Horn, who ought to have the seat, if at all, by a title unclouded in all respects, in justice to the House, and in justice to the people of Kansas City—the voters in this election district—to have taken the step further, that step which the minority of the Committee on Elections have recommended and asked them to take.

Now, my friend, Judge BURTON, from Missouri, to whose able and convincing argument I have listened with a great deal of pleasure, confesses to a doubt as to the power of the House to get at these ballots in the State of Missouri. He says, "I am not willing to say that the House has not the power to procure them," but he says that under a proceeding in the State courts of Missouri it has been held that no power exists to examine the ballots, except in certain specified cases. But it seems to me that the House has the power to examine the ballots. The Constitution of the United States, which he and I both agree is the supreme law of the land, declares that this House has the power to judge of the election, return, and qualifications of its members. He and I both agree that where a grant of power is made in the organic law it is a grant of power which carries with it all further and necessary power that is essential to make it effective.

Now, suppose that a case should arise wherein the seat of a member on this floor depended for its decision on the number of votes in a certain ballot box in the State of Missouri, is it to be supposed for an instant that the recorder of voters in Kansas City could defy the power of the House of Representatives, charged with the duty of judging of the election of its own members—that he may defy their power and refuse an opportunity to inspect the ballots? It seems to me not. It seems to me to be the height of nonsense to say that the House of Representatives, charged with that duty and clothed with the function of judging of the election of one of its members, is impotent to resort to the best possible evidence that it can procure as to the right of the member to his seat.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will ask him what way he would exercise that power in the absence of any law?

Mr. POWERS. I would exercise it by passing a resolution of the House of Representatives instructing the Committee on Elections to summon the recorder of voters of the city of Kansas City, Mo., and directing him to bring with him the ballot boxes in his custody, and present them at the bar of the House or before the Committee of Elections; and if he saw fit to deny the jurisdiction of the House or defy its subpœna, I would have him arrested by the proper officials of the House and brought before the bar of the House to answer for contempt.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Then you mean to say that you could, by a resolution of the House, make him take from the place where the laws say they shall be kept the ballot boxes and bring them before the Committee on Elections?

Mr. POWERS. The law which says that they shall be kept in a particular place in the State of Missouri is nothing but a State law. Here is a paramount power, conferred upon the General Government by the organic law, which is bigger and stronger than any State law; and the State law must yield when the two are brought in conflict. I am reminded by a gentleman sitting near me to inquire whether anybody is prepared to say that this custodian of the ballots would deny the right of the House to produce them here on this floor. I ask my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] if there is any doubt as to his consenting to do so?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I have the greatest doubt in the world.

Mr. POWERS. You think he would not?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think he would take a subpœna duces tecum to his attorney, and that his attorney would advise him that he had no right to bring those ballot boxes away from Kansas City.

Mr. POWERS. Then I would have the Sergeant-at-Arms bring him, ballot box, attorney, and all, here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Exactly, and I might agree with you; but the supreme court of the State of Missouri might differ with both of us.

Mr. POWERS. Then I should call on the courts of the United States, and see which of the two would win in the conflict.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. You would put the State supreme court in soak too, would you?

Mr. POWERS. Yes; I do not subscribe to the idea that the State of Missouri or any other State in this Union can pass a law that will nullify a Federal law or that will ignore or override any provision of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I agree with you on that proposition.

Mr. POWERS. I believe, on the other hand, that when the Constitution has empowered the House to judge of the election of its members, it has given it by that very language itself, and upon familiar grounds of construction, the power that is necessary to make the exercise of that granted power effective. So there would be no trouble about that, I apprehend. Now, it is said by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] that it is easy to mutilate those ballots.

Very likely that is true, but I understood yesterday from the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER], and I have not heard it contradicted to-day, that very soon after this election, and about the time that the contest for this seat on the floor was inaugurated, the custody of those ballots was transferred from this man Owsley into honest hands. Now, if we remember that this conspiracy—agreed on all hands to exist—was inaugurated not for the purpose of counting Mr. Tarsney into a seat on this floor, but for the purpose of electing three or four local officers—when we remember that fact, and the fact that the custody of those ballots was changed at about the time that this idea of contesting Mr. Tarsney's seat was started, there is a strong presumption of fact arising in my mind that there was no occasion to mutilate those ballots in the interest of Mr. Tarsney at that time, and that since then there has been no opportunity to do it. So that, looking at the question in any phase that you please, it seems to me that it is our bounden duty to ourselves to see to it that every possible resort shall be taken to determine the exact right of the parties in this case.

This question is broader than a mere question inter partes. It is of little importance to us whether Colonel Van Horn or Mr. Tarsney shall occupy the seat on this floor, but it is important that this House should establish a precedent that it can safely follow in the future; and when a precedent is established to the effect that we will not look to the ballots themselves, but will take somebody's say so about it, we are establishing a precedent, I want to say to my Republican friends, that will return to plague us hereafter. The law in all cases requires a party to resort to the best possible evidence that can be obtained. Now, a ballot is the best possible evidence of the intention of the voter. Everybody concedes that. If those ballots have been tampered with they will bear on their faces the evidence of the fact, and it will only deepen and blacken this conspiracy. It will possibly connect my friend the sitting member with it, because he will then be shown to be a direct beneficiary of it. If they have been tampered with the ballots will show the fact. If they have not been tampered with it is perfectly easy, as everybody can see, to separate the legal from the illegal votes, and from them to determine rightly who is entitled to this seat.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we should discuss this question without the slightest feeling of partisanship on the part of any of us. As my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] has said, it is not a question of party advantage. There can be no advantage to us to seat another Republican. It will be no disadvantage to us to keep our genial friend, Mr. Tarsney, in his seat. He will not hurt us any, and on the other hand the other man can do us little good. But we can keep our hands clean. We can keep our record clean, we can make a precedent here that it will shame our Democratic friends hereafter to go back on, if we do it when we have no occasion to be actuated by partisan motive. To my mind, sir, while I have not the slightest conception as to who is entitled to the seat, while I do not care a fig who wins in the fight, I still believe that we can not, as a majority party on this floor, safely decide that we will ignore any evidence that is apparently within our reach to obtain. [Applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Vermont retain the floor while I make a suggestion in his time? My friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] has taunted the gentleman from Vermont with the fact that he had undertaken to discuss this question without ever having read the record. What I desire to suggest is that, inasmuch as the Committee on Elections was appointed and charged with the duty of digesting the long record in this case and reporting it to the House, if, after the consideration of it by our committee, we have brought it into the House in such condition that gentlemen can not intelligently discuss it without going through that long record, the committee has not performed its duty.

Mr. POWERS. My friend from Texas has made a pretty good point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that when a member undertakes to discuss a question, and clearly shows by his statement that he has not read the evidence at all, then possibly a suggestion that he makes might not be pertinent.

Mr. BAILEY. I disagree with the gentleman from Indiana as to the accuracy of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas and I will disagree on a great many things besides matters involved in this case.

Mr. BAILEY. And I am never so well satisfied that I am right as when the gentleman from Indiana disagrees with me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I should be very glad to see the gentleman right on any subject. It would be a departure from his normal condition, if he were.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the views submitted by the minority of this committee. I believe, sir, that it is the duty of this House to resort to every possible means to ascertain the will of the people in the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, and I believe that that end could, to a very considerable extent, be attained by a resort to these ballot boxes. Having signed the report of the minority of the committee, which had in view the carrying out of that idea, I had hoped to be able to submit an argument upon that proposition, but owing to my physical condition, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to make a speech upon this question, and simply arose to state that I am in favor of the views entertained by the minority in the report submitted in this case.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. We still have consumed more time than gentlemen on the other side. I would be glad for them to proceed. I want to be quite fair in the division of the time. We expect to consume more time to-morrow.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I think we could well call it even, and let you go on now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Very well. I do not want it to be thought that there is any unfairness in the distribution of the time.

Mr. MAGUIRE. We will not complain of any unfairness because of the present situation, and if it is not even we can even it some to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The agreement is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. PRINCE Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House for a short time to the views of the majority of the committee in reference to this report. My friend the gentleman from Vermont said that Mr. Owsley, the corrupt official, the recorder of voters in whose hands these ballots were placed, resigned before this contest was entered upon. Let me be brief, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, while I call your attention to a little of the history in reference to this case. On November 6, 1894, the election was held. Mr. Tarsney was declared elected by a majority of 745 later on, at the time of the meeting of the canvassing board, November 11. On December 10, 1894, Mr. Van Horn served notice of contest upon the contestee. He made in his notice of contest sixty different specifications.

It is well to know the pleadings and to know the history of this case to see whether the majority of the committee has followed along the line of those pleadings. Specification No. 14 states among other things the following:

SPECIFICATION NO. 14.

1. Because, prior to the election, in pursuance of a conspiracy to fraudulently and unlawfully increase your votes at said precinct, certain partisans of yours willfully caused a large number of fictitious names, names of persons who did not reside in said precinct and names of deceased persons, to be placed upon the registration books and lists as legal voters of said precinct, and willfully prevented the purging of such registration lists and books of names illegally and improperly upon them.

2. Because the recorder of voters of said Kansas City, who was a partisan of yours, with full knowledge of the facts last above set forth, willfully appointed persons as judges and clerks of the election in said precinct, and who acted as such, who were not bona fide residents or legal voters thereof, and none of whom were taken from the Republican party, but all were partisans of yours, and not competent to perform the duties of judges and clerks.

3. Because said judges and clerks were not sworn, as required by law.

4. Because said judges and clerks unlawfully and for the purpose of preventing the detection and facilitating the perpetration of fraudulent voting for you, refused to admit to the voting place the duly appointed representatives of the Republican and People's parties as witnesses to the counting of the votes, and also unlawfully refused to admit to such polling places the duly appointed challengers of said political parties, but wrongfully assaulted said witnesses and challengers, and ejected them therefrom, notwithstanding the fact that in a test case decided three days before the election, by the circuit court of said Jackson County, it was adjudicated that said Republican and People's parties were each entitled to have such witnesses to the count and challengers present in all voting places or rooms from the opening of the polls to the completion of the count, and your partisans agreed in writing in advance to abide by such decision.

Section 26 states:

Because said ballots and returns for said precinct were, after being delivered to the office of the said recorder of voters, not safely and securely kept, as required by law, but were at times since then in the possession and control of forgers and criminals who feloniously altered a portion of the returns of said election, and it is now uncertain whether a recount of the ballots now in the ballot box used at said precinct, if any there be, would afford any evidence of the true number or character of ballots delivered by the judges and clerks to said recorder of voters.

This specification was made with reference to precinct No. 5, and like specifications were made with reference to precincts No. 6, No. 7, and No. 52 in that notice of contest.

Now mark you, gentlemen, the declaration made here to-day that the contestee knew nothing of this. The notice was served upon him on December 10. In reply to that notice, on January 2, 1895, he files his answer of contest, denying specifically each and every one of these charges, and he goes to trial. Now, gentlemen, the issue is joined. Fraudulent registration, padded registration lists, willful refusal to purge the registration lists, refusal to appoint Republican election judges, refusal to admit Republican election challengers and witnesses, falsifying the returns, substituting ballots, putting Democratic ballots in the place of Republican ballots; all this is specifically charged in his notice of contest.

Mr. Tarsney knew all this. Did he? On January 2 his answer to the notice is filed in which is specifically denied each and every one of those charges. Now they come to the contest. On January 21, 1894, the first day that evidence was taken upon this question—on the very first day that evidence is taken—it is shown by the canvassers that 402 voters in the first precinct of the Second Ward had no existence in that ward. The name of the man is given, his pretended residence is given, and it is there handed with a copy to the gentlemen on the other side. On January 22, A. B. Olson, chairman of the Republican central committee, takes the stand. What does he say? He says that on the day before the election "I furnished to him (Owsley) the names of the judges and clerks and asked him to appoint them. He refused to do it." "Did he appoint any for you?" "He did not."

Now, let us see what is contained in the record. I now read from page 117:

Q. In the fifth precinct, were any of your recommendations appointed?
A. No, sir.
Q. In the sixth, were any of your recommendations appointed?
A. No, sir; nothing there.
Q. In the seventh precinct?
A. No, sir.
Q. In the twenty-second?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-third?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-fourth?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-fifth?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-sixth?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-seventh?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-eighth?
A. No, sir.
Q. Twenty-ninth?
A. No, sir.
Q. In the fifty-eighth?
A. No, sir.
Q. In the forty-sixth—how about that?
A. That is, you want to know—what is it you want to know?
Q. Whether any of the recommendations you made of judges and clerks were appointed in any of these precincts; that is, whether your recommendations were adopted by the recorder of voters?
A. Well, in that last precinct, the forty-sixth, there was James Anderson and C. W. Clark; that was all.
Q. How about the forty-seventh?
A. No, sir.
Q. The forty-eighth?
A. No, sir; none there.
Q. In the forty-ninth?
A. None.
Q. In the fifty-second?
A. None.

Here is this man, the recorder of voters, the man who appoints the judges, the man who appoints the clerks, the man who refuses to appoint challengers, the man who refuses to let witnesses go in and watch the proceedings in the booths, here is this man, with the ballots according to the Australian system, dealing them out the night before the election, so that his henchmen and his coconspirators can meet in the upstairs or the downstairs, in saloons or in out-of-the-way corners, and mark 200 votes alphabetically before they have a right to put them in the ballot box and put them in the box in the morning before the balloting begins on that day; this is the man who refuses to appoint Republican judges in these wards and precincts which were later on honeycombed with fraud.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I am not defending the acts of the election officers, but was it not the proper and legal thing for the paraphernalia that was to be used the next morning to be delivered to the election officers the night before?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not know, sir. I do know, however, that within the city, if he had desired to do the right thing, he could easily have seen to it that special messengers from his office could have got those ballots to the proper places in the morning. He could have seen to it in that way, but he did not, and the record stands here that he gave them out the night before, and that 200 of them were marked and put in the sixth precinct, and 200 of them were marked and put in the seventh precinct, and 200 of them were marked and put in the fifth precinct of the Second Ward. But that is not all. The contestee comes to this House now, after the testimony is closed, and presents a telegram in which it is stated that 400 fraudulent votes are confessed to have been put in the ballot box in the fifth precinct, 400 in the sixth, and 400 in the seventh, making 1,200 fraudulent votes in the Second Ward. The number, however, he says, may be overstated. But the record, gentlemen—and we are not going outside of it—the record that is before us, the record that we have read and that we will stand by, shows that 1,011 fraudulent votes were cast in the Second Ward of Kansas City at that election.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] says in his report that probably a thousand fraudulent votes were cast in the Second Ward. Well, that statement differs from ours by only 11, so that at least a thousand fraudulent votes were cast in that ward. Altogether there were 1,624 votes cast in the Second Ward. Mr. Tarsney by his telegram shows 1,200 of them to have been fraudulent. Mr. TAYLER admits in his report that about a thousand of them were fraudulent. The record says 1,011. How do we make up that statement? By men going from house to house and finding in the fifth precinct 402 men registered and pretending to vote who voted, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] has said, from places covered with water from 10 to 20 feet in depth, who voted from places where there were no houses and unoccupied houses, voted from railroad tracks, and from corners where nobody lived. Four hundred and two men in that precinct cast fraudulent votes, or rather that number of fraudulent votes were cast. And yet my friend from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] wants us to go there and find those 402 men who did not exist and count their ballots and see if they were not honest voters.

Do gentlemen want us to do a foolish and fruitless thing? Can we do it? Here are 402 votes that no man denies were fraudulent. The contestee does not introduce a word of evidence in contradiction of that statement. He had the list, and he did not bring a single one of those men to show that he was a legal voter, or that any of them were voters, because those men had no existence. Four hundred and two in the fifth precinct, 341 in the sixth, and 268 in the seventh, making a thousand votes in all, voted by men who did not exist. Now, taking a thousand from 1,624, the total number of votes cast, you have 624 as the true vote of the Second Ward. But it is said that the returns show, fraudulent, corrupt, and padded as they are, that Mr. Van Horn received of that number 342. That is to say, out of 1,624 votes cast, or purporting to have been cast, Colonel Van Horn received 342. Mr. TAYLER says that the frauds committed were in his interest, and that the fraud was accentuated and punctuated in favor of Van Horn. I defy him or any living man to show a syllable in the record which sustains any such statement. I ask him or anybody else to show a single word to justify it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] present, but I did not understand his statement exactly as it is quoted. What Mr. TAYLER said was that, so far as the specific evidence went, it appeared that Mr. Van Horn had received a hundred and thirty-odd of these fraudulent votes, and that it did not appear specifically, by the evidence, that anybody else did receive fraudulent votes there.

Mr. PRINCE. I think that is about correct. But I will read from the RECORD. On page 2391 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] is reported as saying:

Mr. TAYLER. All that I know with any degree of absolute certainty is this: That the only person for whom a special, defined, accentuated effort was made to cast illegal votes for Congress was the contestant, Mr. Van Horn. It is absolutely certain that Mr. Tarsney was the beneficiary of most of the illegal votes that were cast in Kansas City. That is incontestible.

A little later the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURTON] rose and asked this question:

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Will the gentleman answer me a question simply for information? Because if he is right in his position I want to know it.
Mr. TAYLER. Certainly I will answer the gentleman.
Mr. BURTON of Missouri. To what testimony does the gentleman now allude?

Mr. Speaker, nowhere did the gentleman from Ohio answer that question. Nowhere can he truthfully answer that question in a way to sustain his statement, because I say to you, the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE], that you will agree with me that nowhere within the limits of this record as it stands is there any evidence that Mr. Van Horn received 101 fraudulent votes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It is in the affidavit of the eight clerks of the election commissioners. That testimony, of course, according to my view, applies only to the application to reopen the case, but that is undoubtedly what the gentleman from Ohio referred to.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well; when the question was asked him specifically he should have answered it, because he left the impression upon the House that he left upon me, so that I went to my room and sat up late into the night reading page after page of this record to ascertain whether I could truthfully make upon this floor the statement I have just made, that there is nothing whatever in this record to justify the statement of the gentleman from Ohio on that point.

Oh, but, they say now, it is with reference to an affidavit—it is with reference to something that came up later which shows that at a snap shot they found that 101 fraudulent votes were cast in that precinct and that those votes were in favor of Mr. Van Horn—an affidavit, ex parte, not subject to cross-examination, not subject to the sifting process of getting at the truth of the matter, but a one-sided affidavit in the interest of the contestee, filed with a view of opening this case, in which he says 101 fraudulent votes were cast in that way.

What next? Let us give the contestee the benefit of that suggestion. Why cavil upon a question of that kind? This House wants the truth; it wants to get at the right of this matter; it does not want to be misled. Committees are appointed for the purpose of investigating the matters referred to them for the purpose of getting at the right, and, under their oaths as members, reporting the truth to their fellow-members on the floor of the House. Now, let us for the sake of argument grant that 101 fraudulent votes were cast for Mr. Van Horn. Then that reduces his vote in the Second Ward from 342 to 241. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] says there were 1,000 fraudulent votes. The record shows there were 1,011; Mr. Tarsney in his telegram said there were 1,200. Let us take the lowest number; let us not take the 1,200; let us not take the 1,011; let us take the lowest number named—1,000. Deducting the 101 votes for Mr. Van Horn which they say are fraudulent, there are left 899. Who got those votes? Mr. Van Horn could not have received them, for his vote was only 241; so you can not squeeze them into his vote. Then who did get them? Why, sir, the contestee got them. Deducting those 899 fraudulent votes and you have as the true vote cast for Mr. Tarsney a balance of 383 in that Second Ward. Deducting the vote of Mr. Van Horn, 241, leaving Mr. Tarsney all that he has claimed or wants to claim (except that we do not take these 1,200 fraudulent votes as a basis), and his majority in that ward is 142. It is said that Mr. Van Horn came to the walls of this Second Ward with a majority of 375. The fifty-second precinct was thrown out. Deducting the majority of Mr. Tarsney in the Second Ward, 142, and Mr. Van Horn is elected by 233.

But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] may say, "Give him the other 160 in the fifty-second precinct." We threw out those; but allowing them to him his majority, not going into the other precincts at all, is 493.

This is purging the votes, if you please; taking them right here in the House as we find them and as the evidence discloses them. We gentlemen of the committee looked at this matter in every conceivable shape; we discussed it in every possible form, turning it this way and that way, seeking to get at the truth. We came to the conclusion that Mr. Van Horn was elected. We came to the conclusion that it would be a useless act on our part to go and seek to purge our minds and consciences, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] desires, of some vagary that might be there. Now, where does my friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] stand on this question? What does he say in the statement which he has filed as a member of the minority?

Probably a thousand votes were thus cast in these precincts.

That is his statement. What else does he say?

The action of the committee in refusing to order the taking of further testimony relegates us to the evidence now in the case. This action of the committee furnishes, for the time being, at least, the rule of law for this case. It declares that all the testimony which can be considered is contained within the pages of the printed record. The legal effect of that testimony is, owing to the prevalence of fraud in certain precincts of Kansas City, that the returns from those precincts must be entirely disregarded.

Now mark what follows:

An unbroken line of precedents demand this.

Demands what? "An unbroken line of precedents" demand that the rule laid down by the committee in this case be followed, and that these corrupt, fraudulent returns in these precincts, as well as the ballots in the boxes, be thrown out. The gentleman from Ohio in his sober moments, when he writes this statement, says that—

An unbroken line of precedents demand this.

Have we any law to sustain our position? Let us see. I read from McCrary on Elections, third edition, section 539:

Fraud in the conduct of an election may be committed by one or more of the officers thereof, or by other persons. If committed by persons not officers it may be either with or without the knowledge or connivance of such officers. There is a difference between a fraud committed by officers or with their knowledge and connivance and a fraud committed by other persons in this: The former is ordinarily—

Not specially, not peculiarly so—

The former is ordinarily fatal to the return, while the latter is not fatal, unless it appear that it has changed or rendered doubtful the result.

The fraud of the election officers is fatal. Where the fraud of an individual voter creeps in, that is not fatal. Where a man who has been convicted of crime and has not been restored to citizenship casts his vote, or when a vote is cast by a man who has not been naturalized or by a man who has not lived long enough within the limits of the State to be a legal voter, such votes getting into the box do not vitiate the balance of the vote in the box, because they are the frauds of individuals. But when fraud is committed by the officers the fraud is fatal.

Is there any question about the fraud of these officers? Who dares defend them on the floor of this House? Mr. Tarsney has denounced them; everybody denounces them. Who dares defend them?

If an officer of the election is detected——

Mr. TERRY. Does not the statement of law, which the gentleman has just read, relate merely to the return of the officer, and not to the ballot? If an election officer should be guilty of fraud and should falsely certify the result of the election, his return would amount to nothing, of course; but that does not affect the validity of the ballot.

Mr. PRINCE. Would the gentleman have any confidence in a ballot box embracing 1,000 or 1,200 fraudulent votes?

Mr. TERRY. But it does not follow that the election is void because the fraud of the officer vitiates the return.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; and the fraudulent ballots they put into the boxes corrupt the whole vote.

Mr. TERRY. But I ask the gentleman if the rule he has read does not relate to the returns made by the officers of election, to wit, that Mr. Tarsney received so many votes and Mr. Van Horn so many votes; in other words, that they have committed a fraud in the certificate?

Mr. PRINCE. I will read the entire section, and the gentleman can judge for himself.

Mr. TERRY. I ask the gentleman to read the entire clause. He will see the point I am making.

Mr. PRINCE. I will read it:

If an officer of the election is detected in a willful and deliberate fraud upon the ballot box the better opinion is that this will destroy the integrity of his official acts, even though the fraud discovered is not of itself sufficient to affect the result. The reason of this rule is that an officer who betrays his trust in one instance is shown to be capable of the infamy of defrauding the electors, and his certificate is, therefore, good for nothing. If, for example, an election officer having charge of a ballot box prior to or during the canvass is caught in the act of abstracting certain ballots and substituting others——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is exactly what was done here.

Mr. PRINCE. Exactly what was done here—

although the number shown to have been abstracted be not sufficient to affect the result, yet no confidence can be placed in the contents of a ballot box which has been in his custody.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TERRY. That brings us to this question or to this principle, does it not, that if you can separate the fraudulent from the valid votes, it is your duty to do so?

Mr. PRINCE. I have answered your first inquiry, and will answer the other inquiry in time as I proceed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to conclude my remarks to-night——

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman had better conclude on this proposition. I do not think the gentleman ought to conclude his argument to-night, but hope he will make clear the point that he is now upon before concluding for the evening.

Mr. PRINCE. It is not my intention to conclude to-night.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have leave to conclude his remarks to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have the floor, if he has not exhausted his time, when the House meets again.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to finish this point now. I read the remander of this section:

We repeat, therefore, the opinion expressed in a former chapter, that a willful and deliberate fraud on the part of such an officer, being clearly proven, should destroy all confidence in his official acts, irrespective of the question whether the fraud discovered is of itself sufficient to change the result. The party taking anything by an election conducted by such an officer must prove his vote by evidence other than the return.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] said that the certificate presented on the part of Mr. Tarsney was prima facie evidence of his election, and carried with it an implication that the returns were correct, and that the burden of proof was upon the party who sought to set it aside. That is true; I admit it. The burden is on Mr. Van Horn, in the first instance. But I read again:

The party taking anything by an election conducted by such an officer must prove his vote by evidence other than the returns.

Just see, then, where the burden shifts. The burden was first on Mr. Van Horn to show that there was a conspiracy, to show that fraudulent votes had been put into the box, to show that there had been a substitution of illegal votes where legal votes had been abstracted from the ballot boxes, and that the fraud resulted in the election of his opponent. Does any man deny it? Has any man the hardihood to stand up on this floor and defend the election board in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and fifty-second precincts of the city? Has it not been shown to have been fraudulent in its acts? Has not Mr. TAYLER admitted it? Has not Mr. Tarsney admitted it; has it not been admitted by testimony piled mountain high, and has it not become a stench in the nostrils of the people? Has it not been proven by the testimony presented by Mr. Van Horn? Admitting this, as all men must admit it, the burden then shifted from Mr. Van Horn to Mr. Tarsney, and it shifted upon him to show by other proofs, not by the ballots or by the returns, that he was elected to the seat that he now holds on the floor of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask the gentleman if that is not exactly what Mr. Tarsney is asking to be allowed to do?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir; exactly.

Mr. LONG. In what way?

Mr. PRINCE. By opening the ballot boxes and counting the very fraudulent ballots, the illegal ballots, on which he claims his right to a seat here.

Now let us see what the minority of the committee set forth in their resolution upon this question:

Resolved, That the case of Robert T. Van Horn against John C. Tarsney be recommitted to the Committee on Elections No. 2, for further consideration.

